AN

INTRODUCTION TO THE FOUR GOSPELS,

AND TO THE

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES,

CONTAINING

INFORMATION NECESSARY TO A PROPER UNDERSTANDING OF THE VARIOUS REFERENCES FOUND IN THE NOTES ON THESE BOOKS.

THE Introduction, so long promised, giving an account of the Manuscripts, Versions, &c. referred to in this Work, is at last before my Readers; and could not, with any propriety, have been published sooner, as the Gospel History could not be considered complete, till the Book of the Acts was finished. As the chronology of the New Testament ends with the two years' imprisonment of Paul at Rome, it may be thought needless to carry it any farther down: but as there is some reason to believe, that he visited Rome a second time, and suffered martyrdom there about A. D. 64 or 65; and as learned men have agreed that the Apocalypse, which completes the canon of the New Testament, was not written till about the year 96; I have thought it necessary to carry down the Chronology through the whole of the first century of the Christian æra; that, if I should not have health or life to proceed any farther in this Work, that important part should be left in a state of tolerable perfection. I have proceeded on the same plan with the four Gospels, and the Book of the Acts, as I have done with the Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua; and have reason to thank God, that he has spared me to go through (in the manner I first proposed) with these two most important parts of that Revelation, which his mercy has granted to man. In the first, (the Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua) the history of the world and its original inhabitants, and the history of the church, are brought down from the creation, to the final settlement of the Israelites in the Promised Land. In the second, (the Four Gospels and Book of Acts) I have deduced the important events of the Christian dispensation from six years before the vulgar æra, down to the year 100. This Chronology is as rich in the necessary æras, as that which is attached to the Book of Deuteronomy: and has, I hope, left nothing unnoticed that belongs to such a work. The account of MSS. Versions, &c. is necessarily short: I could not proceed further in this description, without involving much of that sort of Biblical Criticism, which could not be advantageous to general readers. I have, therefore, only introduced what I deemed necessary for a proper understanding of the references to be found in the Commentary itself.

I have purposely avoided the question concerning the authenticity of the Sacred Writings in general. On a thorough conviction, I assume the fact, that they are a divine record, a revelation from God. This has been so amply proved, that the Christian cause has had a complete triumph. I consider, therefore, the question to be for ever at rest. As to the particular books, scriptures, or scripture facts, to which objections have been made, I have carefully considered them as they occur in their respective places; and I hope, I have fully removed every such objection, and have exhibited the doctrines of the Gospel, and the facts of the evangelical history, in their own certain and steady light: at least, I have carefully laboured to do it; and, like the woman in the Gospel, I have done what I could.

When the great difficulty of my Work is considered, no one will suppose that mistakes were avoidable; general consistency and correctness are all that candour can require. I have met with difficulties in every part of my undertaking, such as a Commentator only can feel and estimate. On the Acts of the Apostles alone, I have spent many months of almost incessant labour. Difficulties occurred in every page; and I could not proceed till I had made the way plain before me, and left it open to those who might come after. This alone is sufficient to account for the delay in this part; and for any casual mistakes into which I may have fallen: mistakes, if such there be, over which the candid Reader will find little difficulty, gently to draw the pen of correction; remembering, that it is much more easy to find faults than to mend them.

§ I. Concerning the MANNER in which divine INSPIRATION was granted to the sacred writers.

The manner in which the Divine Inspiration has been granted to the sacred writers, is a question of more than mere curiosity. As every work of God is done in an orderly, rational manner, so must this also: but we must take heed not to confine him to one particular form, and say, it must be thus and thus, or not at all. God is sovereign of his own ways; and so does his wondrous works, that they may be had in everlasting remembrance. As he has spoken at sundry times to our fathers and predecessors, by the prophets and other inspired men; so has he done this in divers manners; ever adapting the manner to time, place, circumstance, &c. Hence we are not to look for a uniformity in the manner of communicating his inspirations, any more than we are to look for identity of time, place, and persons. He has done great things; and he has done all things WELL. On the inspiration of the Scriptures themselves, I must therefore refer my Readers to those who have written professedly on the subject; but on the mode of communicating that Inspiration, I beg leave to make a few extracts from Dr. Whitby, who has written excellently on this point. After asserting, that the apostles and evangelists indited these scriptures by the assistance of the Holy Ghost; and that as the immediate succeeding ages did, so we at present securely may, rely upon them as a rule of faith, he proceeds to shew,

"I. How this assistance may fitly be explained.

"For explication of this Divine assistance, let it be considered,

"1. That prophecy is sometimes represented as the word of the Lord, and he is said to speak to the prophet; and suitably to this metaphor, some illustration of the assistance of the Holy Spirit may be made from the analogy it bears to human conversation; thus, that as we convey our thoughts one to another by such words as, by the organs of hearing, make such a motion on their brain to whom we speak, as gives them an idea of the words we utter, and by them of the things which by those words are signified; and so it is, the impression made upon their brain, which doth communicate our thoughts to them; so, when it pleased God to reveal his will to any person, it seems only necessary that he talk inwardly with them, that is, that he make such a motion on their brain, as gives them a deep and clear idea of that, which he intended to make known unto them: only the impression must then be made in such a manner and degree, and with such circumstances, as may make it certain to the inspired person, that it derives from God. Now seeing, when we hear the voice of any one, or receive a letter from him, we may be certain from the knowledge we have of his voice, or his hand-writing, that it is he indeed who speaks or writes to us; we may very well conceive, that God can easily give such distinctive marks of what he inwardly speaks to us, or writes upon the tables of our hearts, as shall enable us to discern what he imprints upon them, from any impression that shall otherwise be made upon them.

"2. Sometimes the prophet is in Scripture styled a seer, and his word a vision; and then the parallel, or the analogy, runs thus: As we see, by virtue of a light reflecting the species of things upon the retina of the eye, and thence deriving a peculiar motion to, and making a distinct impression on the brain; so may the prophet, be supposed to see what God reveals unto him, by a like motion of the Holy Spirit made upon his brain concerning it. And as it is as easy to propose a material object to the view, as to describe it by our words; so must it be as easy for God to dart such an impression or inward light upon the brain of the prophet, or spiritual man, as shall give him a more bright and sensible idea of things, than if he did perceive them by the ear, or even view them by the eye. And as we more exactly discern a sensible object by the view, than we know it by a description of it without that view; so the Jews say, that prophecy במראת in vision, is more excellent than that which comes only בחלום by dream, or in a dream, in which we seem to hear one talking with us.

"Now though this impression may be sufficient to convince the prophet and inspired person, that his revelation did indeed derive from God; yet, since this revelation was intended not for himself, but for the use of others, he, with the revelation, must be enabled, by some convincing proof, to evidence to those, who were concerned to embrace it, that he was sent indeed by God with such a message to them. Now, of this, they only could be satisfied by some outward marks or notes, of which they, by their senses, were enabled to judge, viz. The miracles wrought for confirmation of his testimony, or some prophetical prediction of something future, and contingent, exactly verified in the event. And thus, saith the apostle, was their preaching confirmed to the world; God bearing witness to them, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his will, Heb. ii. 4.

"The ways of prophecy, under the Old Testament, seem to be comprehended under these four heads, viz. Either the prophets received their revelation in a dream or trance, or in a vision, or by a voice from heaven, or by the secret suggestions of the Holy Ghost.

"Now some of the apostles had their visions, 1st. either by DAY, as Peter; for an ecstacy fell upon him, and he saw the heavens opened, and he heard a voice saying unto him, arise Peter, kill and eat, Acts x. 11. And this is called ὁραμα a vision, ver. 17. And by this, saith he, God taught me to call no man common, or unclean, ver. 28. Or by NIGHT: Thus a vision of the night was seen by Paul, and a man speaking to him, in the vision of the night, Acts xvi. 9. 2dly. They had also the Spirit speaking to them; for the Spirit said to Peter, Behold three men seek thee: arise, therefore, and go with them, nothing doubting, for I have sent them, Acts x. 20, 21. 3dly. And sometimes they had visions and revelations of the Lord, either by way of rapture to them, 2 Cor. xii. 2. or of conversation with them; as when Christ said to St. Paul, My grace is sufficient for thee, ver. 9. Here then are three kinds of revelation granted to the apostles; but then these things were mostly occasional, and accidental to them, in respect of their apostolical functions.

"Only the case of the apostle Paul must here admit of an exception; for it being necessary for an apostle that is, a witness of Christ's resurrection, to have seen the Lord risen from the dead, according to those words, Am I not an apostle? Have I not seen the Lord? 1 Cor ix. 1. And for an apostle, not of man, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, Gal i. 1. to receive his message immediately from the Lord Jesus; Christ speaks thus to him, I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness, both of those things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee, Acts xxvi. 16. Which words contain a promise of an immediate instruction from Christ in his apostolical function. Whence this apostle declares, confirming that his declaration with an oath, the gospel which was preached by me, was not after man; for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught (by man) but (only) by the revelation of Jesus Christ, Gal. i. 11, 12. He therefore had his message from Christ, as Moses had from God, Christ speaking to him mouth to mouth, &c. See Numb. xii. 7.

"But yet, that which enabled them for the inditing of these writings, as a rule of faith to all succeeding ages, was the internal and powerful assistance of the Holy Spirit.

"To proceed then to the consideration of the distinction made by some, viz. Of inspiration by suggestion, and inspiration of direction only: I say then,

"First, Where there is no antecedent idea or knowledge of the things written for the good of others, to be obtained from reason, or a former revelation, there, an inspiration of suggestion must be vouchsafed to the apostles, to enable them to make them known unto the world. But where there is an antecedent knowledge of the things to be indited, it can only be necessary that God should, either immediately, or by some special occasions, excite them to indite those things, and should so carefully preside over, and direct their minds, whilst writing, as to suggest, or bring into their memories such things as his wisdom thought fit to be written; and should not suffer them to err in the delivery of what was thus indited in his name, or which they had written, as apostles of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Secondly, In all their revelations of mysteries, or things which could not otherwise be made known to them, either by natural reason or antecedent revelation, they must be acknowledged to have had them by an immediate suggestion of the Holy Spirit. Hence, of these things, the apostle says, negatively, that the natural man (who only judges of things by his natural reason) cannot know them, because they are spiritually discerned, 1 Cor. ii. 14. i. e. they being mysteries, can only be discerned by the revelation of the Spirit; and positively, that they spake the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the wisdom hid from former ages, which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor had it entered into the heart of man to conceive, 1 Cor. ii. 7. And that because God had revealed these things to them by his Spirit, ver. 9. they having received the Spirit of God that they might know the things which are freely given to us of God, ver. 10. Thus was the mystery of the calling of the Gentiles into an equality of privileges with the believing Jews, made known unto them; for God by revelation, saith St. Paul, made known to me the mystery of Christ, which in other ages was not made known, as it is now revealed to his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ, by the gospel, Eph. iii. 3, 4, 5, 6. chap. i. 9. vi. 19. Col. i. 26, 27. ii. 2. iv. 3, 4. So they knew the mystery of the recalling of the Jews, Rom. xi. 25, 26. The mystery of the resurrection, i. e. the quality of the bodies to be raised, and the order of it, with all the other special circumstances mentioned, 1 Cor. xv. 1 Thes. iv. and the apostacy of the latter times; for the Spirit speaketh expressly, saith the apostle, that in the latter days men shall depart from the faith, 1 Tim. iv. 1. This inspiration of suggestion must also be allowed to St. John, the author of the Revelations; for he, speaking only what was represented to him in visions, or by angelical discourses, or apparitions, must have that assistance which suggested these ideas to him.

"Thirdly, As for those things, which they did know already, either by natural reason, education, or antecedent revelation, they needed only such an assistance, or direction in them, as would secure them from error in their reasonings, or in their confirmation of their doctrines by passages contained in the Old Testament; and, therefore, a continual suggestion must be here unnecessary. And, indeed, one great work they had upon their hands, both in preaching the gospel, and writing these gospels and epistles, being to convince the unbelieving Jew, or to confirm the wavering Jew, or rectify the errors of the Judaizing Christian, the gift of knowledge of the scriptures of the Old Testament, was very necessary for them, and therefore is deservedly reckoned among the primary gifts of the Holy Ghost; and, being so, we have reason to believe that, either the Holy Ghost suggested to their memory those scriptures which they used in these sacred writings to convince them; or else presided so over them, as not to suffer them to make any inferences from them, which were not agreeable to the true intent and meaning of them; though, at this distance of time, we may not always be able to discern the strength and clearness of the consequence.

"Fourthly, In writing the historical parts of the New Testament, or matters of fact relating to themselves, or others, it is only necessary, that what is there delivered as matter of fact, should be truly performed, as it is said to have been done: but it is not necessary that they should be related in that order of time in which they were performed, unless that also be affirmed of them; for this must be sufficient to assure us of the truth of what they thus delivered.

"Moreover, in writing the discourses contained in these books, it is not necessary that the very words should be suggested, or recorded, in which they were first spoken, but only that the true intent and meaning of them should be related, though in diversity of words. Though the promise made to the apostles by our Lord, That the Holy Spirit should bring to their remembrance, παντα, all things which he had said unto them, John xiv. 20. doth fairly plead for this exactness in what they have delivered of our Saviour's sermons; it being scarcely imaginable that their memory, without Divine assistance, should exactly give us all that was spoken in such long discourses.

"And hence we may account for the objections against this Divine assistance, arising from the viith of Acts; for, though I have shewed, in the note on ver. 15, 16. that there is no real mistake in the words of the Protomartyr; yet were it granted, that there is an error in his account of the sepulchres of the patriarchs, that affects not the authority of St. Luke at all, provided he have exactly related what was then said by St. Stephen, who was not chosen to be a pen-man of the Holy Scriptures.

"Lastly, From what is thus discoursed, it may appear, that I contend only for such an inspiration, or Divine assistance of the sacred writers of the New Testament, as will assure us of the truth of what they wrote, whether by inspiration of suggestion, or direction only; but not for such an inspiration as implies, that even their words were dictated, or their phrases suggested to them by the Holy Ghost: this, in some matters of great moment, might be so; St. Paul declaring, that they spake the things which were given them of God in the words which the Holy Ghost teacheth, 1 Cor. ii. 13. if that relate not to what the Holy Ghost had taught them out of the Old Testament. But that it was not always so, is evident, both from the consideration that they were hagiographers, who are supposed to be left to the use of their own words, and from the variety of the style in which they write, and from the solecisms, which are sometimes visible in their compositions; and more especially from their own words, which manifestly shew that, in some cases, they had had no such suggestion from the Holy Ghost, as doth imply, that He had dictated those words unto them. For instance, when St. Paul declares his will or purpose to do what he was hindered by the providence of God from doing; as, when he says to the Romans, When I go into Spain, I will come to you, chap. xv. 24. I will come by you into Spain, ver. 28. For though he might, after his enlargement, go into the west, where St. Clement (Ep. ad. Cor. § 6.) says, he preached. And even into Spain, as Cyril, (Catechis. 17. p. 204. C.) Epiphanius, (Hær. 27. p. 107. C.) and Theodoret, (in 2 Tim. iv. 17. and Præfat. in Psalm cxvi.) say he did; yet it is certain he did not designedly go to Rome, in order to an intended journey into Spain; and when he says to the Corinthians, I will come to you when I pass through Macedonia, 1 Cor. xvi. 5. and yet confesses in his second epistle, 2 Cor. i. 15, 16, 17. that he did not perform that journey; for it is not to be thought the Holy Ghost should incite him to promise, or even to purpose what He knew he would not perform. This also we learn from all those places in which they do express their ignorance, or doubtfulness of that which they are speaking of; as when St. Paul says, I know not whether I baptized any other, 1 Cor. i. 16. And again, τυχον παραμενω, perhaps, I will abide, yea, and winter with you, 1 Cor. xvi. 6. And when St. Peter saith, By Sylvanus, a faithful brother as I suppose, have I written to you, 1 Pet. v. 12. for these words plainly shew that, in all these things, they had no inspiration, or Divine assistance. This, lastly, may be gathered from all those places in which they only do express their hope, and that conditionally, of doing this or that; as in these words, I hope to see you in my journey, Rom. xv. 24. I will come unto you quickly, if the Lord will, 1 Cor. iv. 19. I hope to stay some time with you, if the Lord permit, 1 Cor. xvi. 7. I hope in the Lord Jesus to send Timothy quickly to you, Phil. ii. 19, 23. And, I trust that I myself also shall come quickly, ver. 24. These things I write, hoping to come to thee quickly, but if I should tarry, that thou mayest know how to behave thyself in the church of God, 1 Tim. iii. 14, 15. I hope, by your prayers, to be given to you, Philem. 22. This will we do, if the Lord permit, Heb. vi. 3. I hope to come to you, St. John, 2 Ep. ver. 12. 3 Ep. ver. 14. For, spes est incertæ rei nomen, the word hope, implies an uncertainty, whereas the Holy Spirit cannot be uncertain of any thing; nor can we think he would inspire men to speak so uncertainly. And (2) There can be no necessity, or even use of a Divine assistance to enable a man to express his hopes, seeing all men do, by natural reflection, know them.

" II. Having thus premised these things, for the right stating and explication of the controversy, I proceed to lay down the arguments, which prove that in these writings the apostles were assisted and preserved from error by the Spirit of God; and therefore were enabled to deliver to us an unerring rule of faith.

" And 1st. I argue for the Divine assistance of the inditers of these sacred records, from what they do assert concerning their own writings; and what they say touching the declarations made, the doctrines delivered, and the directions given in them.

" As for the writers of the gospel, St. Luke declares he writes his gospel to Theophilus, that he might know the certainty of those things in which he had been instructed; and St. John declares, his gospel was written, that they might believe that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God: Now it is plain, that neither Theophilus could be certain of the truth of what he had been taught by any writing which was not absolutely certain in itself; nor could others be induced, by what St. John had written, to believe that Jesus was the Christ, unless they could be certain that he spake the truth throughout his gospel. Now, if we do consider how many things contained in the beginning of St. Luke's gospel, he must have by hear-say; and how many long discourses, both he, St. Matthew, and St. John, deliver as spoken by our Lord and others; of which we can have no assurance, after so many years before the writing of them, on the mere strength of human memory, so as to ground an article of divine faith upon the very words in which they were delivered; we must be forced to conclude that, upon this account, we cannot depend upon the very letter, and minute circumstances of every discourse related by them; unless, according to Christ's promise, they had the assistance of the Holy Ghost, to bring these things to their remembrance: wherefore this promise is made to them in very general and comprehensive terms—viz. the Holy Ghost shall bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you, John xiv. 26. And then there being nothing considerable in St. Mark, which is not also in St. Matthew or St. Luke, or both, the certainty of all that is contained in them, must make us also certain of the truth of what St. Mark delivers in his gospel. Moreover, the word spoken and indited by them, is styled the WORD of GOD: men, saith the apostle, could not believe the gospel unless they heard it preached to them; nor could they hear it preached, unless some were commissioned to preach the gospel; for faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, Rom. x. 14, 15, 16, 17. And, for this cause, says he, thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is, in truth, the word of God, 1 Thess. ii. 13. I am made a minister of Christ, saith he, according to the dispensation of God, which is given to me to fulfil, (i. e. fully to preach) the word of God, Colos. 1. 25. (2) It is called the COMMANDMENT of GOD; for my gospel, says St. Paul, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, is made manifest, and, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known unto you for the obedience of faith, Rom. xiv. 25, 26. which faith is always built on a divine testimony. And, again, If any man be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord, 1 Cor. xiv. 37. (3) It is declared to be the WISDOM of GOD, 1 Cor. i. 24. For, we preach Christ to you that are called, both Jews and Greeks, the power of God, and the wisdom of God; we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even that wisdom which God has revealed to us by his Spirit, 1 Cor. ii. 7, 10. (4) It is the TESTIMONY of God, for I came not to you, saith he, in excellency of speech, declaring to you the testimony, 1 Cor. ii. 1. (5) It is the GOSPEL of GOD; for St. Paul styles himself the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God to them, Rom. xv. 16. We preach, says he, the gospel of God freely, 2 Cor. xi. 7. We were bold to preach to you the gospel of God; we were willing to have imparted to you not the gospel of God only, but also our own lives, 1 Thess. ii. 2, 8, 9. even the glorious gospel of the blessed God committed to my trust, 1 Tim. i. 10. (6) It is the GOSPEL of CHRIST; for I came, says he, to Troas, to preach Christ's gospel, 2 Cor. ii. 12. We sent Timotheus, our fellow labourer in the Gospel of Christ, 1 Thess. iii. 2. (7) It is the MYSTERY of his WILL, Eph. 1. 9. The mystery of God the Father, and of Christ, Col. ii. 2. The mind of Christ made known to the apostles, 1 Cor. ii. 16. And the word of Christ which must dwell richly in believers, Col. iii. 16.

"Now, certainly it cannot rationally be conceived, that the apostles should be ignorant of that assistance by which they were enabled to indite these records; if then they were assured of that assistance of the Holy Spirit, which they challenged, then must the gospel, which they both preached and indited, be received as the word of God and Christ, the mind of Christ, the gospel of God and Christ, the mystery of God the Father, and of Christ, the commandment and the testimony of God, which is the thing I am concerned to make good; and then it highly must concern all persons, to be mindful of the commandments of the apostles of our Lord and Saviour, 2 Pet. iii. 2. If they had no such assurance of the assistance of the Holy Spirit, they did grossly impose upon the world, in thus pretending that they preached the gospel by the assistance of the Holy Spirit sent down from Heaven. If they were not assured that in those writings, they delivered only those doctrines which God required all men to believe, those precepts he required them to do, they must be very confident in daring to make this the preface to some of their epistles, Paul an apostle, according to the will and the commandment of God, 1 Cor. i. 1. 2 Cor. i. 1. Eph. i. 1. Col. i. 1. 2 Tim. i. 1. and saying, with so much assurance, If any be a prophet, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of God, 1 Cor. xiv. 37. and much more, in declaring to all Christians thus—We are of God; he that knoweth God, heareth us: he that is not of God, heareth not us; by this we know the spirit of truth and the spirit of error, 1 John iv. 6. For this seems equal to what their Master himself said in the like words, Why do you not believe me? He that is of God, heareth the words of God; you therefore hear them not, because you are not of God, John viii. 46, 47. Yea, they must be false witnesses of God, by styling human writings the word, the gospel, the command, the testimony, the mind, the mystery of God and Christ; and by requiring others to receive it not as the word of man, but as the word of God, even that word by which they must be judged at the last day, Rom. ii. 16. which again runs as high as those words of Christ, The word that I have spoken, shall judge him that believes it not, at the last day, John xii. 48.

"2dly. They who, when they indited these writings, were assisted by the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of truth indited these records by Divine assistance; for the things God spake to his servants the prophets, are styled the things which I commanded, εν πνευματι μου, by my Spirit, Zach. i. 6. but the apostles were thus assisted; this they in terms, or by just consequence, assert. For St. Peter says of them all, in general, that they preached the gospel by the Holy Ghost sent down from Heaven, 1 Pet. i. 12. And is not this as much as he said of the prophets of the Old Testament, when he declares they spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost? 2 Pet. i. 1. St. Paul asserts, in the same general expression, that those great things belonging to the gospel which neither eye had seen, nor ear had heard, nor heart was able to conceive; God had revealed to them by the Spirit, 1 Cor. ii. 10. that they had received not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that they might know the things which were freely given to Christians of God; and that these things they taught, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, ver. 12, 13. In which place the very design of the apostle is to prove, against the Greek philosophers, how unreasonable it was to reject the gospel, because it came not in the way of demonstration to human reason, but by way of revelation from God; and so required faith, as of necessity it must do, since it contained such things concerning the design of Christ's salutary passion, his resurrection, ascension, and a future judgment at the general resurrection, which no natural man could know by the utmost improvement of his human reason; and such discoveries of the counsel of God, concerning man's justification, which depended upon his good pleasure; which was known only to that Holy Spirit which searcheth all things, even the deep things of God. It is this Spirit says he, that we have received, and by this Spirit hath God revealed these things unto us, and we accordingly do teach them to the world, not in the words which human wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing the revelations made to us by the Spirit, with the revelations made to the prophets in the Old Testament, by the same Spirit; and finding that the revelations made to us do far exceed what was discovered to them; for, what the eye of those prophets had not seen in vision, or their ear heard in dreams; nor can the heart of man conceive, without a revelation, even these things hath God revealed to us by his Spirit. Thus did they speak the word of God in demonstration of the Spirit: whence he declares, that if any man despise their testimony or instructions, he despised not man only, but God also, who had given them his Spirit, 1 Thess. iv. 8. they being not sufficient for this work of themselves, but their sufficiency was of God; who, by this ministration of the Spirit, had made them able ministers of the New Testament, 2 Cor. iii. 5, 6. And thus, says he, that God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, (and who illuminated the prophets by shining upon their imagination and their understanding) hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ, 2 Cor. iv. 5. In his Epistle to the Ephesians, he declares, that the mystery of Christ was made known to him by immediate revelation, and not to him only, but to the rest of the apostles and prophets of the New Testament; for God, says he, hath made known this revelation to us, the apostles and prophets, by the Spirit, Eph. iii. 3, 5. And hence he speaks to the Corinthians in this language, If any man be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of God, 1 Cor. xiv. 37. Here then the argument runs thus:

"They who had a like assistance to that of the prophets under the Old Testament, must write by the direction of the Holy Ghost, for holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost; and the scriptures they indited were of Divine inspiration; and their words are cited in the New Testament, as spoken by the Holy Ghost. But the apostles had a like assistance; for, in the words now cited, they style themselves apostles and prophets; they challenge a like illumination, or shining of God upon their hearts, a like revelation of their gospel by the Holy Spirit; and they pretend to teach it to others, in words taught them by the Holy Ghost. In all which sayings, they must be guilty of a false testimony concerning God, and must impose upon the church of Christ, if no such assistance of the Holy Ghost was imparted to them.

"3dly. These sacred records, which were indited to be a standing rule of faith to Christians throughout all ages of the world, the gospel contained in these Scriptures being made known to all nations for the obedience of faith, Rom. vi. 26. they must in all things propounded in them, to our faith, contain a divine testimony, or a revelation of the will of God. For as human faith depends upon the testimony of man, so divine faith is that, which depends upon the testimony of God. And as obedience to men consists in doing the will of men, so our obedience to God consists in conformity to the will of God. Again, if we must all be judged by this law of liberty, Jam. ii. 12. if Christ at the last day will judge the secrets of men's hearts, according to the gospel of St. Paul, Rom. ii. 16. If he will come in flaming fire, taking vengeance of all that obey not his gospel, then must this gospel, and this law of liberty, be a rule of faith until Christ's second coming; for, upon that account alone, can men be bound under this dreadful penalty, to yield obedience to it, and be judged by it."

The whole of Dr. Whitby's important General Preface, from which the above is extracted, is well worth the attention of the Reader.

§ II. Of VARIOUS READINGS in the Scriptures, and the sources whence they sprung.

Before I proceed to give an account of the principal Manuscripts, Ancient Versions, and Ecclesiastical Writers, frequently referred to in this Work; it may be necessary to say a little on the Various Readings of the Old and New Testaments in general, and the manner in which they originated; as several of my Readers may not have had the opportunity of acquainting themselves with that branch of Biblical Criticism, in which this subject is particularly discussed.

By a Various Reading, I mean a word existing either in the Ancient Versions, or in Ancient MSS. or in both, different from the word in the commonly received and printed Text, whether of the old or the New Testament. The sources whence these are derived, are those ancient Versions and MSS. the chief of which are enumerated and described in the following lists.

But it may be asked, of what authority are these Versions and Manuscripts? And why appeal to them from and sometimes against the commonly received text?

Into the discussion of this question, I cannot minutely enter; it is not the province of a Commentator.

But lest it should be supposed that I wished to elude it, I would simply observe, 1. That before the invention of Printing, the whole of the Sacred Writings, both of the Old and New Testaments, must have existed either in MS. or by Oral Tradition. 2. If they existed originally by Oral Tradition, they must have been, at one time or other, reduced from that into a MS. or written form. 3. As these records were considered of general importance, being a revelation from God to man, concerning his salvation; Manuscripts would be multiplied, as the people increased, who professed to believe that these writings were divinely inspired. 4. Wherever the Jews were dispersed, they carried copies of the Law and the Prophets with them; and the Christians did the same with the Gospels, Epistles, &c. And as these copies were formed by skilful or unskilful hands, so they would be less or more accurate in reference to the originals, from which they were taken. 5. If a MS. which had been carelessly copied, became the source whence others were taken, they could not be expected to express a better text than was found in that from which they were copied. 6. When such a MS. was collated with others more carefully copied, various readings, or differences between such MSS. would necessarily appear. 7. As some of these readings would appear irreconcileable or contradictory, subsequent scribes would alter or amend from conjecture, where they could not have access to the original MSS. and this would give birth to another class of various readings. 8. When, after the invention of Printing, the Sacred Writings were multiplied by means of the press, the copy, thus prepared, must be one of those MSS. or one containing a collation of various MSS. and the printed edition must, of course, give the text of one only MS. or a text formed from the various readings of several. 9. As, at the epoch of the invention of printing, great ignorance prevailed both in literature and religion, it was not likely that the best helps, even had they been at hand, would have been critically used; and therefore, those primitive editions must necessarily have been, in many respects, imperfect; and these imperfections could only be removed in subsequent editions, by a careful collation of the most ancient, most authentic, and most correctly written MSS. 10. As such MSS. exist in different places, widely remote from each other, in various parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa; it must be a work of considerable time to find them out, collate and extract their various readings; communicate them to the public in separate editions, or in critical dissertations; and much time must necessarily elapse before the public would feel the necessity of having one authentic edition of the original texts formed from such separate editions and critical dissertations. 11. All Versions, or translations of the Scriptures into the language of the different nations which had received the word of God as the rule of their faith and practice, must have been made, previously to the invention of printing, from a MS. or MSS. such as the translator had at hand: therefore, such Versions could be no more than a faithful translation of such MS. or MSS. 12. As the MSS. differ among themselves, from the reasons assigned above, so that different MSS. would exhibit different readings in certain cases, though the text in the main was the same in all; so the Versions must differ among themselves, according to the particular MSS. from which they were taken. Hence both the MSS. and the Versions would necessarily contain various readings; and these readings must be important and valuable, in proportion to their agreement with the autograph from which they were all originally derived: and, upon the whole, the most ancient and carefully written MS. might be considered as containing the purest text. 13. All the Versions of all countries differ, less or more, among themselves; which is a proof that they were formed from different MSS. and that those Versions exhibited the readings which were contained in those MSS. 14. And it may be added, that the most ancient Versions were likely to contain the purest text, because made from the most ancient MSS. which, we may fairly presume, were the most accurate copies of the original; as, in that case, the stream could not be rendered turbid, by a long and circuitous flow from the fountain. This the Reader may conceive to have been the origin of various readings, both in the Manuscripts, and ancient Versions, previously to the invention of Printing.

Most copies of the Hebrew Bible have been taken from the same MSS. as the subsequent editions have generally copied the preceding ones, with very little alteration in any thing that could be considered essential to the text. The first editions of the Greek Testament, viz. the Complutensian and the first of Erasmus, were taken from different MSS.; but these sources were in general not the most pure and correct, as the text formed from them sufficiently proves: and hence, most succeeding editors have found it necessary to make a variety of alterations and amendments in the editions which they have published from such MSS. as they had the opportunity of collating. Hence very few of these editions agree perfectly among themselves; consequently, the necessity of forming one general and authentic edition, from a careful, judicious, and conscientious collation of all the ancient MSS. and Versions known to exist. Preparations for such an edition of the HEBREW BIBLE have been made by Kennicott, and De Rossi. For the SEPTUAGINT, by Wechel (i. e. in the edition printed by him) Lambert Bos, Dr. Holmes, and his present Continuators at Oxford. For the GREEK TESTAMENT, by Robert Stephens, Bp. Fell, Dr. Mill, Bengel, Wetstein, Birch, Alter, Matthaï, and Griesbach. We therefore possess, at present, materials, from which nearly immaculate editions of the Sacred Writings may be formed; so that the Hebrew and Greek Originals, and indeed, all Versions faithfully deduced from them, may appear in all their simplicity, energy, and splendour. It is to these materials, as they exist in the above collections, that I am indebted for the various readings of Hebrew and Greek MSS. supported by the ancient Versions, which I have introduced in these Notes.

Notwithstanding all the helps which the various MSS. and ancient Versions afford for the illustration of the sacred text; the Reader must not imagine that in those MSS. and Versions which do contain the whole of the sacred text, there is any essential defect in matters that relate to the faith and practice, and consequently to the salvation, of the Christian:—There is no such MS. there is no such Version. So, has the Divine Providence ordered it, that although a number of mistakes have been committed by careless copyists, as well as by careless printers, not one essential truth of God has been injured or suppresst. In this respect, all is perfect; and the way of the Most High is made so plain, even in the poorest copies, that the wayfaring man though a fool, utterly destitute of deep learning and critical abilities, need not err therein.

All the OMISSIONS of the ancient Manuscripts put together, would not countenance the omission of one essential doctrine of the gospel, relative to faith or morals; and all the ADDITIONS countenanced by the whole mass of MSS. already collated, do not introduce a single point essential either to faith or manners, beyond what may be found in the most imperfect editions, from the Complutensian Editors down to the Elzevirs. And though for the beauty, emphasis and critical perfection of the letter of the New Testament, a new edition of the Greek Testament, formed on such a plan as that of Professor Griesbach, is greatly to be desired; yet from such a one Infidelity can expect no help; false doctrine, no support; and even true Religion no accession to its excellence; though a few beams may be thus added to its lustre.

The multitude of various readings, found in MSS, should no more weaken any man's faith in the Divine word, than the multitude of typographical errors found in printed editions of the Scriptures. Nor indeed can it be otherwise, unless God were to interpose, and miraculously prevent every Scribe from making a false letter, and every Compositor from mistaking a word in the text he was copying. It is enough that God absolutely preserves the whole truth, in such a way as is consistent with his moral government of the world. The preservation of the jots and the tittles in every Transcriber's copy, and in every Printer's form, by a miraculous act of Almighty power, is not to be expected; and is not necessary to the accomplishment of the purposes of Providence and Grace.

On this subject the intelligent Reader will be pleased with the opinion of that very eminent critic Dr. Bentley: Speaking in reference to those who were needlessly alarmed at the multitude of various readings collected by Dr. Mill, and said to amount to 30,000, he says, "Not frighted with the present 30,000 various readings, I, for my own part, and as I believe many others, would not lament if out of the old MSS. yet untouched, 10,000 more were faithfully collected: some of which, without question, would render the text more beautiful, just and exact, though of no consequence to the MAIN of Religion: nay perhaps wholly synonymous in the view of common readers; and quite insensible in any modern Version." Philaleuth. Lipsiens. p. 90.

After such a testimony as this, from one of the greatest scholars and critics of his age, it is hoped that no minor person will hazard a contrary assertion; and that prejudices against the collation of MSS. and collections of various readings, will not be entertained by the honest and well-meaning: as such may see at once, both the propriety and necessity of such measures.

In the MSS. of the Greek Testament, Critics have noticed several which have an affinity to each other. This affinity has been denominated famalia, family, by Bengel; Recensio Revision, by Griesbach; and Edition, by Michaelis. These editions depend on the diversity of time and place; and are divided by Griesbach into three:

1. The Western Edition or that formerly used where the Latin language was spoken; with this agree the old Itala, the Vulgate, and the quotations found in the Latin Fathers.

2. The Alexandrian, or Egyptian Edition;—with this agree the quotations found in the works of Origen; and the Coptic Version.

3. The Byzantine, or Eastern Edition;—that in general use at Constantinople, after this city had become the capital of the Eastern empire. The greater number of the many MSS. written by the monks on Mount Athos are evidently of this edition. To this edition may be referred the quotations found in St. Chrysostom, St. Theophylact, Bishop of Bulgaria, and the Slavonic or Russian Version. The readings of this edition, are those which are generally found in the printed text of the Greek Testament. All these Recensiones, or Editions, belong to ages prior to the eighth century according to Griesbach.

To these Michaelis adds a fourth, called,

4. The Edessene Edition, which comprehends those MSS. from which the Peshito or old Syriac Version was made, though no MS. of this edition now remains. The Philoxenian Syriac Version, was corrected from MSS. found in the library at Alexandria. Any reading supported by the authority of these different editions, possesses the highest degree of probability; and may be, in general, fairly taken for the word written by the inspired Penman. This is a general rule, to which there will be found very few exceptions.

The propriety of this classification is questioned in a very able pamphlet just published, by Dr. Richard Laurence, intituled Remarks on the Systematical Classification of MSS. adopted by Griesbach, in his Edition of the Greek Testament. 8vo. Oxford, 1814. To this pamphlet I must refer the critical reader.

I shall now proceed to give an account of the most ancient Manuscripts and Versions which have been collated for the four Gospels and Acts of the Apostles.

§ III. Account of Manuscripts in Uncial Characters, referred to by the letters ABCD, &c. in this Work.

A. The Codex Alexandrinus, now in the British Museum, sent in 1628, from Cyril Lucaris, Patriarch of Constantinople, by Sir Thomas Roe, as a present to Charles I. It is one of the most reputable MSS. known to exist; and is stated to have been written so early as the fourth century; though others assign it a much later date, and bring so low as the seventh. Besides the New Testament, it contains the Septuagint Version of the Old, formerly edited by Dr. Grabe. A fac simile of the New Testament part has been published by Dr. Woide: London, 1786, fol. And lately a fac simile of the Psalms, by the Rev. H. H. Baber, of the British Museum, fol. 1812, who is now preparing the Pentateuch for the Press.

It is worthy of remark that this MS. follows in the Gospels the Byzantine edition: in the Epistles of St. Paul, the Alexandrine: and in the Acts and Catholic Epistles, the Western edition. With this MS. the Syriac, Coptic and Æthiopic Versions have a remarkable coincidence.

B. The Codex Vaticanus, No. 1209, containing the Greek Version of the Septuagint, which was published at Rome by Cardinal Caraffa, fol. 1587. The second volume of this MS. contains the New Testament. It is a most ancient and valuable MS. and is supposed to be older than the Codex Alexandrinus; and to have been written some time in the fourth century, and before the time of St. Jerome: others refer it to the fifth or sixth century. It is now in the royal library at Paris. There is a remarkable agreement between this MS. and the Codices D. and L. and it is supposed as a whole, to be the most correct MS. we have. Michaelis prefers it greatly to the Codex Alexandrinus.

C. The Codex Ephraim. A MS. in the Royal Library in Paris, numbered formerly 1905, at present 9. The first part of it contains some of the smallest Greek works of St. Ephraim Syrus, under which was originally written the whole of the Greek Bible. In the New Testament part, it is mutilated in a great variety of places which may be seen in Michaelis's Lectures, Vol. II. p. 258. The Greek Version of the Bible which occupied the first part of this MS. has been, as far as was possible, wiped out with a sponge, to make way for Ephraim's works: a frequent custom where parchment was scarce and dear. It is supposed by Wetstein to have been written early in the sixth century. It is an invaluable MS. but is, through its great age and bad preservation, almost illegible. See P.

D. The Codex Bezæ, or Codex Cantabrigiensis. It contains the Greek text of the four Gospels and Acts of the Apostles, with the old Itala, or Antehieronymian Latin Version. Wetstein thinks that it is the very copy from which Thomas Charkel, or Heraclius, under the auspices of Philoxenius, formed the later Syriac Version, commonly called the Philoxenian; but this is a groundless supposition. This MS. is supposed by Wetstein to be of the fifth century: others think it two centuries earlier. A splendid and correct fac simile of the MS. has been printed at Cambridge, by Dr. Kipling, 1793, 2 vols. royal fol.

The readings in this MS. frequently agree with the Latin Versions before the time of St. Jerome, and with the Vulgate. Some have argued that it has been altered from those Latin Versions: but Semler, Michaelis, Griesbach, and Dr. Herbert Marsh, have amply refuted all those arguments. It is one of the oldest MSS. extant; many of the readings by which it is distinguished are found in the Syriac, Coptic, Sahidic. and margin of the Philoxenian Syriac Version. In the main, this is the most important MS. we have of the Gospels and Acts; and though it has been written at different times, by different hands, yet the original parts may be safely supposed to exhibit the genuine readings of the evangelic and apostolic text, in a larger proportion than in any other MS. extant. I have myself examined this MS. in the public library, at Cambridge; and am convinced not only of its very high antiquity, but of its great excellency. Every where in my Notes, I have endeavoured to pay particular attention to the Readings of this MS. Whiston, in his primitive New Testament, Stamford and London, 8vo. 1745, has translated the four Gospels and Acts literally from the Codex Bezæ.

(D.) In St. Paul's Epistles, signifies the famous Codex Claromontanus; it was written in the sixth or seventh century, and has the Itala Version, as well as the Greek text.

E. Codex Basiliensis, Num. B. VI. A MS. of the ninth century: It contains the four Gospels.

(E) In the Acts of the Apostles, signifies the famous Laud MS. No. 3, preserved in the Bodleian Library. It has both the Greek and Latin text; the Latin evidently altered to make it correspond to the Greek. This MS. was printed by Hearne, 8vo. Oxon. 1715. Wetstein supposed it to have been written in Sardinia, about the seventh century. The MS. is written in two columns; the Latin text first: each line is composed of one word, very rarely of two; and the Latin and Greek words are always opposite to each other, which shews that it was written for the use of a person little skilled in either language.

F. Codex Boreeli. This MS. which contains the four Gospels, formerly belonged to Sir John Boreel, Dutch Ambassador at the court of King James I. Where it now is cannot be ascertained.

(F) Is one of the Coislinian MSS. No. 1. It contains the Septuagint Version of the Octateuch; and verses 24 and 25, of Acts, chap. ix. It was written in the eighth century.

F. In the Epistles of St. Paul, denotes the Codex Augiensis, written about the ninth century, and now in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge.

G. Codex Wolfius A. This is now one of the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum; and is marked 5684. It contains the four Evangelists, and was probably written before the tenth century. It is a correct and valuable MSS.

G. Codex Boernerianus in the Electoral library at Dresden.—It has the Itala Version interlined with the Greek text.

(G) In the Acts, &c. signifies a MS. in the library of the Augustin Friars at Rome. It has been only partially collated by Blanchini and Birch.

H. Codex Wolfius B. This MS. is very similar to the preceding; and was probably written in the same century. It also contains the four Evangelists.

H. Codex Coslinianus, No. CCII. consists only of fifteen leaves, containing some fragments of St. Paul's Epistles. It was written in the fifth or sixth century.

I. Codex Cottonianus. This MS. contains only four leaves, in which a few fragments of Matthew and John are found. It is written on Egyptian paper of a purple colour; and is among the Cotton MSS. in the British Museum, and is marked Titus C. 15.

K. Codex Cyprius, so called because brought from the island of Cyprus. It is at present in the Royal library at Paris. It contains the four Evangelists; agrees in its various readings with A. B. C. D. Montfaucon supposed it to be of the eighth century; Father Simon, of the ninth.

L. Codex Regius, 62. This very valuable MS. was one of those used by R. Stephens, for his edition of the Greek Testament, fol. 1550, in which it is marked η. It is in the Royal library at Paris, No. 62, and was probably written in the eighth or ninth century. The various readings of this MS. are of great importance; and it is judged by Michaelis to be one of the most valuable MSS. we possess.

M. Codex Regius. This MS. contains the four Gospels; belongs to the Royal library, Paris, numbered 48, and was written in the tenth century.

N. Codex Vindobonensis, 2. One of the Vienna MSS. It contains only fragments of the book of Genesis, and of Luke, chap. xxiv. v. 13—21, 39—49. and was written in the seventh century.

O. A small fragment of some other MS. and contains the parable of the Pharisee and Publican.

P. Codex Guelpherbytanus, A. One of the Duke of Wolfenbuttle's MSS. It is what is called a Codex Rescriptus, i. e. a book the original writing of which has been spunged out, to make way for some other works; which in this case happen to be the works of Isidorus Hispalensis. It contains fragments of the four Evangelists, and was written about the sixth century. See under C.

Q. Codex Guelpherbytanus, B. Another of the Wolfenbuttle MSS. containing fragments of Luke and John, written in the sixth century. It is a Codex Rescriptus, like the former; the original writing being spunged out, to make way for the works of Isidorus Hispalensis, as in Codex P.

R. Tubinginse Fragmentum.—This MS. which is preserved at Tubing, contains only a fragment of the first chapter of John.

S. Codex Vaticanus, No. 354—One of the Vatican MSS. written in the year 949.

T. Fragmentum Borgianum.—It consists of about twelve leaves; begins with John vi. 28. and ends with vii. 23. It is divided into two columns; the first contains the Greek text, the second the Coptic or Sahidic; and is supposed, by Georgi, who has published a large quarto volume on it, to have been written in the fourth century. This fragment is a valuable specimen of the Alexandrian edition.

U. Codex Equitis Nanii Venetiis.—This is one of the MSS. collated by Birch, for his edition of the Greek Testament. It was written in the tenth or eleventh century.

X. A MS. in the public library of Ingolstad; this is in uncial characters, and has a commentary in small letters. It appears to have been written in the eleventh century.

These are all the Greek MSS. in square or uncial characters, which are referred to in Wetstein and Griesbach; and which are quoted in these Notes on the four Gospels and Acts. Where any of these letters appear with an asterisk, as C*, it signifies that the reading there quoted, exists not in the text, but in the margin of that manuscript. The MSS. marked A. B. C. D. E. F. G. K. and L. are probably, upon the whole, the best; and their readings, the most authentic of all the uncial MSS.

There are many other MSS. written in small letters, and quoted by Griesbach and others, by Arabic numerals. viz. 1, 2, 3, &c. which, though not equally ancient with several of those in uncial characters, are of great value and importance, and exhibit readings of equal worth with those in the preceding MSS. These, however, I have rarely mentioned by name in my notes, and only refer to them in this way: e. g. Acts xvii. 26.

"ABDE. and more than forty others." Ib. xx. 24. "ABD. some others," &c. &c. I thought it was unnecessary to be more particular; as those who could profit most by such information, would naturally have Griesbach at hand; and, by referring to him, would be able to obtain much more satisfaction on the point than the plan on which my Notes were constructed, could possibly afford. It is necessary just to state that both Wetstein and Griesbach, by quoting different MSS. by the same letter, in the four parts into which they have divided the New Testament: viz. the four Gospels, the Acts and Catholic Epistles, the Epistles of St. Paul, and the Apocalypse, have produced strange and needless confusion: in each of those parts we find a distinct notation of MSS. On this subject Michaelis has justly observed, that "Wetstein has made it very difficult to remember his notation of MSS. by not retaining the same marks throughout the whole work; for his letters and figures have a different meaning in the Epistles of St. Paul from that which they have in the four Evangelists; a still different meaning in the Catholic Epistles, and Acts of the Apostles; and, lastly, they are taken in a fourth sense, in the book of the Revelation."—Lectures, Vol. II. p. 185—6. This perplexity may appear evident, even in the uncial MSS. and much more in the others, e. g. D. which means the Codex Bezæ in the Gospels, and Acts, means the Clermont MS. in the Epistles of St. Paul; and B. the Codex Vaticanus 1209 in the Gospels, Acts, and Epistles, is the Codex Monachorum, Sti. Basilii, No. 105, in the Apocalypse; and so of others.

Farther information on this subject belongs, more properly, to the editor of a Greek Testament, than to the province of a commentator. Those who wish to examine this branch of Biblical criticism at large, must consult Mill, Wetstein, Griesbach, Michaelis, and Dr. Herbert Marsh.

A short Account of the different VERSIONS of the New Testament, cited in this work—viz. The Æthiopic, Arabic, Armenian, Bohemian, Coptic, Gothic, Itala, Persian, Sahidic, Saxon or Anglo-Saxon, Slavonic or Russian, Syriac, and Vulgate; not in the order of the different ages in which these Versions were made, but in the order of the alphabet.

THE ÆTHIOPIC.

It is generally supposed, that the Christian religion was planted in Æthiopia or Abyssinia, so early as the times of the apostles; but when the Scriptures were translated into the Æthiopic language, is not certainly known. We have the whole of the New Testament in that language; and it is supposed that this version was made by Frumentius, a Christian Bishop in the fourth century. It is, in very many respects, an important version; and seems to have been made immediately from the Greek text. Its various readings agree with the (A.) the Codex Alexandrinus, and with Origen.

THE ARABIC.

There are different Arabic versions of the New Testament, and they were, probably, as Dr. Marsh conjectures, derived from these four sources—1. Some from the Syriac; 2. Some from the Coptic; 3. some from the Greek; 4. and some from the Vulgate. When this version was made cannot be determined; but it is generally allowed that there was no Arabic version of the New Testament before the time of Mohammed, i. e. A. D. 620; and that the oldest versions we have of that language, were made between the seventh and tenth centuries. But, if this were really so, how can we well account for the knowledge which Mohammed had of the Gospels, which he terms انجيل Anjeel, from Evangelium, in different parts of the Koran; see particularly Surat iii. v. 3. which Anjeel, he there mentions, as having come down from God, as well as the تورٰاة toorat תורה the law and his own Koran; and in this same Surat, and many others, he makes several quotations from the Gospels; and, though he models them, to cause them to suit his own purpose, yet his quotations afford a presumptive evidence that the Gospels did exist in Arabic before his time; unless we could suppose he read them in Greek, Syriac, or Latin; and none, even of his own partial followers, have pretended that he understood those languages. As to the story of his having an apostate Christian Monk, called Sergius, with him, who might have supplied him with such quotations, it remains yet to be proved. To me, it seems probable, that a version of the Gospels at least, did exist before the time of Mohammed; as Christianity did undoubtedly make its way into Arabia, even in the days of the apostles, as may be gathered from the Acts of the Apostles, chap. ii. and from various other testimonies. Whosoever reads the Koran carefully over, in reference to this point, will probably find reason to draw the same conclusion.

There are three principal editions of the Arabic, to which reference is made by Griesbach, and in these notes: 1. That printed at Rome, fol. 1591, which was probably made from the Greek. 2. The version printed in the Paris and London Polyglotts; but in the latter with additions and corrections. This also was made from the Greek, and not from the Syriac or Coptic, as some have supposed. 3. The edition printed by Erpen, Lugd. Bat. 1616, 4to. taken from two MSS. one of the Gospels, written about A. D. 1271 and another, of the Acts, Epistles, and Revelation, dated A. D. 1342. See Dr. Marsh's notes to Michaelis, Vol. III. p. 603. This version is supposed to have been formed immediately from the Greek; but interpolated in many places from the Syriac. This of Erpen is the most valuable and genuine edition of the Arabic Testament. These three editions are quoted in Griesbach, and in the following Notes. The first, Ar. Rom. the Arabic Gospels, printed at Rome in 1591. 2. Ar. Pol. the Arabic, printed in the London Polyglott, 1657. 3. Erp. the Arabic New Testament, printed by Erpen in 1616. When all these editions agree in the same reading, Griesbach signifies it by Arr. and I mean the same in these Notes, when I say all the Arabic.

THE ARMENIAN.

This version was probably made in the fifth century, or about the year 410; according to the Armenians themselves. The author is universally allowed to have been Miesrob, the same who invented the Armenian alphabet. It appears to have been first made from the Syriac; but having been twice translated from that language, it was last of all translated from the Greek. This is allowed by learned men to be a very valuable version; and contains various readings of great importance: but it has not as yet, been accurately collated.

THE BOHEMIAN.

The sacred writings were translated into the Bohemian language by eight Bohemian doctors, who had been sent to Wittemberg and Basil to study the original languages for this purpose. This translation was printed in Moravia, in the year 1539. I know nothing of the merit of this version: Griesbach has given a few readings from it, which he received from professor Dobrowsky, of Moscow.

THE COPTIC.

The Coptic was the common language of Egypt before the invasion of the Saracens; it is a mixture of the Old Ægyptian and the Greek. Into this language the Scriptures appear to have been translated at a very early period; probably between the third and fifth centuries. The readings of this version are allowed to have a striking affinity to those of the Latin version; and sometimes to those of the Codex Bezæ; and according to Wetstein, with Origen, Eusebius, Cyril, and the Alexandrian MS. See SAHIDIC.

THE GOTHIC.

The people to whom the version called Gothic, belonged, had their ancient habitation to the east of the Borysthenes; but, wandering westward, they settled in Wallachia. Ulphilas, a Cappadocian by birth, who lived under the emperors Valens and Valentinian, made this translation immediately from the Greek, (though occasionally, in reference to the Latin versions,) about the middle of the fourth century. Of this version only a mutilated copy of the four Gospels, and a few chapters of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, remain. This MS. which was all written in silver letters, and hence called Codex Argenteus, was first discovered in the abbey of Werden in Westphalia; it got afterwards to Sweden, then to the Netherlands; and is now in the university of Upsal. A fine edition of the Gothic Gospels was published by Marshall, together with the Anglo-Saxon, at Dort, 1665, 4to. with a glossary, by Junius: but a better edition was published by Dr. E. Lye, Oxon. 1750. 4to. The fragments of the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth chapters to the Romans, edited by Knittel, from the Wolfenbuttle MS. may be found at the end of Vol. II. of Dr. Lye's Saxon, Gothic, and Latin dictionary.

THE ITALA, OR ANTEHIERONYMIAN.

Previously to the time of St. Jerome, a great variety of Latin versions of parts or the whole of both the Old and New Testaments, had been made by different persons for their own use; and these appear to have been as various as the skill and talents of the translators. As none of these had been received into public use in the church, so it is not likely that they had any particular name: but modern times have given the title of Italac, Itala or Antehieronymian, to all such Latin versions. Though the word Itala be of the most dubious authority, yet all allow that, by it, a very ancient Latin translation is intended; but how such a translation became thus denominated, no person can tell; if, indeed, it have had any such title in ancient times. This title is supposed to be mentioned by St. Augustin, where, speaking of the great variety of Latin versions in early use, he says: In ipsis autem interpretationibus Itala, cæteris præferatur; nam est verborum tenacior cum perspicuitate sententiæ, "Among the versions, the Itala is to be preferred, as being more literal, and more perspicuous." De Doctr. Christ. lib. ii. cap. 11. Dr. Lardner supposes that Itala here, is a mistake for et illa, and reads the passage thus; and among the translations, let that be preferred which is most literal and most perspicuous." Dr. Bentley, and some others, were nearly of the same mind. Potter thinks that Itala is an early mistake for usitata, which mistake may be accounted for thus: in ancient times, when MSS. were written in uncial characters, without distinction of words or sentences, a copyist having written—

INIPSISAUTEMINTERPRETATIONIBUSUSITATACAETERISPRAEFERATURNAMESTVERBORUMTENACIORCUMPERSPICUITATESENTENTIAE; took the first syllable of usitata, on returning to his MS. for the last syllable of the word interpretationibus, which he had just written, and of course read the word itata, which he concluded to be an error for itala; and hence came the present spurious reading." See Dr. Marsh's notes to Michaelis. This is the most likely of all the conjectural emendations of St. Augustin's text, yet made. This ancient Latin version, by whatever name it is called, is supposed to be the same which is annexed to the Greek text in the Codex Boernerianus, Claromontanus, and Cantabrigiensis. But besides these, there are more than twenty others which Griesbach has noted in his Greek Testament, which contain the same version, or rather a version or versions made before the time of St. Jerome. See the catalogue of them in Griesbach's Testament, Vol. I. Prolegom. pag. xcvii. All these I have quoted under the general name Itala, or Antehieronymian, without specifying the different MSS. in which the reading is contained. e. g. Six copies of the ITALA—several copies of the Itala—all the Itala, &c. The principal fragments of this version which still remain, have been carefully collected by Sabatier, in his Bibliorum Sacrorum Latinæ Versiones Antiquæ, fol. Rom. 1743, three vols.; and by Blanchini, in his Evangeliorum Quadruplex Latinæ Versionis Antiquæ, seu Italicæ, fol. Rom. 1749, four vols. The various readings of these versions, both in those MSS. edited by these learned men, and in the writings of the Latin Fathers, are of great utility in ascertaining the readings of the ancient Greek text, from which they were made; for many excellent readings abound in these versions, which agree not only with the most ancient Greek MSS. but also with the best versions, particularly the Syriac and the Coptic. It was out of these versions that St. Jerome formed the Vulgate. See VULGATE.

THE PERSIAN.

We have no very ancient version of the New Testament in Persian. Hitherto we have had only the four Gospels in this language, which are printed with the Latin translation of Dr. Sam. Clarke, in the fifth vol. of the London Polyglott. This translation was finished about the year 1341, by Simon ibn Yuseph ibn Abraheem al Tabreezy; who is said to have taken it immediately from the Syriac. This Version was made, most evidently, by a Christian of the Roman Catholic persuasion, who acted under the most predominating influence of his own peculiar creed; for it is not only interpolated with readings from the Vulgate, but with readings from rituals and legends. The Persian Gospels do not appear to have been carefully collated by Mill, Wetstein, or Griesbach: scarcely any of the many peculiarities of this Version having been noticed. To satisfy myself of its nature and origin, I have read the whole of it over twice; and shall extract from the remarks I then made, such proofs as appeared to me to warrant its Catholic origin; and how little the translator regarded the text on which he formed his Version, e. g.

Mitigation of punishment promised to Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment.

"Now I say unto you, O cities, that in the day of judgment, to Tyre and Sidon, اسایش باشد there shall be REPOSE, which shall not be to you." Matt. xi. 22.

The supremacy of Peter most formally asserted, and the text corrupted to support it: And I say unto thee, سخرهٔ دین من یعنی سنك و بنیاد کلیسیا من بر تو عمارت کردهٔ شود Thou art the ROCK OF MY RELIGION (that is, a stone), and the FOUNDATION OF MY CHURCH shall be a building upon thee. Matt. xvi. 18.

To weaken the reproof given by our Lord to Peter, which the translator probably thought too degrading, the offensive epithet Satan is omitted, Matt. xvi. 23.

Jesus turned back, and said unto Peter, get behind me, بي ایمان O thou unbeliever!

Popish saying about hell, Mark ix. 46. for, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched, Al Tabreezy translates که رستکاري از انجا ممکن نیست Because, from thence liberation is impossible.

And in ver. 48. he translates the same passage که هرگز خلاص نیابي From whence thou shalt never find redemption.

In Luke ii. 7. the blessed Virgin is called مریم ڈاك Mareem pak, SAINT Mary.

The title to the paragraph, Luke v. 18, &c. is "The raising of that paralytic person, who had lain thirty-two years که نامش الیتودیموس whose name was Alekudemus.

Luke vii. 12. Prayer for the dead. "And when he approached the gate, he saw a dead man, whom they were carrying out, بنماز وزاري with PRAYER and lamentation.

Doctrine of the merit of good works and repentance, for the purchase of the remission of sins. And I say unto thee, that as a RECOMPENCE (عوض awaz) for what she has done, her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for that very cause, that she was worthy of much, or has much merit. پسیار سزاوار شد But little shall be forgiven to him, who has little merit. Luke vii. 47. The same doctrine is taught chap. xvi. 9.

The doctrine of supererogation is glanced at, Luke xix. 9. Jesus said to the multitude, and to his disciples, To-day indeed there is a great salvation to this house, because this man is of the sons of Abraham. That is, he is saved through Abraham's merit, and his own alms-giving: so I understand the intention of the original.

There is a remarkable addition, Matt. xxvi. 75. which is found in no other Version, nor in any MS. and is not noticed by Griesbach. And he (Peter) went out from thence, and wept bitterly, و گناه او عفو and his sin was forgiven him.

Matt. xxvii. 52. is thus rendered. And the graves were opened, and the rocks rent, که شهید کشته بودند and the bodies of many saints, WHO HAD SUFFERED MARTYRDOM, rose from their graves. All these examples, (and their number might be easily increased) shew the family whence this Version sprang; and how little regard, in all these cases, was paid to the Syriac, from which it is said to have been taken; or indeed to any other Version: for these, and such like renderings, are evidently made to serve a party, and support a creed. From all this, it appears that much dependance cannot be safely placed on this Version; and that its various readings, except where they agree with more authentic Versions, are worthy of little credit.

There is a second Persian Version of the four Gospels, which Mr. Abraham Wheeloc, professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, translated into Latin, and prepared for the press, and actually began to print in 1652; but dying shortly after, it was patronized by Thomas Adams, Lord Mayor of London, and finished under the care of Mr. Pierson, at the press of J. Flesher, 1657. fol. It seems that Mr. Wheeloc had designed to affix critical notes to each chapter; and this we find done to the end of the seventeenth chapter of Matthew, about which time it is likely he died; for Mr. Pierson, the continuator of his work, says, INITIO, operis, præmaturâ morte ereptus: death snatched him away at the commencement of his work. And as the regular comment of Mr. Wheeloc appears to have been prepared no farther than to the seventeenth chapter of Matthew, the notes which the continuator found after the close of that chapter, and which most probably Wheeloc designed to be the foundation of more diffuse observations, are all printed at the conclusion of the work.

It appears that neither Wheeloc nor Walton knew of more than three MSS. of the Persian Gospels; one of Oxford, one of Cambridge, and one belonging to Dr. Pocock. It has been supposed, I think without sufficient evidence, that Wheeloc compiled his Persian text from these three MSS. After carefully collating both this and Walton's edition, in many places, I think I may safely state, that Wheeloc printed his edition from the Oxford MS. as Walton printed his from that of Pocock. In a few cases, he introduces in brackets, or with an asterisk, a various reading from the Cambridge MS. rarely from that of Pocock: but in his comment or critical notes, he refers often to both these MSS. giving the most remarkable readings where they differ from the Oxford MS. which he has most evidently followed as his text. That the MS. of Pocock, from which Mr. Wheeloc gives the principal various readings, was the same which Walton printed in the fifth volume of the Polyglott, is demonstrable from a collation of those various readings extracted by Wheeloc from the Pocock MS. which are found to be precisely the same with those in the text and rubrics of that printed in the Polyglott. And that Wheeloc took the Oxford MS. for his text, is evident from this, that his various readings are extracted only from the Cambridge and Pocock MSS. collated with that of Oxford. The text therefore of Wheeloc is not a corrupted text, or one made up from different MSS. It is much more simple and much purer than that in the Polyglott, and appears to have been made by one not warped by any religious system, as Al Tabreezy certainly was; and by one who better understood the genius and composition of the Persian language. As far as I have had the opportunity of examining this Version, it appears to me to be taken verbatim from the Latin Vulgate; and not from the Greek as some, or the Syriac as others, have supposed.

Jeronymo Xavier, missionary to the Indians, was commanded by the Emperor Akbar, to translate the four Gospels into Persian, that he might examine their importance as a system of religion. Xavier undertook this work, and by the assistance of a person named Moulanee Aboos Sitar, a native of Lahoor, made a history of the life of our Lord, compiled out of the Gospels, and from Popish legends, and presented it to the emperor in 1602, who is said to have smiled at it; and well he might, as the genuine history was disgraced with fables. The MS. formed for the emperor's use, is now before me; but such a Version can be of no importance in Biblical criticism. The work of Xavier was published with a Translation and Notes by L. De Dieu.

THE SAHIDIC.

UPPER Egypt, or the part that lies between Tahira and Assuan, had a particular dialect, which in many respects differed from that spoken in Lower Egypt. As this Upper Egypt was called in Arabic صعيد sâeed, the dialect has been called Sahidic. See Michaelis. At a very early period, a translation of the New Testament was made into this dialect; but the remains of this venerable Version have long been confined to perishing MSS. till Münter published some fragments of the Epistles of Paul to Timothy, 4to. Hafniæ, 1789.

And Georgius, in the same year, printed at Rome, a fragment of the Gospel of John in the same dialect; which the Reader will find described under Codex T. in the account of the MSS. in uncial characters.

Dr. Woide, late of the British Museum, had prepared an edition of several fragments, containing about one-third of the New Testament, which he did not live to finish: but the task has been ably executed by Dr. Ford, of Oxford, who has printed it at the Clarendon press, 1799, fol. as an Appendix to the Codex Alexandrinus, by Dr. Woide. This work, which is done with elegance and correctness, has three copper-plates, on which there are nineteen fac similes of the MSS. from which Dr. Ford has printed these fragments. In carefully considering this venerable Version, there appear to be arguments to prove its very high antiquity, which Dr. Woide refers even to the beginning of the second century! The parts already published, exhibit some invaluable readings; and these prove that it has a striking affinity to the Codex Bezæ. It is doubtless one of the oldest Versions in existence; and it is to be hoped that every fragment of it will be collected and published, till, if possible, we get the whole of the New Testament in this most ancient and invaluable Version. The Coptic and Sahidic are independent Versions, both made from the Greek, and probably at different times; and both contain different readings. See Coptic.

THE SAXON, OR ANGLO-SAXON.

It is said that Alfred the Great, translated the greater part of the New Testament into the Anglo-Saxon. The Four Gospels in this language were published under the direction of Abp. Parker, with a dedication to Queen Elizabeth, by Mr. John Fox, the Martyrologist, 4to. Lond. 1571. William Lisle published fragments of the Old and New Testament, London, 4to. 1638. Mr. T. Marshall published the Gospels with the Mæso-Gothic Version, Dodrecht. 4to. 1665, which was reprinted at Amsterdam, in 1684. See Gothic. The Saxon Version appears to have been made from MSS. of the old Itala Version, (see Itala) some time in the seventh or eighth century. See the account in the General Preface to the Book of Genesis, p. xxx. and xxxi. From this Version I have made many extracts in these Notes; as may be seen in different parts of the Four Gospels. The use I have made of Thwaites Octateuch, may be seen in the Notes on the five Books of Moses. No part of the New Testament, besides the four Gospels, has been published in this language.

THE SLAVONIAN, OR RUSSIAN.

This Version, the importance of which in the criticism of the New Testament, has been but lately known, was made in the ninth century, by two brothers, Methodius and Cyril, natives of Thessalonica, and apostles of the Slavonians. It was taken immediately from the Greek, of which it is a literal Version, and first printed in 1581. In the Catholic Epistles, and in the Apocalypse, it agrees generally with the Codex Alexandrinus. It is remarkable, that, of the readings which Griesbach has adopted in his edition of the Greek Testament, the Slavonian Version has at least three-fourths. Where the united evidence of ancient MSS. is against a common reading, the Slavonian agrees with these MSS. There is ample proof that it has not been altered from either the Vulgate, or any other Version. The learned Dobrowsky has given an excellent description of this Version, an extract from which may be seen in Dr. Marsh's Notes to Michaelis, Vol. III. p. 634. As it appears that this Version has been taken from ancient and valuable Greek MSS. it deserves to be better known, and more carefully collated.

THE SYRIAC.

There are two principal Versions which go under this name. 1. The Peshito, which signifies literal or correct, and is the most ancient, and the most important. 2. That which is called Philoxenian, from Philoxenus, Bishop of Hierapolis, or Mabug; who employed Polycarp, his rural bishop, to make this Version, which he finished A. D. 508.

The Peshito was first known in Europe by Moses of Mardin; who was sent by Ignatius, Patriarch of the Maronite Christians, in the year 1552, to Pope Julius III. to acknowledge, in the name of the Syrian church, the supremacy of the Roman Pontiff; and to have the New Testament printed in Europe. The emperor Ferdinand I. bore the expence of the impresion; and Albert Widmanstad, in conjunction with Moses and Postell, edited the work; which was printed at Vienna, 1555, 4to. This edition, from which all succeeding editions have been taken, contains the Four Gospels, the Acts, all St. Paul's Epistles, the first Epistle of John, the first of Peter, and the Epistle of James. The second and third of John are wanting; the second of Peter, the Epistle of Jude, and the Revelation. None of these is acknowledged by any copy of the ancient Syriac Version. This Version was made probably between the second and third centuries.

The Philoxenian we have seen was made in the beginning of the sixth century by Polycarp, the rural bishop of Philoxenus, or Xenyas, Bishop of Mabug; and we find that Thamas of Charkel, or Heraclea, about the year 616, corrected this Version, and compared it with some principal MSS. in the Alexandrian Library: hence it has been called the Heraclean, as well as the Philoxenian Version. This Version has been printed from Dr. Ridley's MSS. by Dr. White, of Oxford, 4to. 1778, &c. The Philoxenian Version contains all the canonical Books of the New Testament, even those omitted by the Peshito Version; from which it differs not only in the language, but in many other respects. Those who wish for farther information on this point, must consult Michaelis' Lectures, Vol. II. p. 1, &c. and the notes of his learned annotator, Dr. Herbert Marsh.

THE VULGATE.

We have already seen, under the article ITALA, that in the earliest ages of Christianity, the New Testament had been translated into Latin. These translations were very numerous; and, having been made by a variety of hands, some learned, and others not so; they not only disagreed among themselves, but appeared, in certain cases, to contradict each other. This induced Pope Damasus to employ St. Jerome, one of the most learned of the primitive Latin Fathers, to correct the ancient Itala. Though, in the Old Testament, he is supposed simply to have collated the Itala with the Hebrew, yet in the New, he asserts, Novum Testamentum Græcæ fidei reddidi. "I have translated the New Testament according to the original Greek. However it appears, that, in many cases, he altered the Itala for the worse, as the remaining fragments of that Version sufficiently testify. This important work, which, in process of time, supplanted the Itala, was finished A. D. 384. and was called Versio Vulgata, the VULGATE or COMMON Version, because received into general use. No Version of the Sacred Writings was more generally received than this; and copies of it were multiplied beyond calculation. And perhaps scarcely any book has been more corrupted by frequent and careless transcription, than the Vulgate, from the year 384 till the invention of printing, about the middle of the fifteenth century. The first edition of this Version was printed by Guttenburg and Fust, at Mayence, in large fol. sine titulo, et sine ullâ notâ, somewhere between 1450 and 1457. By the order of Pope Sixtus Quintus, a complete edition of the Vulgate was printed at Rome in 1588, but not published till 1593. This, though stamped with the infallible authority of the Pope, apostolicâ nobis à Domino, tradita auctoritate; to be the authentic Vulgate, which he styles perpetuò valituram constitutionem, a decree that shall for ever remain in force; yet, on examination, it was found to be so excessively erroneous and self-contradictory, that another corrected edition was undertaken by the authority of Pope Clement VIII. widely differing from that of Sixtus. This is the edition, from which all those were formed, which are now in common use.

I have already stated, that copies of this Version have been often corruptly transcribed, and hence the amazing disagreement between different MSS. The Version being so much in request, and so many persons being copyers by trade, in order to save time and vellum, they wrote the words in contractions, wherever it was possible: and by this means, the original reading, in various instances, was lost. All these causes conspired, with the ignorance of the original tongues, which almost universally prevailed in the middle ages, in the Latin church, to bring this venerable Version into a state of great imperfection; from which it has not, as yet, wholly emerged.

I have several MSS. of this work, written from the twelfth to the fifteenth century, which are exceedingly discordant among themselves. Pope Clement VIII. has certainly done much to restore it to primitive purity; but much still remains to be done. The text should be settled by a further collation of the most ancient MSS. When this is done, the Latin church may be vindicated in that boasting in the Vulgate, which at present, is but incautiously applied to this Version.

I have often quoted this Version, which I consider to be equal to a MS. of the fourth century. I must, however, add, that, with all its imperfections, there is nothing essential to the faith or practice of a genuine Christian, that may not be proved by it; but it certainly can never come into competition with the original Greek text; nor indeed with several of the ancient Versions.

An account of the Versions, as far as they concern the Old Testament, may be seen in the General Preface to the Book of Genesis. I have sometimes quoted these Versions collectively, with VV. by which I mean the Versions in general.

AN ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

PRIMITIVE FATHERS, AND ECCLESIASTICAL WORKS

REFERRED TO IN THE

Various Readings, quoted occasionally in these Notes.

Ambrosius, Archbishop of Milan, born A. D. 340; died A. D. 397.

Ambrosius, Deacon of Alexandria, and intimate friend of Origen, died A. D. 250.

Ambrosiaster: this writer is supposed to be author of a Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles; and to have flourished about A. D. 354.

Athanasius, was Bishop of Alexandria, A. D. 326; died in 375.

Athenagoras, a Christian philosopher of Athens, flourished in A. D. 178.

Basil the Great, Bishop of Cæsarea, born in Cappadocia, A. D. 329; died 379.

Basil, Bishop of Seleucia, flourished in 450.

Bede the Venerable, born at Wermouth, in the diocese of Durham, A. D. 673.

Clemens Alexandrinus, Clement of Alexandria, the preceptor of Origen, died A. D. 220.

Clemens Romanus, Clement of Rome, supposed to have been fellow-labourer with Peter and Paul, and Bishop of Rome, A. D. 91.

Chromatius, Bishop of Aquileia, and friend of St. Jerome, flourished about A. D. 370.

Chronicon Pascale, the Paschal Chronicle: this Chronicle extends from the creation to the twentieth year of Heraclius, A. D. 630.

Chrysostom, Bishop of Constantinople, born A. D. 344; died 407.

Constitutions of the Apostles, certain canons for the government of the Christian church, formed at different times, and certainly long posterior to the times of the Apostles.

Cyrillus Alexandrinus. This Cyril was patriarch of Alexandria A. D. 412; died 444.

Cyrillus Hierosolymitanus, Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, was born A. D. 315; died 386.

Damascenus Joannes, John of Damascus, born about A. D. 676.

Dionysius Alexandrinus, Dionysius, patriarch of Alexandria, flourished in 247.

Dionysius Areopagita, Dionysius the Areopagite, falsely so called, flourished about A. D. 490.

Ephraim Syrus, Ephraim the Syrian, was Deacon of Edessa; and died about A. D. 379.

Epiphanius, Bishop of Salamis, born about A. D. 320.

Eusebius, Bishop of Antioch, flourished in 331.

Euthalius: this writer flourished about A. D. 458. and wrote a critical work on the Acts of the Apostles. He is supposed to have been bishop of Sulca, in Egypt.

Euthymius Zigabenus, a monk who flourished in the twelfth century.

Gaudentius, Bishop of Brescia, flourished in 410.

Gregory the Great, Bishop of Rome, flourished in 590.

Gregory Thaumaturgus, was a disciple of Origen, and Bishop of Neocæsarea in 240.

Gregory Nazianzen, born A. D. 328; died in 389.

Gregory Nyssen, born in Cappadocia A. D. 331; died 396.

Hieronymus. See Jerome.

Hilary Pictavensis, Hilary Bishop of Poctiers, flourished A. D. 350.

Hippolytus, a Christian bishop, flourished A. D. 230.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

The above writers are only referred to for the quotations from the Sacred Writings found in their works. The Latin Fathers, before the time of Jerome, i. e. before the fourth century, quote from the Itala Version. Those after his time, generally make their quotations from the Vulgate. The Greek Fathers quote from the different editions of the Greek text in their respective countries. Ephraim Syrus, and probably some others, from the ancient Syriac Version.

Of the Fathers in General, it may be said, they often quote from memory; not giving the exact words of the sacred writers, but the sense; and often rendering a word by another equivalent to it, in the same language. This sort of quotation has given rise to a vast number of various readings, which should never encumber the margins of our critical editions of the Greek text; though many of them may be of use as fixing the sense in which the writers understood the original text. Those Fathers who comment on the sacred writings, are most valuable, such as Origen, Ambrosiaster, Euthalius, Chrysostom, Jerome, Theophylact, &c. because it may be always supposed they had the copies before them, from which they quoted; and that these copies were such as were held to be authentic in the churches to which they respectively belonged. But even here we find the same Father inconsistent with himself, in repeated quotations of the same words; which is perhaps not so much to be attributed to quoting from memory, as to mistakes made by succeeding copyists of the works of these authors. The different MSS. of the Greek and Latin Fathers, stand as much in need of collation as any other works; and some of them need this as much as the Greek text itself.

In quoting the Greek text, I have generally followed the second edition of Griesbach, occasionally consulting Mill, Wetstein, and Bengel: for the different Versions, as far as they are extant in it, I have followed the London Polyglott, occasionally consulting both the Complutensian and Antwerp editions. The Coptic, Gothic, Sahidic, Philoxenian, Syriac, and Anglo-Saxon, which are not in the Polyglotts, I have consulted in the editions to which they are confined. The Vulgate I have frequently consulted in my own MSS. of that Version. The Codex Alexandrinus, and the Codex Bezæ, I have often quoted from the editions of Woide and Kipling. I have taken a few readings from some fragments of St. Matthew's Gospel, engraven and published from a Codex Rescriptus in Trinity College, Dublin, by the very learned Dr. Barrett, Vice Provost and Librarian of that University. This MS. written in uncial letters, and perhaps one of the oldest extant, I have not mentioned among the MSS. described p. xi. &c. because it has not been quoted by Griesbach, not being published when the first volume of his Testament went to press. The work in which Dr. Barrett has described this, I have quoted largely in the notes on the genealogy of our Lord, at the end of Luke, chap. iii.

Every biblical student, in consulting the sacred writings of the New Testament, should have at hand, if possible, the second edition of Griesbach; I mean that printed at Halle, two volumes 8vo. 1796, &c. On the late London edition of that work, equal dependance cannot be placed. A learned American Clergyman, the Rev. Sam. F. Jarvis, Rector of St. Michael's, &c. New-York, has published proposals for a new, and, as far as I can learn from the prospectus, &c. an improved edition of Griesbach's work: and in so important and useful an undertaking, it is to be hoped he will meet with due encouragement.

Those who have not a Polyglott, to refer to the Syriac Version, will find Schaaf's edition to answer every purpose: it is generally very correct, and very valuable. A new edition of the Syriac Testament is now in the press at the expence of the British and Foreign Bible Society, under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Claudius Buchanan, who has made this text his particular study; and has brought from the East, some valuable MSS. of this important and ancient Version.

While the critical enquirer is availing himself of every help within his reach, let him not forget humbly and fervently to implore the help and teaching of Almighty God; without whom, nothing is wise, nothing strong. It is only when He opens our eyes, that we behold wonders in his law. He who does not pray, is not humble; and, an unhumbled searcher after truth, never yet found it to the salvation of his soul. In such a work, the following inimitable prayer cannot be used in vain. "Blessed Lord, who hast caused all Holy Scriptures to be written for our learning; grant that we may in such wise hear them, read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest them; that by patience and comfort of thy holy word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast the blessed hope of everlasting life, which thou hast given us in our Saviour Jesus Christ." Amen.

St. MATTHEW.

THE general title of this latter collection of Sacred Books, which, as well as the former, all Christians acknowledge to have been given by immediate inspiration from God, is in the Greek Η ΚΑΙΝΗ ΔΙΑΘΗΚΗ, which we translate THE NEW TESTAMENT: but which should rather be translated THE NEW COVENANT; or, if it were lawful to use a periphrasis, The New Covenant, including a Testamentary Declaration and Bequest: for this is precisely the meaning of this system of justice, holiness, goodness, and truth. St. Paul, 2 Cor. iii. 14. calls the Sacred Books before the time of Christ, Η ΠΑΛΑΙΑ ΔΙΑΘΗΚΗ, THE OLD COVENANT; which is a very proper, and descriptive title of the grand subject of those Books. This Apostle evidently considers the Old Testaments and the New, as two Covenants, Gal. iv. 24. and in comparing these two together, he calls one παλαιαν διαθηκην, the old covenant, the other καινην, the new; one πρωτην, the first, the other νεαν, that which is recent; in opposition to the old covenant, which was to terminate in the new, he calls this κρειττονα, better, more excellent, Heb. vii. 22. viii. 6. and αιωνιον, everlasting, Heb. xiii. 20. because it is never to be changed, nor terminate in any other; and to endure endlessly itself. The word Covenant, from con together, and venio, I come; signifies a contract or agreement made between two parties; to fulfil the condition of which, they are mutually bound. The Old Covenant, in its essential parts, was very simple. I WILL BE YOUR GOD: YE SHALL BE MY PEOPLE—the spirit of which was never changed. The people were to take Jehovah as the sole object of their religious worship, put their whole trust and confidence in Him; serve Him in his own way, according to the prescribed forms which he should lay before them. This was their part. On His side, God was to accept them as his people, give them his spirit to guide them, his mercy to pardon them, his providence to support them, and his grace to preserve them unto eternal life. But all this was connected with the strict observance of a great variety of rites and ceremonies, at once expressive of the holiness of God, the purity of the Divine Justice, and the exceeding sinfulness and utter helpless state of man. A great part of the four latter Books of Moses, is employed in prescribing and illustrating these rites and ceremonies; and what is called the New Covenant, is the complement and perfection of the whole.

The word Διαθηκη, from δια and τιθημι, I lay down, signifies not only a covenant agreement, but also that disposal which a man makes of his secular matters during his life, which is to take place after his death. It answers to the Hebrew ברית berith, from בר bar, to purify, because in making covenants, a sacrifice was usually offered to God, for the purification of the contracting parties; and hence the word ברית berith is frequently used to express not only the covenant itself, but also the sacrifice offered on the occasion. See below under GOSPEL; and see the notes on Gen. vi. 18. xv. 18. Exod. xxix. 45. Lev. xxvi. 15. and Deut. xxix. 12. where every thing relative to this subject is largely handled.

The term New Covenant, as used here, seems to mean, that grand plan of agreement or reconciliation which God made between himself and mankind, by the death of Jesus Christ; in consequence of which, all those who truly repent, and unfeignedly believe in the great atoning sacrifice, are purified from their sins, and united to God. Christ is called της Διαθηκης καινης μεσιτης, The Mediator of the New Covenant, Heb. ix. 15. And referring to the ratification of this New Covenant or agreement, by means of his own death, in the celebration of his last supper, Christ calls the cup, το ποτηριον η καινη Διαθηκη εν τω αιματι μου, This cup is the New Covenant in my blood: i. e. an emblem or representation of the New covenant, ratified by his blood. See Luke xxii. 20. And from these expressions and their obvious meaning, the whole Christian Scriptures have obtained this title, THE NEW TESTAMENT, OR COVENANT, OF OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST.

Those writings and the grand subject of them, which, previously to the New Testament times, were termed simply THE Covenant; were, after the Incarnation, called The OLD Covenant, as we have already seen, to distinguish them from the Christian Scriptures, and their grand subject, which were called The NEW Covenant; not so much because it was a new agreement, but rather a renewal of the old, in which the spirit, object, and design of that primitive Covenant were more clearly and fully manifested.

The particular title to each of the four following Books, in most Greek MSS. and printed editions, is ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΝ κατα ΜΑΤΘΑΙΟΝ—ΜΑΡΚΟΝ—ΛΟΥΚΑΝ—ΙΟΑΝΝΗΝ, which we translate, The Gospel according to Matthew—Mark—Luke—John; i. e. the gospel or history of our blessed Lord, as written and transmitted to posterity by each of these writers. Our word GOSPEL, which should be always written godspel or godespel, comes from the Anglo-saxon ȝoðȝpel, and is compounded of ȝoð, good, and ȝpel, history, narrative, doctrine, mystery, or secret; and was applied by our ancestors, to signify the revelation of that glorious system of truth, which had been in a great measure, hidden or kept secret from the foundation of the world.

Among Saxon scholars, the word GOSPEL has been variously explained. Mr. Somner, who writes it ȝoð-ȝpell, explains it thus, Sermo Dei mysticus; Dei historia. "The mystic word of God; the history of God." But he supposes that it may be compounded of ȝoð, good and ȝpell, a message; and very properly observes, that ȝoðȝpellian, signifies, not only to preach, or proclaim the gospel; but also to foretel or predict; to prophesy, to divine: and in this latter sense, the word ȝpell, spell, was anciently used among us, and still signifies an incantation, or a charm; which implies a peculiar collocation, and repetition of certain words, which were supposed to produce supernatural effects by means of spiritual influence or agency; which agency was always attracted and excited by such words, through some supposed correspondency between the words, and the spiritual agency to be employed. The word in this sense, occurs in King Alfred's Saxon translation of Boethius, De Consolatione Philosophiæ, chap. 38. Ða ongunnon leape men ꝑýꝛcan ꝑpell, Then deceitful men began to practise incantations. It is possible that our ancestors gave this title to the preaching of Christ crucified, from observing the astonishing effects produced by it, in changing the hearts and lives of sinners. And very innocently might they denominate the pure powerful preaching of the death and resurrection of Christ, God's charm: that wonderful word, which, accompanied with the demonstration and power of the Holy Ghost, produced such miraculous effects among men.

As the word ꝑpellian spellian signifies to teach or instruct; hence our word to spell, i. e. to teach a person by uniting vowels and consonants, to enunciate words; and thus learn to read. And hence the book out of which the first rudiments of language are learnt, is termed a spelling-book, exactly answering to the ꝑpell-boc spell-book of our ancestors, which signified a book of homilies, or plain discourses, for the instruction of the common people. We have already seen (note on Gen. i. 1.) that ꝺoꝺ among our ancestors, not only signified God the Supreme Being; but also good or goodness, which is his nature: ꝺoꝺꝑpell godspell therefore, is not only God's history, doctrine, or plan of teaching; but also the good history, the good doctrine; and hence ꝑpellian, to preach or proclaim this doctrine: ꝑpell-boc, the sermons that contained the rudiments of it, for the instruction of men; and ꝑpel-boꝺa spel-boda, the orator, messenger, or ambassador, that announced it.

The Greek word Ευαγγελιον, from ευ good, and αγγελια a message, signifies good news, or glad tidings in general; and is evidently intended to point out in this place, the good message or the glad tidings of great joy, which God has sent to all mankind, preaching peace and reconciliation by Christ Jesus, who is Lord of all: proclaiming that He, as the promised Messiah, has, by the grace of God, tasted death for every man—for he has died for their offences, and risen again for their justification: and that through his grace, every sinner under the whole heaven, may turn to God, and find mercy. This is good news, glad tidings, a joyful message; and it is such to all mankind, as in it every human spirit is interested.

But besides this general meaning, the word Ευαγγελιον, has other acceptations in the New Testament and in the Greek writers, which may be consulted here with great propriety and effect.

1. It signifies the reward given to those who brought good news. Thus Homer represents the disguised Ulysses, claiming a reward ευαγγελιον, a vest and mantle, should he verify to Eumeus, the glad tidings of his master's safety. Ευαγγελιον δε μοι εϛω. Let me have a reward for my good news, Odyss. xiv. v. 152.

To which Eumeus, who despaired of his master's return, replied,

Ω γερον, ουτ' αρ' εγων Ευαγγελιον τοδε τισω,
Ουτ' Οδυσσευς ετι οικον ελευσεται. Ib. v. 266.

Old friend! nor cloak nor vest thy gladsome news
Will ever earn; Ulysses comes no more! Cowper.

And on the word, as thus used, Eustathius gives the following comment: Ευαγγελιον; δωρον υπερ αγαθης ευαγγελιας. "Euangelion signifies the reward given for bringing good news."

St. Chrysostom, in his xix. Homily on the Acts, gives this as a common meaning of the word. "The Gospel is this: Thou shalt receive good things: as men are accustomed in their common conversation to say to each other, τι μοι των ευαγγελιων; What reward wilt thou give me for my good news, &c." It is used in the same sense by the Septuagint, 2 Sam. iv. 10. When one told me, saying, behold Saul is dead, thinking to have brought good tidings, I took him and slew him in Ziglag, who thought ωεδει με δουναι Ευαγγελια, that I would have given him A REWARD for his tidings. CICERO uses it in the same sense, see his Epistles to Atticus, lib. 2. Ep. 3. O suaves Epistolas tuas uno tempore mihi datas duas: quibus Ευαγγελια quæ reddam nescio, deberi quidem, planè fateor. "O, how delightful are your Epistles! two of which I have received at one time, for which I know not what recompence to make: but, that I am your debtor, I candidly confess."

2. It is used also to signify the prayers, thanksgivings, and sacrifices offered on the arrival of good news. So Aristophanes Μοι δοκει—Ευαγγελια θυειν, εκατον βους, ηθεω. I think I should SACRIFICE A HECATOMB to the goddess for this intelligence. ARISTOPH. in Equit. v. 653.

ISOCRATES (Areopag. initio) is supposed to use the word in the sense of supplication, Επι τοσαυτας πραξεσιν Ευαγγελια μεν δις ηδη τεθυκαμεν—"relative to these transactions, we have purposed to make supplication twice." Xenophon uses it to denote an eucharistic offering made on account of receiving good news. Εθυε τα Ευαγγελια. See Hist. Gr. I. 6, 27. It seems to be used in a similar sense by the Septuagint in 2 Sam. xviii. 20, 27.

Other examples might be produced in which the word is used in all the above senses; but these may be deemed sufficient.

3. However illustrative the above acceptations of Ευαγγελιον among the Greek writers, may be of the word in relation to the great doctrine of the new covenant; yet among the sacred writers, it is restricted to express the glad tidings of the coming of the Messiah, for the reasons mentioned above. See Luke ii. 10.

4. The whole doctrine of Jesus Christ comprised in the history of his incarnation, preaching, miracles, sufferings, death, resurrection, ascension, and the mission of the Holy Spirit, by which salvation was procured for a lost world, is expressed by the word Ευαγγελιον, as well as by the general title; Καινη Διαθηκη. Rom. i. 1, 3, 9. Matt. iv. 23. ix. 35. xxiv. 14. Mark i. 14. But the Sacred Writers use it with a variety of epithets, which it may be necessary to mention, 1st, It is sometimes termed The gospel of God concerning his Son. Rom. i. 1, 3. 2dly, The gospel of the Son of God. Rom. i. 9. 3dly, The gospel of the kingdom of God. Matt. iv. 23. ix. 35. xxiv. 14. Mark i. 14. 4thly, Sometimes it is simply called THE GOSPEL. Mark xiii. 10. xvi. 15. 5thly, The word or doctrine (λογος) of the Gospel. Acts xv. 7. 6thly, The Gospel of Peace. Eph. vi. 15. 7thly, The Gospel of Glory, το Ευαγγελιον της δοξης. 1 Tim. i. 11. 8thly, The Gospel of Salvation, το Ευαγγελιον της σωτηριας. Eph. i. 13.

5. In 1 Cor. ix. 23. it means the blessings and privileges promised in the New Testament.

6. It means the public profession of the doctrine taught by Christ, Mark viii. 35. x. 29. 2 Tim. i. 8. Philem. ver. 13.

7. But in Gal. 1. 6, 8, 9. the word Ευαγγελιον seems to mean any new doctrine, whether true or false.

Many MSS. have Το κατα Ματθαιον αγιον Ευαγγελιον, which is generally rendered, The Gospel according to SAINT Matthew. But the word αγιον, saint, or holy, should be here applied to the Gospel, with which it properly agrees, and then the title would run, The holy Gospel according to Mathew; that is, the account of this Holy Dispensation according to the narrative composed by Matthew, an eye-witness of all the transactions he relates. But anciently the word holy was neither applied to the narrative nor to the narrator, the title being simply, The Gospel according to Matthew.

SOME ACCOUNT OF MATTHEW THE EVANGELIST.

Matthew, supposed to be the same who is also called Levi, son of Alpheus, was by birth a Jew. As to his office, he appears to have been a tax-gatherer, under the Romans. He was a native of Galilee, as the rest of Christ's apostles were; but of what city in that country, or of which tribe of the people of Israel, are not known.

As he sat at the custom-house, by the sea side, in, or near the city, of Capernaum, Jesus called him; and as soon as he could make up his accompts with those by whom he had been employed and entrusted, he became a willing faithful disciple of Christ. After this, St. Mark tells us, he made an entertainment in his own house, where Christ and several of his disciples were present, together with many tax-gatherers, and others, of no very respectable character, in the sight of the Pharisees.

It is probable, that Matthew took this occasion of calling together his relatives and acquaintances, that he might take a friendly farewell of them; and give them the opportunity of seeing and hearing that divine Person, whose words he had already found to be spirit and life to his own soul; and to whose service he had now solemnly dedicated himself.

He was placed by our Lord in the number of his Apostles, and continued with him during his life. After the Ascension of Christ, he was at Jerusalem, and received the Holy Ghost with the rest of the disciples on the day of Pentecost.

Matthew, with Andrew, Peter, and the two sons of Zebedee, are the only disciples whose call is particularly mentioned. It is uncertain when, where, or how he died. There does not appear to be any clear evidence in the writings of the primitive fathers, that he suffered martyrdom.

St. Matthew's Gospel is generally allowed to be the most ancient part of the writings of the New Covenant. Many modern critics contend that it was written about the year of our Lord 61, or between this and 65. Others, that it was written so early as 41, or about the eighth year after the Ascension: and this is supported by the subscriptions at the end of this Gospel in many MSS.; but it must be observed, that all these MSS. are posterior to the 10th century. Michaelis has adopted a middle way, which carries much of the appearance of probability with it, viz that Matthew wrote his Gospel in Hebrew about the 8th year after the Ascension of our Lord, or A. D. 41. and that the translation of it into Greek, was made about A. D. 61. or later.

Whether this Gospel were written originally in Hebrew or Greek, is a question by which the most eminent critics have been greatly puzzled and divided. The balance however is clearly in favour of a Hebrew original. The present Greek text, was doubtless published at a very early period; who the translator was, cannot at this distance of time, be determined; probably it was the Evangelist himself.

As Matthew was one of the twelve disciples, his history is an account of what he heard and saw, being a constant attendant on our blessed Lord. This consideration of itself would prove, that allowing him only to be a man of integrity, he would make no mistakes in his narrative. Add to this, the influence and superintendance of the Holy Spirit, under which he constantly acted, and which our Lord had promised to his disciples, to guide them unto all truth, and bring whatsoever he had spoken to them, into remembrance, John xiv. 26. These two considerations stamp the narrative with the utmost degree of credibility.

ADVERTISEMENT.

It may be necessary to say a few words in explanation of the different ÆRAS introduced at the commencement of the Gospels. 1. By the Ussherian year of the World, the Reader is to understand the chronological computation of Archbishop Ussher; who supposed that 4000 years exactly, had elapsed from the creation of the world till the birth of Christ. 2. The Alexandrian Æra, is that chronological computation which was used by the people of Alexandria; who began their reckoning 5502 before the vulgar year of Christ I. 3. The Antiochian Æra, is a correction of the preceding, in the 4th century, by Pandorus an Egyptian monk, and used by the people of Antioch; it differs only from the Alexandrian by subtracting ten years. 4. The Constantinopolitan Æra, is that still in use in the Greek Church, which reckons 5508 before the year I. of the Incarnation, according to the vulgar æra. 5. The Julian Period is a factitious æra, conceived by Joseph Scaliger, to facilitate the reduction of the years of any given epoch to that of another. This Period is the result of the Lunar and Solar Cycles, and the Indictions multiplied by each other. Thus: multiply 19 the Lunar Cycle, by 28 the Solar Cycle, and the product will be 532; multiply this sum by 15 the Cycle of the Indictions, and you will have 7980 years, which constitute the Julian Period. The first year of the Vulgar Æra, is placed in the 4714th year of the Julian Period: whence it follows, that to find any year of our Lord in this Period, 4713 years must be added to that year: e. g. to find the year of this Period, answering to the present year of our Lord 1812, add 4713, and you will have 6525, which is the year of the Julian Period sought. 6. The Æra of the Seleucidæ, sometimes improperly called the Æra of Alexander, commenced 12 years after the death of Alexander the Great, 312 before the Incarnation, according to the vulgar reckoning, and was properly the first year of the Syro-Macedonian empire. 7. By the year before the Vulgar Æra of Christ, is meant, that correct chronological reckoning which shewed that the vulgar or common reckoning of the A. D. or year of our Lord, is deficient not less than four years: so that the present year 1812 should be, according to strict chronological precision, 1816. 8. The mode of computing by Olympiads, derived its origin from the institution of the Olympic Games, which were celebrated every four years, for five successive days, at the time of the first full moon, after the summer's solstice. They were held on the banks of the river Alpheus, near Olympia a city of Elis, from which they derived their name. The first Olympiad commenced 776 before the Incarnation of our Lord. It need scarcely be added that each Olympiad consists of four years; hence the first, second, third, or fourth year of any particular Olympiad. 9. Year of the building of Rome, is an important Æra among the Roman historians: it commenced 753 years before the birth of Christ. 10. The year of Augustus or years after the Battle of Actium, is the computation of time from the commencement of the Roman EMPIRE, which took place after the Battle of Actium, 27 years before our Lord: from this time Augustus became sole governor. 11. The Cycles introduced, require little explanation. The Solar Cycle is a revolution consisting of 28 years; the Lunar Cycle of 19; and the Paschal Cycle or Dionysian Period, is compounded of both, thus: The Solar Cycle of 28, and the Lunar of 19, multiplied by each other, produce 532, which constitutes a third Cycle, called the Paschal, Cycle, because in that period, the Christian Passover or Easter, a moveable Feast, has gone through all possible variations, and the Solar and Lunar Cycles, Dominical Letters, Paschal term, Epacts, New Moons, &c. &c. all recommence exactly as they had done 532 years before. Other Æras might have been noticed, but those mentioned above were judged to be the most important.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The book of the generation of Jesus Christ] I suppose these words to have been the original title to this Gospel; and that they signify, according to the Hebrew phraseology, not only the account of the genealogy of Christ, as detailed below, but the history of his birth, acts, sufferings, death, resurrection and ascension.

The phrase, book of the generation, ספר תולדות sepher toledoth, is frequent in the Jewish writings, and is translated by the Septuagint, βιβλος γενεσεως, as here, by the Evangelist; and regularly conveys the meaning given to it above; e. g. This is the book of the generations of Adam, Gen. v. 1. That is, the account of the life of Adam and certain of his immediate descendants. Again. These are the generations of Jacob, Gen. xxxvii. 2. that is, the account or history of Jacob, his son Joseph, and the other remarkable branches of the family. And again. These are the generations of Aaron and Moses, Num. iii. 1. That is, the history of the life and acts of these persons, and some of their immediate descendants. The same form of expression is also used, Gen. ii. 4. when giving the history of the creation of heaven and earth.

Some have translated βιβλος γενεσεως, The book of the genealogy; and consider it the title of this chapter only; but the former opinion seems better founded.

born, could boast in a direct line, a more illustrious ancestry than Jesus Christ. Among his progenitors, the regal, sacerdotal and prophetic offices, existed in all their glory and splendor. DAVID, the most renowned of sovereigns, was king and prophet: ABRAHAM, the most perfect character in all antiquity, whether sacred or prophane, was priest and prophet; but the three offices were never united except in the person of Christ; he alone was prophet, priest and king; and possessed and executed these offices in such a supereminent degree, as no human being ever did, or ever could. As the principal business of the prophet was to make known the will of God to men, according to certain partial communications received from Heaven; so Jesus who lay in the bosom of the Father, and who was intimately and thoroughly acquainted with all the mysteries of the eternal world, came to declare the Divine Nature, and its counsels to mankind.—See John i. 18. As the business of the priest was to offer sacrifices to God, to make atonement for the sins of the people; so Christ was constituted a high priest to make, by the sacrifice of himself, an atonement for the sins of the whole world; see 1 John ii. 2. and the whole Epistle to the Hebrews. As the office of king was to reign over, protect and defend the people committted to his care by the Divine Providence; so Christ is set as a king upon Sion, having the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, Psal. ii. 6, 8, &c. Of the righteousness, peace, and increase of whose government, there shall be no end, Isai. ix. 7. This threefold office, Christ executes not only in a general sense, in the world at large; but, in a particular sense, in every Christian soul. He is first a prophet, to teach the heart the will of God; to convict the conscience of sin, righteousness, and judgment; and fully to illustrate the way of salvation. He is next a priest, to apply that atonement to the guilty conscience, the necessity of which, as a prophet, he had previously made known. And lastly, as a king, he leads captivity captive, binds and casts out the strong man armed, spoils his goods, extends the sway of the sceptre of righteousness, subdues and destroys sin, and reigns Lord, over all the powers and faculties of the human soul; so that AS sin reigned unto death, EVEN so does grace reign through righteousness, unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. v. 21.

It is remarkable, that the Evangelist names David before Abraham, though the latter was many generations older: the reason seems to be this, that David was not only the most illustrious of our Lord's predecessors, as being both king and prophet; but because that promise, which at first was given to Abraham, and afterwards, through successive generations, confirmed to the Jewish people, was at last determined and restricted to the family of David. Son of David, was an epithet by which the Messiah was afterwards known among the Jews; and under this title, they were led to expect him by prophetic authority. See Psal. lxxxix. 3, 4. cxxxii. 10, 11. compared with Acts xiii. 23. and Isai. xi. 1. Jerem. xxiii. 5. Christ was prophesied of under the very name of David. See Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. xxxvii. 24, 25.

Verse 2. Abraham begat Isaac] In this genealogy, those perons only, among the ancestors of Christ, which formed the direct line, are specified: hence no mention is made of Ishmael, the son of Abraham, nor of Esau, the son of Isaac: and of all the twelve patriarchs or sons of Jacob, Judah alone is mentioned.

Verse 3. Pharez and Zara] The remarkable history of these twins may be seen Gen. xxxviii. Some of the ancients were of opinion, that the Evangelist refers to the mystery of the youngest being preferred to the eldest, as prefiguring the exaltation of the Christian church over the synagogue. Concerning the women whose names are recorded in this genealogy, see the note at the end of the chapter.

Verse 8. Joram begat Ozias] This is the Uzziah, king of Judah, who was struck with the leprosy for his presumption in entering the temple to offer incense before the Lord. See 2 Chron. xxvi. 16, &c. Ozias was not the immediate son of Joram: there were three kings between them, Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah, which swell the fourteen generations to seventeen: but it is observed, that omissions of this kind are not uncommon in the Jewish genealogies. In Ezra vii. 3. Azariah is called the son of Meraioth, although it is evident from 1 Chron. vi. 7—9. that there were six descendants between them. This circumstance the Evangelist was probably aware of; but did not see it proper to attempt to correct what he found in the public accredited genealogical tables; as he knew it to be of no consequence to his argument, which was merely to shew, that Jesus Christ as surely descended, in an uninterrupted line from David, as David did from Abraham. this he has done in the most satisfactory manner: nor did any person in those days pretend to detect any inaccuracy in his statement; though the account was published among those very people whose interest it was to expose the fallacy, in vindication of their own obstinate rejection of the Messiah, if any such fallacy could have been proved. But as they were silent, modern, and comparatively modern unbelievers, may for ever hold their peace. The objections raised on this head are worthy of no regard.

St. Matthew took up the genealogies just as he found them in the public Jewish records, which, though they were in the main correct, yet were deficient in many particulars. The Jews themselves give us sufficient proof of this. The Talmud, title Kiddushim, mentions ten classes of persons who returned from the Babylonish captivity: I. כהני COHANEY, priests. II. לוי LEVEY, Levites. III. ישראל YISHRAEL, Israelites. IV. חלולי CHULULEY, common persons, as to the priesthood; such, whose fathers were priests, but their mothers were such as the priests should not marry. V. גירי GIREY, proselytes. VI. חרורי CHARUREY freed-men, or servants who had been liberated by their masters. VII. ממזרי MAMZIREY, spurious, such as were born in unlawful wedlock. VIII. נתיני NETHINEY, Nethinims. IX. שתוקי SHETUKEY, bastards, persons whose mothers, though well known, could not ascertain the fathers of their children, because of their connections with different men. X. אסופי ASUPHEY, such as were gathered up out of the streets, whose fathers and mothers were utterly unknown. Such was the heterogeneous mass brought up from Babylon to Jerusalem: and although we learn from the Jews, that great care was taken to separate the spurious from the true-born Israelites, and Canons were made for that purpose: yet it so happened, that sometimes a spurious family had got into high authority, and therefore must not be meddled with. See several cases in Lightfoot. On this account, a faithful genealogist would insert in his roll, such only as were indisputable. "It is therefore easy to guess," says Dr. Lightfoot, "whence Matthew took the last fourteen generations of this genealogy, and Luke the first forty names of his: namely, from the genealogical rolls, at that time well known, and laid up in the public κειμηλια, repositories, and in the private also. And it was necessary indeed, in so noble and so sublime a subject, and a thing that would be so much inquired into by the Jewish people, as the lineage of the Messiah would be, that the Evangelists should deliver a truth, not only that could not be gainsaid, but also, might be proved and established from certain and undoubted rolls of ancestors." See Horæ Talmudicæ.

Verse 11. Josias begat Jechonias, &c.] There are three considerable difficulties in this verse. 1. Josias was not the father of Jechonias; he was only the grand-father of that prince: 1 Chron. iii. 14—16. 2. Jechonias had no brethren; at least, none are on record. 3. Josias died 20 years before the Babylonish captivity took place, and therefore Jechonias and his brethren, could not have been begotten about the time they were carried away to Babylon. To this may be added a fourth difficulty, viz. there are only thirteen in this 2d class of generations; or forty-one, instead of forty-two in the whole. But all these difficulties disappear, by adopting a reading found in many MSS. Ιωσιας δε εγεννησε τον Ιωακειμ· Ιωακειμ δε εγεννησε τον Ιεχονιαν. And Josias begat JEHOIAKIM, or Joakim, and JOAKIM begat Jechonias. For this reading, see the authorities in Griesbach. Josiah was the immediate father of Jehoiakim, (called also Eliakeim and Joakim) and his brethren, who were Johanan, Zedekiah, and Shallum: see 1 Chron. iii. 15. Joakim was the father of Joachin or Jechonias, about the time of the first Babylonish captivity: for we may reckon three Babylonish captivities. The first happened in the fourth year of Joakim, son of Josiah, about A. M. 3398. In this year, Nebuchadnezzar having taken Jerusalem, led a great number of captives to Babylon. The second captivity happened under Jechoniah, son of Joakim; who having reigned three months, was taken prisoner in 3405, and was carried to Babylon, with a great number of the Jewish nobility. The third captivity took place under Zedekiah, A. M. 3416. And thus, says Calmet, the 11th verse should be read: Josias begat Joakim and his brethren: and Joakim begat Jechonias about the time of the first Babylonish captivity; and Jechonias begat Salathiel, after they were brought to Babylon. Thus, with the necessary addition of Joakim, the three classes, each containing fourteen generations, are complete. And to make this the more evident, I shall set down each of these three generations in a separate column, with the additional Joakim, that the Reader may have them all at one view.

Verse 12. Jechonias begat Salathiel] After Jechonias was brought to Babylon, he was put in prison by Nebuchadnezzar, where he continued till the death of this prince, and the accession of Evilmerodach, who brought him out of prison, in which he had been detained thirty-seven years; and restored him to such favour, that his throne (seat) was exalted above all the kings which were with him in Babylon: Jerem. lii. 31, 32. But though he thus became a royal favourite, he was never restored to his kingdom. And according to the prophecy of Jeremiah xxii. 30. no man of his seed sat upon the throne of David; yet the regal line was continued through his son Salathiel, who died in Babylon: but Zorobabel, his son, returned from captivity, and by him the race of David was continued, according to Matthew, by Abiud; and, according to Luke by Rhesa. See on Luke iii. 23, &c.

The term carrying away to Babylon μετοικεσια, from μετοικεω, to change a habitation or place of residence, would be more properly translated by the word transportation, which is here peculiarly appropriate: the change was not voluntary; they were forced away.

Verse 16. Jesus, who is called Christ.] As the word Χριστος, Christ, signifies the anointed or anointer, from χριω, to anoint; it answers exactly to the Hebrew משיח mashiach, which we pronounce Messiah or Messias; this word comes from the root משח mashac, signifying the same thing. As the same person is intended by both the Hebrew and Greek appellation, it should be regularly translated The Messiah, or The Christ; whichever is preferred, the demonstrative article should never be omitted.

Priests, prophets, and kings, among the Jews, were anointed in order to the legitimate exercise of their respective offices. Hence the word Χριστος Christ, or משיח Mashiach, became a name of dignity, and often signified the same as king. See Isai. xlv. 1. Psal. cv. 15. Lev. iv. 3. vi. 20. 1 Sam. ii. 10. The words משיח Massiach and מלך melec, Χριστος and βασιλευς, Christ and king, are frequently interchanged. 1 Sam. ii. 10. Psal. ii. 2, 6. Luke xxiii. 2. and see the Scholia of Rosenmuller on this place. The reason of this may be seen in the following note, which I extract from the comment on Exod. xxix. 7.

"It appears from Isai. lxi. 1. that anointing with oil, in consecrating a person to any important office, whether civil or religious, was considered as an emblem of the communication of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. This ceremony was used on three occasions, viz. the installation of prophets, priests, and kings, into their respective offices. But why should such anointing be deemed necessary? Because the common sense of men taught them, that all good, whether spiritual or secular, must come from God, its origin and cause. Hence it was taken for granted, 1. That no man could foretell events, unless inspired by the Spirit of God. And therefore the prophet was anointed, to signify the communication of the Spirit of wisdom and knowledge. 2. That no person could offer an acceptable sacrifice to God for the sins of men; or profitably minister in holy things, unless enlightened, influenced, and directed, by the Spirit of grace and holiness. Hence the priest was anointed, to signify his being divinely qualified for the due performance of his sacred functions. 3. That no man could enact just and equitable laws, which should have the prosperity of the community and the welfare of the individual continually in view, or could use the power confided to him, only for the suppression of vice and the encouragement of virtue, but that man who was ever under the inspiration of the Almighty. Hence kings were inaugurated by anointing with oil. Two of these offices only, exist in all civilized nations, the sacerdotal and regal; and in some countries, the priest and king are still consecrated by anointing. In the Hebrew language, משח mashach signifies to anoint; and משיח mashiach, the anointed person. But as no man was ever dignified by holding the three offices, so no person ever had 19 Then Joseph, her husband, being a just man, and not willing [c] to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

20 But while he thought on these things, behold the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, the title Mashiach, the anointed one, but Jesus, The CHRIST. He alone is King of kings, and Lord of lords: the king who governs the universe, and rules in the hearts of his followers; the prophet, to instruct men in the way wherein they should go; and the great high-priest, to make atonement for their sins. Hence he is called the Messias, a corruption of the word משיח ha-mashiach, THE anointed ONE, in Hebrew; which gave birth to ὁ Χριστος ho Christos, which has precisely the same signification in Greek: of him, Melchisedech, Abraham, Aaron, David, and others, were illustrious types. But none of these had the title of THE MESSIAH, or THE ANOINTED of God. This does, and ever will, belong exclusively to JESUS, The CHRIST."

Verse 17. Fourteen generations] See the note on ver. 11. The Jews had a sort of technical method of summing up generations in this way. In Sinopsis Sohar. p. 132. n. 18. we have the following words: "From Abraham to Solomon were fifteen generations; and then the moon was at the full. From Solomon to Zedekiah were other fifteen generations; the moon was then in the wane, and Zedekiah's eyes were put out."—That is, the regal state came to its zenith of light and glory in the time of Solomon; but decreased gradually, till it became nearly extinct in the days of Zedekiah. See Schoetgen.

Verse 18. Espoused to Joseph] The word μνηστευθεισης from μνηστευω, to contract, or betroth, refers to the previous marriage agreement, in which the parties mutually bound themselves to each other; without which, no woman was ever married among the Jews.

Before they came together] The woman was espoused at her own, or her father's house; and generally, some time elapsed, before she was taken home to the house of her husband: Deut. xx. 7. Judg. xiv. 7, 8. This custom has been immemorially observed among the inhabitants of Ireland, who have not only this, but many other Asiatic customs, which, added to various authentic historic proofs, are collateral evidences, that they received the Christian religion, not from the popes of Rome, but through the means of Asiatic missionaries.

Among the Jews, the espousal, though the marriage had not been consummated, was considered as perfectly legal and binding on both sides; and hence, a breach of this contract, was considered as a case of adultery, and punished exactly in the same way. See Deut. xxii. 25, 28. Nor could a contract of this kind, though there were no cohabitation, be broken but by a regular divorce, as Mr. Selden, in his Uxor Hebraica, has proved at large from the Jewish Rabbins.

She was found with child] Her situation was the most distressing and humiliating that can be conceived. Nothing but the fullest consciousness of her own integrity, and the strongest confidence in God, could have supported her in such trying circumstances, where her reputation, her honour, and her life, were at stake. What conversation passed between her and Joseph, on this discovery, we are not informed; but the issue proves, that it was not satisfactory to him: nor could he resolve to consider her as his wife, till God had sent his angel to bear the most unequivocal testimony to the virgin's innocence. His whole conduct on this occasion, was exceedingly benevolent and humane. He might at once have taken the advantage of the law, Deut. xxii. 23, 24. and had her stoned to death.

Verse 19. To make her a public example] Παραδειγματισαι, to expose her to public infamy; from παρα, near, and δεικνυμι, I shew, or expose. Though Joseph was a righteous man, δικαιος, and knew that the law required that such persons as he supposed his wife to be, should be put to death; yet as righteousness is ever directed by mercy, he determined to put her away or divorce her privately, i. e. without assigning any cause, that her life might be saved: and as the offence was against himself, he had a right to pass it by if he chose. Some have supposed that the term δικαιος should be translated merciful, and it certainly often has this signification, but here it is not necessary.

Verse 20. That which is conceived (or formed) in her] So I think γεννηθεν should be translated in this place: as it appears that the human nature of Jesus Christ, was a real creation in the womb of the virgin, by the power of the Holy Spirit. The angel of the Lord mentioned here, was probably the angel Gabriel, who, six months before, had been sent to Zacharias and Elizabeth, to announce the birth of Christ's forerunner, John the Baptist. See Luke i. 36.

Verse 21. JESUS] The same as Joshua, יהושע Yehoshuâ, from ישע yashâ, he saved, delivered, put in a state of safety. See on Exod. xiii. 9. Num. xiii. 16. and in the preface to Joshua.

He shall save his people from their sins.] This shall be his great business in the world: the great errand on which he is come, viz. to make an atonement for, and to destroy, sin: deliverance from all the power, guilt, and pollution of sin, is the privilege of every believer in Christ Jesus. Less than this, is not spoken of in the gospel: and less than this, would be unbecoming the gospel. The perfection of the gospel system is, not that it makes allowances for sin, but that it makes an atonement for it:—not that it tolerates sin, but that it destroys it. In ver. 1. he is called Jesus Christ, on which Dr. Lightfoot properly remarks, "That the name of Jesus, so often added to the name of Christ in the New Testament, is not only that Christ might be thereby pointed out as the Saviour, but also that Jesus might be pointed out as the true Christ, or Messiah, against the unbelief of the Jews." This observation will be of great use in numberless places of the New Testament. See Acts ii. 36. viii. 35. 1 Cor. vi. 22. 1 John ii. 22. iv. 15, &c.

Verse 22. By the prophet] ISAIAH is added here by several MSS. Versions, and Fathers. The prophecy is taken from Isaiah vii. 14.

Verse 23. Behold, a virgin shall be with child] We have already seen from the preceding verse, that this prophecy is taken from Isai. vii. 14. but it may be necessary to consider the circumstance of the original promise, more particularly. At the time referred to, the kingdom of Judah, under the government of Ahaz, was reduced very low. Pekah, king of Israel, had slain in Judea 120,000 persons in one day; and carried away captives 200,000, including women and children, together with much spoil. To add to their distress, Rezin, king of Syria, being confederate with Pekah, had taken Elath, a fortified city of Judah, and carried the inhabitants away captive to Damascus. In this critical conjuncture, need we wonder that Ahaz was afraid that the enemies who were now united against him must prevail, destroy Jerusalem, end the kingdom of Judah, and annihilate the family of David? To meet and remove this fear, apparently well grounded, Isaiah is sent from the Lord to Ahaz, swallowed up now both by sorrow and unbelief, in order to assure him, that the counsels of his enemies should not stand; and that they should be utterly discomfited. To encourage Ahaz, he commands him to ask a sign or miracle, which should be a pledge in hand, that God should, in due time, fulfil the predictions of his servant, as related in the context. On Ahaz humbly refusing to ask any sign, it is immediately added, Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign: Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son; and shall call his name Immanuel. Butter and honey shall he eat, &c. Both the divine and human nature of our Lord, as well as the miraculous conception, appear to be pointed out in the prophecy quoted here by the Evangelist:—He shall be called עמנו-אל IM-MENU-EL; literally, The STRONG GOD WITH US: similar to those words in the New Testament—The word which was God—was made flesh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth: John i. 1, 14. And, God was manifested in the flesh: 1 Tim. iii. 16. So that we are to understand, God with us, to imply, God incarnated—God, in human nature. This seems farther evident from the words of the prophet, ver. 15. Butter and honey shall he eat—he shall be truly man, grow up and be nourished in a human, natural way; which refers to his being WITH US, i. e. incarnated. To which the prophet adds, That he may know to refuse the evil and chuse the good: or rather, According to his knowledge, לרעתו leda-âto, reprobating the evil, and chusing the good:—this refers to him as God; and is the same idea, given by this prophet, chap. liii. 11. By (or in) his knowledge (the knowledge of Christ crucified, ברעתו be daâto) shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their offences. Now this union of the divine and human nature, is termed a sign or miracle, אתו oth, i. e. something which exceeds the power of nature to produce. And this miraculous union was to be brought about in a miraculous way: Behold a VIRGIN shall conceive: the word is very emphatic, העלמה ha-âlmah, THE virgin; the only one that ever was, or ever shall be, a mother, in this way. But the Jews, and some called Christians, who have espoused their desperate cause, assert, that "the word עלמה âlmah does not signify a VIRGIN only; for it is applied, Prov. xxx. 19. to signify a young married woman." I answer, that this latter text is no proof of the contrary doctrine: the words דרך גבר בעלמה derec geber be-âlmah, the way of a man with a maid, cannot be proved to mean that for which it is produced: besides, one of De Rossi's MSS. reads בעלמיו be-âlmaiv, the way of a strong, or stout, man (גבר geber) IN HIS YOUTH; and in this reading the Syriac, Septuagint, Vulgate, and Arabic, agree; which are followed by the first version in the English language, as it stands in a MS. in my own possession—the wife of a man in his waring youthe: so that this place, the only one that can with any probability of success, be produced, were the interpretation contended for correct, which I am by no means disposed to admit, proves nothing. Besides, the consent of so many versions in the opposite meaning, deprives it of much of its influence in this question.

and shall bring forth a son, and [a] they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.

The word עלמה âlmah, comes from עלם âlam, to lie hid, be concealed; and we are told, that "virgins were so called because they were concealed or closely kept up in their fathers' houses, till the time of their marriage." This is not correct: see the case of Rebecca, Gen. xxiv. 43. and my note there: that of Rachel, Gen. xxix. 6, 9. and the note there also: and see the case of Miriam, the sister of Moses, Exod. ii. 8. and also the Chaldee paraphrase on Lam. i. 4. where the virgins are represented as going out in the dance. And see also the whole history of Ruth. This, being concealed, or kept at home, on which so much stress is laid, is purely fanciful; for we find, that young unmarried women drew water, kept sheep, gleaned publicly in the fields, &c. &c. and the same works they perform among the Turcomans to the present day. This reason, therefore, does not account for the radical meaning of the word; and we must seek it elsewhere. Another well known and often used root in the Hebrew tongue, will cast light on this subject. This is גלה galah, which signifies to reveal, make manifest, or uncover, and is often applied to matrimonial connections, in different parts of the Mosaic Law: עלם âlam, therefore, may be considered as implying the concealment of the virgin, as such, till lawful marriage had taken place. A virgin was not called עלמה âlmah, because she was concealed by being kept at home in her father's house, which is not true, but literally and physically, because, as a woman, she had not been uncovered—she had not known man. This fully applies to the blessed virgin, see Luke i. 34. "How can this be, seeing I know no man?" and this text throws much light on the subject before us. This also is in perfect agreement with the ancient prophecy, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent," Gen. iii. 15. for the person who was to destroy the work of the devil, was to be the progeny of the woman, without any concurrence of the man. And hence, the text in Genesis speaks as fully of the virgin state of the person, from whom Christ, according to the flesh, should come, as that in the prophet, or this in the Evangelist. According to the original promise, there was to be a seed, a human being, who should destroy sin; but this seed or human being, must come from the woman ALONE: and no woman ALONE, could produce such a human being, without being a virgin. Hence, A virgin shall bear a son, is the very spirit and meaning of the original text, independently of the illustration given by the prophet: and the fact recorded by the Evangelist, is the proof of the whole. But how could that be a sign to Ahaz, which was to take place so many hundred of years after? I answer, the meaning of the prophet is plain: not only Rezin and Pekah should be unsuccessful against Jerusalem at that time, which was the fact; but Jerusalem, Judea, and the house of David, should be both preserved, notwithstanding their depressed state, and the multitude of their adversaries, till the time should come, when a VIRGIN should bear a son. This is a most remarkable circumstance—the house of David could never fail, till a virgin should conceive and bear a son—nor did it: but when that incredible and miraculous fact did take place, the kingdom and house of David became extinct! This is an irrefragable confutation of every argument a Jew can offer in vindication of his opposition to the gospel of Christ. Either the prophecy in Isaiah has been fulfilled, or the kingdom and house of David are yet standing. But the kingdom of David, we know, is destroyed: and where is the man, Jew or Gentile, that can shew us a single descendant of David, on the face of the earth? The prophecy could not fail—the kingdom and house of David have failed—the virgin, therefore, must have brought forth her son—and this son is Jesus, the Christ. Thus Moses, Isaiah, and Matthew concur; and facts the most unequivocal, have confirmed the whole! Behold, the wisdom and providence of God!

Notwithstanding what has been said above, it may be asked, In what sense could this name Immanuel be applied to Jesus Christ, if he be not truly and properly GOD? Could the Spirit of truth ever design that Christians should receive him as an angel or a mere man, and yet, in the very beginning of the gospel history, apply a character to him, which belongs only to the Most High God? Surely no. In what sense then, is Christ GOD WITH US? Jesus is called Immanuel, or God with us, in his incar- nation.—God united to our nature—God with man—God in man.—God with us, by his continual protection.—God with us, by the influences of his Holy Spirit—in the holy sacrament,—in the preaching of his word—in private prayer. And God with us, through every action of our life, that we begin, continue, and end in his name. He is God with us, to comfort, enlighten, protect, and defend us in every time of temptation and trial, in the hour of death, in the day of judgment; and God with us, and in us, and we, with and in him, to all eternity.

Verse 25. Her first-born son] Τον υιον αυτης τον πρωτοτοκον. Literally, That son of her's, the first-born one. That Mary might have had other children, any person may reasonably and piously believe; that she had others, many think exceedingly probable, and that this text is at least an indirect proof of it. However this may be, the perpetual virginity of Mary should not be made an article of faith. God has not made it one—indeed it can hardly bear the light of several texts in the Gospels.

He knew her not] Had no matrimonial intercourse with her—TILL she had brought forth that son of her's, of whom the Evangelist had been just speaking, the first-born, the eldest of the family, to whom the birth-right belonged, and who was miraculously born before she knew any man, being yet in a state of virginity. See on chap. xiii. 55. The virginity of Mary, previously to the birth of Christ, is an article of the utmost consequence to the Christian system; and therefore it is an article of faith: her perpetual virginity is of no consequence; and the learned labour spent to prove it, has produced a mere castle in the air. The thing is possible; but it never has been, and never can be proved.

He called his name JESUS] This name was given by the command of God, see ver. 16. and was imposed on Christ when eight days old; for then, according to the Jewish law, he was circumcised: thus he had the name of Saviour given, when he first began to shed that blood, without which there could be no remission of sins.

The goodness of God is manifested, not only in his giving his son to save a lost world; but also in the choice of the persons who were his progenitors: among whom we find, First, SAINTS, to excite our courage: Abraham, remarkable for his faith; Isaac, for his obedience; and Jacob, for his fervour and constancy.

Secondly, Penitent SINNERS, to excite our confidence: such as David, Manasses, &c.

Thirdly, Sinners, of whose repentance and salvation we hear nothing; to put us on our guard. Who can read the account of idolatrous Solomon, who, from the whole evidence of the sacred history, died in his sins, without trembling?

Four WOMEN are mentioned in this genealogy: two of these were adulteresses, Tamar and Bathsheba; and two were Gentiles, Rahab and Ruth, and strangers to the covenant of promise; to teach us, that Jesus Christ came to save sinners; and that though strangers to his people, we are not on that account, excluded from a salvation which God has designed for all men. He is not the God of the Jews only; he is also the God of the Gentiles.

The state of the royal family of David, the circumstances of the holy virgin and her spouse Joseph, the very remarkable prophecy of Isaiah, the literal and circumstantial fulfilment of it, the names given to our blessed Lord, the genealogical scroll of the family, &c. &c. are all so many proofs of the wisdom, goodness, and providence of God. Every occurrence seems, at first view, to be abandoned to fortuitous influence, and yet the result of each, shews, that God managed the whole. These circumstances are of the greatest importance; nor can the Christian Reader reflect on them without an increase of his faith and his piety.

Wise men come from the East to worship Christ, 1, 2. Herod, hearing of the birth of our Lord, is greatly troubled, 3; and makes enquiry of the chief priests and scribes, where the Christ should be born, 4. They inform him of the prophecy relative to Bethlehem, 5, 6. The wise men, going to Bethlehem, are desired by Herod to bring him word when they have found the child, pretending that he wished to do him homage, 7, 8. The wise men are directed by a star to the place where the young child lay, adore him, and offer him gifts, 9—11. Being warned of God not to return to Herod, they depart into their own country another way, 12. Joseph and Mary are divinely warned to escape into Egypt, because Herod sought to destroy Jesus, 13, 14. They obey and continue in Egypt till the death of Herod, 15. Herod finding that the wise men did not return, is enraged, and orders all the young children in Bethlehem, under two years of age, to be massacred, 16—18. Herod dies, and Joseph is divinely warned to return to the land of Israel, 19—21. Finding that Archelaus reigned in Judea in place of his father Herod, he goes to Galilee, and takes up his residence at Nazareth, 22, 23.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. Bethlehem of Judea] This city is mentioned in Judges xvii. 7. and must be distinguished from another of the same name in the tribe of Zebulon, Josh. xix. 15. It is likewise called Ephrath, Gen. xlviii. 7. or Ephratah, Mic. v. 2. and its inhabitants Ephrathites, Ruth i. 2. 1 Sam. xvii. 12. It is situated on the declivity of a hill, about six miles from Jerusalem. בית לחם Beth-lechem, in Hebrew, signifies the house of bread. And the name may be considered as very properly applied to that place where Jesus, the Messiah, the true bread that came down from heaven, was manifested, for to give life to the world. But לחם lehem also signifies flesh, and is applied to that part of the sacrifice which was burnt upon the altar. See Lev. iii. 11—16. xxi. 6. The word is also used to signify a carcase, Zeph. i. 17. The Arabic version has بيت لحم Beet lehem, and the Persic بيت اللحم Beet allehem: but لحم lehem, in Arabic, never signifies bread, but always means flesh. Hence it is more proper to consider the name as signifying the house of flesh, or, as some might suppose, the house of the incarnation, i. e. the place where God was manifested in the flesh for the salvation of a lost world.

In the days of Herod the king] This was HEROD, improperly denominated the GREAT, the son of Antipater, an Idumean: he reigned 37 years in Judea, reckoning from the time he was created king of that country by the Romans. Our blessed Lord was born in the last year of his reign; and at this time, the sceptre had literally departed from Judah, a foreigner being now upon the throne.

As there are several princes of this name mentioned in the New Testament, it may be well to give a list of them here, together with their genealogy.

Herod, the Great, married ten wives, by whom he had several children, Euseb. l. 1. c. 9. p. 27. The first was Doris, thought to be an Idumean, whom he married when but a private individual; by her he had Antipater, the eldest of all his sons; whom he caused to be executed five days before his own death.

His second wife was Mariamne, daughter to Hircanus the sole surviving person of the Asmonean, or Maccabean, race. Herod put her to death. She was the mother of Alexander and Aristobulus, whom Herod had executed at Sebastia, (Joseph. Antiq. l. xvi. c. 13.—de Bello l. i. c. 17.) on an accusation of having entered into a conspiracy against him. Aristobulus left three children, whom I shall notice hereafter.

His third wife was Mariamne, the daughter of Simon, a person of some note in Jerusalem, whom Herod made High-priest in order to obtain his daughter. She was the mother of Herod Philippus, or Herod Philip, and Salome. Herod or Philip married Herodias, mother to Salome, the famous dancer, who demanded the head of John the Baptist, Mark vi. 22. Salome had been placed in the will of Herod the Great, as second heir after Antipater; but her name was erased, when it was discovered that Mariamne her mother, was an accomplice in the crimes of Antipater, son of Herod the Great. Joseph. de Bello, lib. i. c. 18, 19, 20.

His fourth wife was Malthaké, a Samaritan, whose sons were Archelaus and Philip. The first enjoyed half his father's kingdom under the name of Tetrarch, viz. Idumea, Judea, and Samaria: Joseph. Antiq. l. xvii. c. 11. He reigned nine years; but being accused and arraigned before the Emperor Augustus, he was banished to Vienna, where he died: Joseph Antiq. l. xvii. c. 15. This is the Archelaus mentioned in verse 22.

His brother Philip married Salome, the famous dancer, the daughter of Herodias; he died without children, and she was afterwards married to Aristobulus.

The fifth wife of Herod the Great was Cleopatra of Jerusalem. She was the mother of Herod, surnamed Antipas, who married Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip, while he was still living. Being reproved for this act by John the Baptist, Matt. xiv. 3. Mark vi. 17. Luke iii. 19. and having imprisoned this holy man, he caused him to be beheaded, agreeable to the promise he had rashly made to the daughter of his wife Herodias, who had pleased him with her dancing. He attempted to seize the person of Jesus Christ, and to put him to death. It was to this prince, that Pilate sent our Lord, Luke xiii. 31—32. He was banished to Lyons, and then to Spain, where both he and his wife Herodias died. Joseph. Antiq. l. xv. c. 14.—de Bello, l. ii. c. 8.

The sixth wife of Herod the Great was Pallas, by whom he had Phasaelus: his history is no ways connected with the New Testament.

The seventh was named Phædra, the mother of Roxana, who married the son of Pheroras.

The eighth was Elpida, mother of Salome, who married another son of Pheroras.

With the names of two other wives of Herod we are not acquainted; but they are not connected with our history, any more than are Pallas, Phædra, and Elpida, whose names I merely notice, to avoid the accusation of inaccuracy.

ARISTOBULUS, the son of Herod the Great, by Mariamne, a descendant of the Asmoneans, left two sons and a daughter, viz. Agrippa, Herod, and Herodius, so famous for her incestuous marriage with Antipas, in the lifetime of his brother Philip.

AGRIPPA, otherwise named Herod, who was imprisoned by Tiberius for something he had inconsiderately said against him, was released from prison by Caligula, who made him king of Judea: Joseph. Antiq. l. xviii. c. 8. It was this prince who put St. James to death, and imprisoned Peter, as mentioned in xii. of Acts. He died at Cæsarea, in the way mentioned in the Acts, as well as by Josephus, Antiq. l. xix. c. 7. He left a son named Agrippa, who is mentioned below.

HEROD, the second son of Aristobulus, was king of Chalcis, and after the death of his brother, obtained permission of the emperor to keep the ornaments belonging to the High priest, and to nominate whom he pleased to that office: Joseph. Antiq. l. xx. c. 1. He had a son named Aristobulus, to whom Nero gave Armenia the lesser, and who married Salome, the famous dancer, daughter to Herodias.

AGRIPPA, son of Herod Agrippa, king of Judea, and grandson to Aristobulus and Mariamne; he was at first king of Chalcis, and afterwards tetrarch of Galilee, in the room of his uncle Philip: Joseph. Antiq. l. xx. c. 5. It was before him, his sister Berenice and Felix, who had married Drusilla, Agrippa's second daughter, that St. Paul pleaded his cause, as mentioned Acts xxvi.

HERODIAS, the daughter of Mariamne and Aristobulus, is the person of whom we have already spoken, who married successively the two brothers Philip and Antipas, her uncles, and who occasioned the death of John the Baptist. By her first husband, she had Salome, the dancer, who was married to Philip, tetrarch of the Trachonitis, the son of Herod the Great. Salome having had no children by him, she was married to Aristobulus, her cousin german, son of Herod, king of Chalcis, and brother to Agrippa and Herodias: she had by this husband several children.

This is nearly all that is necessary to be known relative to the race of the Herods, in order to distinguish the particular persons of this family mentioned in the New Testament. See Basnage, Calmet, and Josephus.

There came wise men from the East] Or, Magi came from the eastern countries. "The Jews believed that there were prophets in the kingdom of Saba and Arabia, who were of the posterity of Abraham by Keturah: and that they taught in the name of God, what they had received in tradition from the mouth of Abraham."—WHITBY. That many Jews were mixed with this people there is little doubt; and that these eastern Magi or philosophers, astrologers or whatever else they were, might have been originally of that class, there is room to believe. These, knowing the promise of the Messiah, were now, probably, like other believing Jews, waiting for the consolation of Israel. The Persic translator renders the Greek Μαγοι by مجوسیان mejooseean, which properly signifies a worshipper of fire; and from which we have our word magician. It is very probable that the ancient Persians, who were considered as worshippers of fire, only honoured it as the symbolical representation of the Deity: and seeing this unusual appearance, might consider it as a sign, that the God they worshipped was about to manifest himself among men. Therefore they say, We have seen his star—and are come to worship him; but it is more likely, that the Greeks made their Μαγοι Magi, which we translate wise men, from the Persian مغ Mogh and مغان Moghan, which the Kushuf ul Loghat, a very eminent Persian lexicon, explains by آتش پرست atush perest, a worshipper of fire; which the Persians suppose all the inhabitants of Ur in Chaldea were, among whom the prophet Abraham was brought up. The Mohammedans apply this title by way of derision to Christian monks in their associate capacity; and by a yet stronger catachresis, they apply it to a tavern, and the people that frequent it. Also, to ridicule in the most forcible manner the Christian priesthood, they call the tavern-keeper مغان پیر peeri Mughan, the priest, or chief of the idolaters. It is very probable, that the persons mentioned by the Evangelist were a sort of astrologers, probably of Jewish extraction, that they lived in Arabia Felix, and for the reasons above given, came to worship their new born sovereign. It is worthy of remark, that the Anglo-Saxon translates the word Μαγοι by tungal-piteȝan, which signifies astrologers, from tunegol, a star or planet, and piteȝ, to know or understand.

Verse 2. We have seen his star] Having discovered an unusual luminous appearance or meteor in the heavens, supposing these persons to have been Jews, and knowing the prophecies relative to the redemption of Israel, they probably considered this to be the star mentioned by Baalam, Numb. xxiv. 17. See the note there.

In the East] Εν τη ανατολη, At its rise. Ανατολη and δυσμη are used in the New Testament for east and west.

To worship him] Or, To do him homage: προσκυνησαι αυτω. The word προσκυνεω, which is compounded of προς to, and κυων a dog, signifies to crouch and fawn, like a dog at his master's feet. It means, to prostrate oneself to another, according to the eastern custom, which is still in use. In this act, the per- son kneels, and puts his head between his knees, his forehead at the same time touching the ground. It was used to express both civil and religious reverence. In Hindostan, religious homage is paid, by prostrating the body at full length, so that the two knees, the two hands, forehead, nose, and cheeks, all touch the earth at the same time. This kind of homage is paid also to great men. AYEEN AKBERY, vol. iii. p. 227.

As to what is here called a star, some make it a meteor, others a luminous appearance like an Aurora Borealis; others a comet! There is no doubt, the appearance made was very striking: but it seems to have been a simple meteor provided for the occasion. See on ver. 9.

Verse 3. When Herod—heard these things, he was troubled] Herod's consternation was probably occasioned by the agreement of the account of the Magi, with an opinion predominant throughout the East, and particularly in Judea, that some great personage would soon make his appearance, for the deliverance of Israel from their enemies; and would take upon himself universal empire.

SUETONIUS and TACITUS, two Roman historians, mention this. Their words are very remarkable:

Percrebuerat Oriente toto, vetus et constans opinio, esse in fatis, ut eo tempore Judææ profecti rerum potirentur. Id de imperatore Romano, quantum eventu postea predictum patuit, Judæi ad se trahentes, rebellárunt. SUETON. VESP. "An ancient and settled persuasion prevailed throughout the East, that the Fates had decreed some to proceed from Judea, who should attain universal empire. This persuasion, which the event proved to respect the Roman emperor, the Jews applied to themselves, and therefore rebelled."

The words of Tacitus are nearly similar:

Pluribus persuasio inerat, antiquis sacerdotum literis contineri, eo ipso tempore fore, ut valesceret Oriens, profectique Judææ rerum potirentur. Quæ ambages Vespasianum ac Titum prædixerant.

"Many were persuaded, that it was contained in the ancient books of their priests, that at that very time the East should prevail: and that some should proceed from Judea and possess the dominion. It was Vespasian and Titus that these ambiguous prophecies predicted." Histor. v.

Verse 4. The chief priests] Not only the high-priest for the time being, called כהן הראש cohen ha-rosh, 2 Kings xxv. 18. and his deputy called כהן משנה cohen mishneh, with those who had formerly borne the high-priest's office; but also, the chiefs or heads of the twenty-four sacerdotal families, which David distributed into so many courses, 1 Chron. xxiv. These latter are stiled שרי הכהנים sarey ha-cohanim, chief of the priests, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14. Ezra viii. 24. and ראשי הכהנים roshey ha-cohanim, heads of the priests, Neh. xii. 7. Josephus calls them by the same name as the writers of the New Testament. In his life, sect. 8. he mentions πολλους—των Αρχιερεων, MANY of the chief priests. The word is used in the singular in this last sense, for a chief of the priests, Acts xix. 14.

Scribes] The word Γραμματευς, in the Septuagint, is used for a political officer, whose business it was to assist kings and civil magistrates, and to keep an account in writing of public acts and occurrences. Such an officer is called in Hebrew כפר המלך seper ha-melech, ὁ γραμματευς του βασιλεως, the king's scribe, or secretary. See LXX. 2 Kings xii. 10.

The word is often used by the LXX. for a man of learning, especially for one skilled in the Mosaic law: and in the same sense, it is used by the New Testament writers. Γραμματευς is therefore to be understood as always implying a man of letters, or learning, capable of instructing the people. The derivation of the name proves this to be the genuine meaning of the word γραμμα, a letter, or character, in writing: or γραμματα, letters, learning, erudition, and especially that gained from books. The Hebrew שפר or שופר sopher, from saphar, to tell, count, cypher, signifies both a book, volume, roll, &c. and a notary, recorder, or historian; and always signifies a man of learning.

The word is used Acts xix. 35. for a civil magistrate at Ephesus, probably such an one as we would term recorder. It appears that Herod at this time gathered the whole Sanhedrin, in order to get the fullest information on a subject, by which all his jealous fears had been alarmed.

Verse 5. In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written by the prophet] As there have been several confused notions among the Jews, relative not only to the Messiah, and his character, but also to the time of his birth; it may be necessary to add to what has already been said on this subject, the following extracts from the Talmudists and Gemarists, quoted by LIGHTFOOT. At the close of a long dissertation on the year of our Lord's birth, (which he places in the 35th of the reign of Herod, not the last or 37th as above,) he says, "It will not be improper here to produce the Gemarists themselves openly confessing that the Messias had been born, a good while ago before their times. For so they write: After this the children of Israel shall be converted, and shall enquire after the Lord their God, and David their king: Hos. iii. 5.

Our Rabbins say, That is King Messias, If he be among the living, his name is David, or if dead, David is his name. R. Tanchum said, Thus I prove it: He sheweth mercy to David his Messiah. (Psalm xviii. 50.) R. Joshua ben Levi saith, His name is צמח tsemach, a Branch. (Zech. iii. 8.) R. Juban bar Arbu saith, His name is Menahem. (That is, παρακλητος, the Comforter.) "And that which happened to a certain Jew, as he was ploughing, agreeth with this business. A certain Arabian travelling, and hearing the ox bellow, said to the Jew at plough, O Jew, loose thy oxen, and loose thy ploughs, for behold! the temple is laid waste. The ox bellowed the second time; the Arabian saith to him, O Jew, Jew, yoke thy oxen, and fit thy ploughs: והא יליד מלכא משיחא For behold! King Messiah is born. But saith the Jew, What is his name? Menahem, saith he. (i. e. the Comforter.) And what is the name of his Father? Hezekiah, saith the Arabian. To whom the Jew, But whence is He? The other answered, From the palace of the king of Bethlehem Judah. Away he went, and sold his oxen and his ploughs, and became a seller of infants' swaddling clothes, going about from town to town. When he came to that city, (Bethlehem) all the women bought of him, but the mother of Menahem bought nothing. He heard the voice of the women saying, O thou mother of Menahem, thou mother of Menahem, carry thy son the things that are here sold. But she replied, May the enemies of Israel be strangled, because on the day that he was born, the temple was laid waste. To whom he said, But we hoped, that as it was laid waste at his feet, so at his feet it would be built again. She saith, I have no money. To whom he replied, But why should this be prejudicial to him? Carry him what you buy here, and if you have no money to day, after some days I will come back and receive it. After some days, he returned to that city, and saith to her, How does the little infant? And she said, From the time you saw me last, spirits and tempests came, and snatched him away out of my hands." R. Bon saith, What need have we to learn from an Arabian? Is it not plainly written, And Lebanon shall fall before the powerful one? (Isa. x. 34.) And what follows after? A branch shall come out of the root of Jesse. (Isa. xi. 1.)

"The Babylonian doctors yield us a confession not very unlike the former. R. Charinah saith: After four hundred years are past from the destruction of the temple, if any one shall say to you, Take to thyself for one penny a field worth a thousand pence, do not take it. And again, After four thousand two hundred thirty and one years from the creation of the world, if any shall say to you, Take for a penny, a field worth a thousand pence, take it not. The gloss is, For that is the time of redemption, and you shall be brought back to the holy mountain, to the inheritance of your fathers, why, therefore, should you misspend your penny?

"You may fetch the reason of this calculation, if you have leisure, out of the tract Sanhedrin. The tradition of the school of Elias, the world is to last six thousand years, &c. And a little after, Elias said to Rabh Judah, The world shall last not less than eighty-five jubilees: and in the last jubilee shall the Son of David come. He saith to him, Whether in the beginning of it, or in the end? He answered him, I know not. Whether is this whole time to be finished first, or not? He answered him, I know not. But Rabh Asher asserts, that he answered thus, Until then, expect him not, but from thence expect him. Hear your own countrymen, O Jew, how many centuries of years are past by and gone from the eighty-fifth jubilee of the world, that is, the year MMMMCCL, and yet the Messias of your expectation is not yet come.

"Daniel's weeks had so clearly defined the time of the true Messias his coming, that the minds of the whole nation were raised into the expectation of him. Hence it was doubted of the Baptist, whether he were not the Messias, Luke iii. 15. Hence it was, that the Jews, are gathered together from all countries, unto Jerusalem, Acts ii. expecting, and coming to see, because at that time, the term of revealing the Messias, that had been prefixed by Daniel, was come. Hence it was, that there was so great a number of false Christs, Matt. xxiv. 5, &c. taking the occasion of their impostures hence, that now the time of that great expectation was at hand, and fulfilled: and in one word, They thought the kingdom of God should presently appear: Luke xix. 11.

"But when those times of expectation were past, nor did such a Messias appear, as they expected, (for when they saw the true Messias, they would not see him) they first broke out into various, and those wild, conjectures of the time; and at length, all those conjectures coming to nothing, all ended in this curse, (the just cause of their eternal blindness) תפח רוחן של מחשבי קצין May their soul be confounded, who compute the times." They were fully aware, that the time foretold by the prophets, must be long since fulfilled; and that their obstinacy must be confounded by their own history, and the chronology of their own Scriptures; and therefore they have pronounced an anathema on those who shall attempt to examine, by chronological computations, the propheeies that predict his coming. Who can conceive a state of wilful blindness or determined obstinacy superior to this!

tinguish it from Bethlehem, in the tribe of Zebulon: Josh. xix. 15. See on ver. 1.

Art not the least] In Micah v. 2. it is read, Though thou be little—צעיר להיות tsâir lehayoth, little to be. Houbigant, struck with the oddness of the construction of the Hebrew, by dividing the last word, and making a small change in two of the letters, makes the Prophet agree with the Evangelist, צעיר לא היית tsâir lo hayita, thou art not the least. Several learned men are of opinion, that the copy from which St. Matthew quoted, had the text in this way. However, some MSS. of very good note, among which is the Codex Bezæ, have μη ελαχιστη ει, for ουδαμως ελαχιστη ει, Art thou not the least? This reconciles the Prophet and Evangelist without farther trouble. See the authorities for this reading in Griesbach and Wetstein.

Among the princes of Juda] In Micah v. 2. it is, the thousands of Judah. There is much reason to believe, that each tribe was divided into small portions called thousands, as in England certain small divisions of countries are called hundreds. For the proof of the first, the Reader is referred to Judg. vi. 15. where, instead of my FAMILY is poor in Manasseh, the Hebrew is, my THOUSAND (אלפי) is the meanest in Manasseh: and to 1 Sam. x. 19. Present yourselves before the Lord by your TRIBES and by your THOUSANDS: and to 1 Chron. xii. 20. Captains of the THOUSANDS of Manasseh. Now these THOUSANDS being petty governments, Matthew renders them by the word ηγεμοσιν, because the word princes or governors was more intelligible in the Greek tongue, than thousands, though in this case, they both signify the same. See Wakefield.

That shall rule my people Israel] Οστις ποιμανει, Who shall FEED my people. That is, as a shepherd feeds his flock. Among the Greeks, kings are called, by Homer λαων ποιμενες, shepherds of the people. This appellation probably originated from the pastoral employment, which kings and patriarchs did not blush to exercise in the times of primitive simplicity: and it might particularly refer to the case of David, the great type of Christ, who was a keeper of his father's sheep, before he was raised to the throne of Israel. As the government of a good king was similar to the care a good shepherd has of his flock, hence ποιμην signified both shepherd and king; and ποιμαινω, to feed and to rule, among the ancient Greeks.

Verse 8. That I may come and worship him also.] See ver. 2. and on Gen. xvii. 3. and Exod. iv. 31. What exquisite hypocrisy was here! he only wished to find out the child that he might murder him—but see, how that God who searches the heart, prevents the designs of wicked men from being accomplished!

Verse 9. In the East] Or, at its rise. See ver. 2.

Stood over where the young child was.] Super caput pueri, Over the head of the child, as the OPUS IMPERFECTUM, on this place, has it. See Griesbach's Var. Lect. So it appears to have been a simple luminous meteor, in a star-like form, and at a very short distance from the ground, otherwise it could not have ascertained the place where the child lay. But the last quoted reading, from the Opus Imperfectum, justifies the opinion, that the luminous appearance which had hitherto directed them, now encompassed the head of the child: and probably this gave the first idea to the ancient painters, of representing Christ in the manger, with a glory surrounding his head.

Verse 11. They presented unto him gifts] The people of the East never approached the presence of kings and great personages, without a present in their hands. This custom is often noticed in the Old Testament, and still prevails in the East, and in some of the newly discovered South-sea Islands.

Gold, and frankincense, and myrrh.] Some will have these gifts to be emblematic of the Divinity, regal office, and manhood of Christ. "They offered him incense as their God; gold as their king; and myrrh, as united to a human body, subject to suffering and death." Aurum, thus, myrrham, regique, DEO, HOMINIQUE, dona ferunt. JUVENCUS. themselves; and which were productions of their own country. The gold was probably a very providential supply, as on it, it is likely, they subsisted while in Egypt.

Verse 13. Flee into Egypt] Many Jews had settled in Egypt, not only those who had fled thither in the time of Jeremiah, see chap. xlviii. but many others who had settled there also, on account of the temple which Onias IV. had built at Heliopolis. Those who could speak the Greek tongue enjoyed many advantages in that country: besides, they had the Greek version of the Septuagint, which had been translated nearly 300 years before this time. Egypt was now a Roman province, and the rage of Herod could not pursue the holy family to this place. There is an apocryphal work in Arabic, called the Gospel of the infancy, which pretends to relate all the acts of Jesus and Mary while in Egypt. I have taken the pains to read this through, and have found it to be a piece of gross superstition, having nothing to entitle it to a shadow of credibility.

Verse 15. Out of Egypt have I called my son] This is quoted from Hos. xi. 1. where the deliverance of Israel, and that only, is referred to. But as that deliverance was extraordinary, it is very likely that it had passed into a proverb, so that "Out of Egypt have I called my son," might have been used to express any signal deliverance. I confess, I can see no other reference it can have to the case in hand, unless we suppose, which is possible, that God might have referred to this future bringing up of his Son Jesus from Egypt, under the type of the past deliverance of Israel from the same land. Midrash Tehillin, on Psal. ii. 7. has these remarkable words; I will publish a decree: this decree has been published in the Law, in the Prophets, and in the Hagiographia. In the Law, Israel is my firstborn son: Exod. iv. 22. In the Prophets, Behold, my servant shall deal prudently: Isai. lii. 13. In the Hagiographia, The Lord said unto my lord: Psal. cx. 1. All these passages, the Jews refer to the Messiah. See Schoetgen.

Verse 16. Slew all the children] This cruelty of Herod seems alluded to in very decisive terms by Macrobius, who flourished toward the conclusion of the fourth century. In his chapter De jocis Augusti in alios, et aliorum rursus in ipsum, he says, Cum audisset inter pueros, quos in Syria Herodes, rex Judeorum, intra bimatum jussit interfici, filium quoque ejus occisum, ait, Melius est Herodis PORCUM esse, quam FILIUM. "When he heard that among those male infants about two years old, which Herod, the king of the Jews, ordered to be slain in Syria, one of his sons was also murdered, he said: "It is better to be Herod's HOG than his SON." Saturn. lib. ii. c. 4. The point of this saying consists in this, that Herod, professing Judaism, his religion forbad his killing swine, or having any thing to do with their flesh; therefore, his hog would have been safe, where his son lost his life.

Verse 18. In Rama was there a voice heard] These words quoted from Jer. xxxi. 15. were originally spoken concerning the captivity of the ten tribes; but are here elegantly applied to the murder of the innocents at Bethlehem. As if he had said, Bethlehem at this time resembled Rama; for a Rachel might be said to weep over her children, which were slaughtered, or gone into captivity; so in Bethlehem, the mothers lamented bitterly their children, because they were slain. The word Θρηνος, lamentation, is omitted by the Codd. Vatic. Cypr. one of Selden's MSS. the Syriac, Arabic, Persic, Æthiopic, all the Itala, (except that in the Cod. Bezæ) Vulgate, and Saxon, several of the fathers, and above all Jeremiah, chap. xxxi. 15. from which it is quoted. Griesbach leaves it in the text with a note of doubtfulness.

Verse 20. They are dead] Both Herod and Antipater his son; though some think that the plural is here used for the singular, and that the death of Herod alone is here intended. But as Herod's son Antipater was at this time heir apparent to the throne, and he had cleared his way to it by procuring the death of both his elder brothers; he is probably alluded to here, as doubtless he entered into his father's designs. THEY are dead—Antipater was put to death by his father's command, five days before this execrable tyrant went to his own place. See Josephus, Antiq. xvi. 11. xvii. 9.

Verse 22. When he heard that Archelaus did reign] Herod having put Antipater his eldest son to death, altered his will, and thus disposed of his dominions: he gave the tetrarchy of Galilee and Petrea to his son Antipas: the tetrarchy of Gaulonitis, Trachonitis, Batanea, and Paneadis, to his son Philip: and left the kingdom of Judea to his eldest remaining son, Archelaus. This son partook of the cruel and blood-thirsty disposition of his father: at one of the passovers, he caused three thousand of the people to be put to death in the temple and city. For his tyranny and cruelty, Augustus deprived him of the government, and banished him. His character considered, Joseph, with great propriety, forbore to settle under his jurisdiction.

He turned aside into the parts of Galilee] Here Antipas governed, who is allowed to have been of a comparatively mild disposition: and being intent on building two cities, Julias and Tiberias, he endeavoured by a mild carriage and promises of considerable immunities, to entice people from other provinces to come and settle in them. He was besides, in a state of enmity with his brother Archelaus: this was a most favourable circumstance to the holy family; and though God did not permit them to go to any of the new cities, yet they dwelt in peace, safety, and comfort at Nazareth.

Verse 23. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets] It is difficult to ascertain by what prophets this was spoken. The margin usually refers to Judg. xiii. 5. where the angel, foretelling the birth of Samson, says, No razor shall come upon his head; for the child shall be a NAZARITE (נזיר nezir) unto God from the womb. The second passage usually referred to, is Isai. xi. 1. There shall come forth a rod from the stem of Jesse, and a BRANCH (נצר netser) shall grow out of his roots. That this refers to Christ, there is no doubt: Jeremiah, chap. xxiii. 5. is supposed to speak in the same language—I will raise unto David a righteous BRANCH: but here, the word is צמח tsemach, not נצר netser; and it is the same in the parallel place, Zech. iii. 8. vi. 12. therefore, these two prophets cannot be referred to: but the passages in Judges and Isaiah, may have been in the eye of the Evangelists, as well as the whole institution relative to the Nazarite, (נזיר nezir) delivered at large, Num. vi. where see the notes. As the Nazarite was the most pure and perfect institution under the law: it is possible, that God intended to point out by it, not only the perfection of our Lord, but also the purity of his followers. And it is likely, that before St. Matthew wrote this gospel, those afterwards called Christians, bore the appellation of Nazarites or Nazoreans, for so the Greek word, Ναζωραιος, should be written. Leaving the spiritual reference out of the question, the Nazarene, or Nazorean here, may mean simply an inhabitant or person of Nazareth; as Galilean does a person or inhabitant of Galilee. The Evangelist evidently designed to state, that neither the sojourning at Nazareth, nor our Lord being called a Nazarene, were fortuitous events, but were wisely determined and provided for in the providence of God; and therefore foretold by inspired men, or fore-represented by significant institutions.

But how shall we account for the manner in which St. Matthew and others apply this, and various other circumstances, to the fulfilment of ancient traditions? This question has greatly agitated divines and critics for more than a century. Surenhusius, Hebrew professor at Amsterdam, and editor of a very splendid and useful edition of the Mishna, in six vol. fol. published an express treatise on this subject, in 1713, full of deep research and sound criticism. He remarks great difference in the mode of quoting, used in the Sacred Writings: as, It hath been said—it is written—that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets—the Scrip- ture says—see what is said—the Scripture foreseeing—he saith —is it not written?—the saying that is written, &c. &c. With great pains and industry, he has collected ten rules out of the Talmud and the Rabbins, to explain and justify all the quotations made from the Old Testament in the New.

RULE I. Reading the words, not according to the regular vowel points, but to others substituted for them. He thinks this is done by Peter, Acts iii. 22, 23. by Stephen, Acts vii. 42, &c. and by Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 54. 2 Cor. viii. 15.

RULE II. Changing the letters, as done by St. Paul, Rom. ix. 33. 1 Cor. ix. 9, &c. Heb. viii. 9, &c. Heb. x. 5.

RULE III. Changing both letters and vowel points, as he supposes is done by St. Paul, Acts xiii. 40, 41. 2 Cor. viii. 15.

RULE. IV. Adding some letters, and retrenching others.

RULE V. Transposing words and letters.

RULE VI. Dividing one word into two.

RULE VII. Adding other words to make the sense more clear.

RULE VIII. Changing the original order of the words.

RULE IX. Changing the original order, and adding other words.

RULE X. Changing the original order, and adding and retrenching words, which he maintains is a method often used by St. Paul.

Let it be observed, that although all these rules are used by the Rabbins, yet, as far as they are employed by the sacred writers of the New Testament, they never, in any case, contradict what they quote from the Old, which cannot be said of the Rabbins: they only explain what they quote, or accommodate the passage to the facts then in question. And who will venture to say, that the Holy Spirit has not a right, in any subsequent period, to explain and illustrate his own meaning, by shewing that it had a greater extension in the divine mind, than could have been then perceived by men? And has HE not a right to add to what he has formerly said, if it seem right in his own sight? Is not the whole of the New Testament an addition to the Old, as the Apostolic Epistles are to the Narrative of our Lord's Life and Acts, as given by the Evangelists?

Gusset, Wolf, Rosenmuller and others, give four rules; according to which, the phrase, that it might be fulfilled, may be applied in the New Testament.

RULE I. When the thing predicted, is literally accomplished.

RULE II. When that is done, of which the Scripture has spoken, not in a literal sense, but in a spiritual sense.

RULE III. When a thing is done neither in a literal nor spiritual sense, according to the fact referred to in the Scripture; but is similar to that fact.

RULE IV. When that which has been mentioned in the Old Testament as formerly done, is accomplished in a larger and more extensive sense in the New Testament.

St. Matthew seems to quote according to all these rules; and it will be useful to the Reader, to keep them constantly in view. I may add here, that the writers of the New Testament seem often to differ from those of the Old, because they appear uniformly to quote from some copy of the Septuagint version; and most of their quotations agree verbally, and often even literally, with one or other of the copies of that version, which subsist to the present day. Want of attention to the difference of copies in the Septuagint version, has led some divines and critics into strange and even ridiculous mistakes, as they have taken that for THE SEPTUAGINT which existed in the printed copy before them; which sometimes happened not to be the most correct.

On the birth-place of our Lord, a pious and sensible man has made the following observations:

"At first sight, it seems of little consequence to know the place of Christ's nativity; for we should consider him as our Redeemer, whatever the circumstances might be which attended his mortal life. But, seeing it has pleased God to announce, beforehand, the place where the Saviour of the world should be born, it became necessary that it should happen precisely in that place; and that this should be one of the characteristics whereby Jesus Christ should be known to be the true Messiah.

"It is also a matter of small importance to us, where we may live, provided we find genuine happiness. There is no place on earth, however poor and despicable, but may have better and more happy inhabitants than many of those are, who dwell in the largest and most celebrated cities. Do we know a single place on the whole globe where the works of God do not appear under a thousand different forms, and where a person may not feel that blessed satisfaction which arises from a holy and christian life? For an individual, that place is preferable to all others, where he can get and do most good. For a number of people, that place is best where they can find the greatest number of wise and pious men. Every nation declines, in proportion as virtue and religion lose their influence on the minds of the inhabitants. The place where a young man first beheld the dawn, and the beauty of renewed nature, and with most lively sensations of joy and gratitude adored his God with all the veneration and love his heart was capable of; the place where a virtuous couple first met, and got acquainted; or where two friends gave each other the noblest proofs of their most tender affection; the village where one may have given, or seen, the most remarkable example of goodness, uprightness, and patience; such places, I say, must be dear to their hearts.

"Bethlehem was, according to this rule, notwithstanding its smallness, a most venerable place; seeing, that there, so many pious people had their abode; and that acts of peculiar piety had often been performed in it. First, the patriarch Jacob stopped some time in it, to erect a monument to his well-beloved Rachel. It was at Bethlehem that honest Naomi, and her modest daughter-in-law Ruth, gave such proofs of their faith and holiness; and in it Boaz, the generous benefactor, had his abode and his possessions. At Bethlehem the humble Jesse sojourned, the happy father of so many sons; the youngest of whom rose from the pastoral life to the throne of Israel. It was in this country that David formed the resolution of building a house for the Lord, and in which he shewed himself the true shepherd and father of his subjects, when, at the sight of the destroying angel, whose sword spread consternation and death on all hands, he made intercession for his people. It was in Bethlehem that Zerubbabel the prince was born, this descendant of David, who was the type of that Ruler and Shepherd, under whose empire Israel is one day to assemble, in order to enjoy uninterrupted happiness. Lastly, in this city the Son of God appeared; who, by his birth, laid the foundation of that salvation, which, as Redeemer, he was to purchase by his death for the whole world. Thus in places, which from their smallness are entitled to little notice, men sometimes spring, who become the benefactors of the human race. Often, an inconsiderable village has given birth to a man, who, by his wisdom, uprightness, and heroism, has been a blessing to whole kingdoms."

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. John the Baptist] John, surnamed The Baptist, because he required those to be baptized, who professed to be contrite because of their sins, was the son of a priest named Zacharias, and his wife Elizabeth, and was born about A. M. 3999, and about six months before our blessed Lord. Of his almost miraculous conception and birth, we have a circumstantial account in the Gospel of Luke, chap. i. to which, and the notes there, the Reader is requested to refer. For his fidelity in reproving Herod for his incest with his brother Philip's wife, he was cast into prison, no doubt at the suggestion of Herodias, the profligate woman in question. He was at last beheaded at her instigation, and his head given as a present to Salome, her daughter, who, by her elegant dancing, had highly gratified Herod, the paramour of her incestuous mother. His ministry was short; for he appears to have been put to death in the 27th or 28th year of the Christian æra.

Came—preaching] Κηρυσσων, proclaiming as a herald, a matter of great and solemn importance to men: the subject not his own, nor of himself: but from that God from whom alone he had received his commission. See on the nature and importance of the herald's office, at the end of this chapter. Κηρυσσειν, says Rosenmuller, de iis dicitur, qui in PLATEIS, in CAMPIS, in AERE aperto, ut a multis audiantur, vocem tollunt, &c. The verb κηρυσσειν is applied to those, who, in the streets, fields, and open air, lift up their voice, that they may be heard by many, and proclaim what has been committed to them by regal or public authority; as the KERUKES among the Greeks, and the PRECONES among the Romans."

The wilderness of Judea] That is, the country parts, as distinguished from the city; for in this sense the word wilderness, מדבר midbar or מדבריות midbarioth, is used among the Rabbins. John's manner of life gives no countenance to the Eremite or Hermit's life, so strongly recommended and applauded by the Roman church.

Verse 2. Repent] Μετανοειτε. This was the matter of the preaching. The verb μετανοεω, is either compounded of μετα, after, and νοειν, to understand, which signifies, that after hearing such preaching, the sinner is led to understand, that the way he has walked in was the way of misery, death, and hell. Or the word may be derived from μετα, after, and ανοια, madness, which intimates, that the whole life of a sin-by the prophet Esaias, saying, [a] The voice of one crying in the wilderness, [b] Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

4 And [c] the same John [d] had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was [e] locusts and [f] wild honey.

c Mark 1. 6.——d 2 Kings 1. 8. Zech. 13. 4.——e Lev. 11. 22.——f 1 Sam. 14. 25, 26.

ner is no other than a continued course of madness and folly: and if to live in a constant opposition to all the dictates of true wisdom; to wage war with his own best interests in time and eternity; to provoke and insult the Living God; and, by habitual sin, to prepare himself only for a state of misery, be evidences of insanity, every sinner exhibits them plentifully. It was from this notion of the word, that the Latins termed repentance resipiscentia, a growing wise again, from re and sapere; or, according to Tertullian, Resipiscentia quasi receptio mentis ad se, restoring the mind to itself: Contra Marcion, lib. ii. Repentance then implies, that a measure of divine wisdom is communicated to the sinner, and that he thereby becomes wise to salvation. That his mind, purposes, opinions, and inclinations, are changed; and that, in consequence, there is a total change in his conduct. It need scarcely be remarked, that, in this state, a man feels deep anguish of soul, because he has sinned against God, unfitted himself for heaven, and exposed his soul to hell. Hence, a true penitent has that sorrow, whereby he forsakes sin, not only because it has been ruinous to his own soul, but because it has been offensive to God.

The kingdom of heaven is at hand] Referring to the prophecy of Daniel, chap. vii. 13, 14. where the reign of Christ among men is expressly foretold. This phrase, and the kingdom of God, mean the same thing, viz. the dispensation of infinite mercy, and manifestation of eternal truth, by Christ Jesus; producing the true knowledge of God, accompanied with that worship which is pure and holy, worthy of that God who is its institutor and its object. But why is this called a kingdom? Because it has its laws, all the moral precepts of the Gospel: its subjects, all who believe in Christ Jesus: and its king, the Sovereign of heaven and earth. N. B. Jesus Christ never saved a soul which he did not govern; nor is this Christ precious or estimable to any man who does not feel a spirit of subjection to the Divine will.

But why is it called the kingdom of HEAVEN? Because God designed that his kingdom of grace here, should resemble the kingdom of glory above. And hence our Lord teaches us to pray, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. The kingdom of heaven is not meat and drink, says St. Paul, Rom. xiv. 17. does not consist in the gratification of sensual passions, or worldly ambition: but is righteousness, peace, and joy, in the Holy Ghost. Now what can there be more than this in glory? Righteousness, without mixture of sin; peace, without strife or contention; joy in the Holy Ghost, spiritual joy, without mixture of misery! And all this, it is possible, by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, to enjoy here below. How then does heaven itself differ from this state? Answer. It makes the righteousness eternal, the peace eternal, and the joy eternal. This is the heaven of heavens! The phrase, kingdom of heaven, מלכות שמים malcuth shamayim, is frequently used by the Rabbinical writers, and always means, the purity of the Divine worship, and the blessedness which a righteous man feels when employed in it.

It is farther added, This kingdom is at hand. The dispensation of the glorious gospel was now about to be fully opened, and the Jews were to have the first offers of salvation. This kingdom is also at hand to us, and wherever Christ crucified is preached, there is salvation to be found. JESUS is proclaimed to thee, O Man! as infinitely able and willing to save. Believe in his name—cast thy soul upon his atonement, and enter into rest!

Verse 3. The voice of one crying in the wilderness] Or, A voice of a cryer in the wilderness. This is quoted from Isai. xl. 3. which clearly proves, that John the Baptist was the person of whom the Prophet spoke.

The idea is taken from the practice of eastern monarchs, who, whenever they entered upon an expedition, or took a journey through a desert country, sent harbingers before them, to prepare all things for their passage; and pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments. The officers appointed to superintend such preparations, were called by the Latins, Stratores.

Diodorus's account of the march of Semiramis into Media and Persia, will give us a clear notion of the preparation of the way for a royal expedition. "In her march to Ecbatane, she came to the Zarcean mountain, which extending many furlongs, and being full of craggy precipices and deep hollows, could not be passed without making a great compass about. Being therefore desirous of leaving an everlasting memorial of herself, as well as shortening the way, she ordered the precipices to be digged down, and the hollows to be filled up: and, at a great expense, she made a shorter and more expeditious road, which, to this day, is called from her, The Road of Semiramis. Afterwards she went into Persia, and all the other countries of Asia, subject to her dominion; and wherever she went, she ordered the mountains and precipices to be levelled, raised causeways in the plain country, and, at a great expense, made the ways passable." Diod. Sic. lib. ii. and Bp. Lowth.

The Jewish church was that desert country, to which John was sent, to announce the coming of the Messiah. It was destitute at that time of all religious cultivation, and of the spirit and practice of piety; and John was sent to prepare the way of the Lord, by preaching the doctrine of repentance. The desert is therefore to be considered, as affording a proper emblem of the rude state of the Jewish church, which was the true wilderness meant by the Prophet, and in which John was to prepare the way of the promised Messiah. The awful importance of the matter, and the vehemence of the manner of the Baptist's preaching, probably acquired him the character of the crier, Βοων.

For the meaning of the word JOHN, see the note on Mark i. 4.

Verse 4. His raiment of camel's hair] A sort of coarse or rough covering, which, it appears, was common to the prophets, Zech. xiii. 4. In such a garment we find Elijah clothed, 2 Kings i. 8. And as John had been designed under the name of this prophet, Mal. iv. 5. whose spirit and qualifications he was to possess, Luke i. 17. he took the same habit, and lived in the same state of self-denial.

His meat was locusts] Ακριδες. Ακρις may either signify the insect called the locust, which makes still a part of the food in the land of Judea: or the top of a plant. Many eminent commentators are of the latter opinion; but the first is the most likely. The Saxon translator has ȝæɼɼcapan grasshoppers.

Wild honey.] Such as he got in the rocks and hollows of trees, and which abounded in Judea; see 1 Sam. xiv. 26. It is most likely that the dried locusts, which are an article of food in Asiatic countries to the present day, were fried in the honey, or compounded in some manner with it. The Gospel according to the Hebrews, as quoted by Epiphanius, seems to have taken a similar view of the subject, as it adds here to the text, Ου η γευσις ην του μαννα, ως εγκρις εν ελαιω. And its taste was like manna, as a sweet cake baked in oil.

Verse 6. In Jordan] Many of the best MSS. and versions, with Mark i. 5. add ποταμω, the river Jordan; but the definitive article, with which the word is generally accompanied, both in the Hebrew and the Greek, is sufficient; and our article the, which should ever be used in the translation, expresses the force of the other.

Verse 6. Were baptized] In what form baptism was originally administered, has been deemed a subject worthy of serious dispute. Were the people dipped or sprinkled? for it is certain βαπτω and βαπτιζω mean both. They were all dipped, say some. Can any man suppose, that it was possible for John to dip all the inhabitants of Jerusalem and Judea, and of all the country round about the Jordan? Were both men and women dipped, for certainly both came to his baptism? This could never have comported either with safety or with decency. Were they dipped in their clothes? This would have endangered their lives, if they had not with them change of raiment: and as such a baptism as John's (however administered) was, in several respects, a new thing in Judea, it is not at all likely, that the people would come thus provided. But suppose these were dipped, which I think it would be impossible to prove, does it follow, that in all regions of the world, men and women must be dipped, in order to be evangelically baptized? In the eastern countries, bathings were frequent, because of the heat of the climate, it being there so necessary to cleanliness and health; but could our climate, or a more northerly one, admit of this with safety, for at least three fourths of the year? We may rest assured that it could not. And may we not presume, that if John had opened his commission in the North of Great Britain, for many months of the year, he would have dipped neither man nor woman, unless he could have procured a tepid bath? Those who are dipped or immersed in water in the name of the Holy Trinity, I believe to be evangelically baptized. Those who are washed or sprinkled with water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, I believe to be equally so: and the repetition of such a baptism, I believe to be profane. Others have a right to believe the contrary, if they see good. After all, it is the thing signified, and not the mode, which is the essential part of the sacrament. See the note on Mark x. 16.

Confessing their sins.] Εξομολογουμενοι, earnestly acknowledging, that their sins were their own. And thus taking the whole blame upon themselves, and laying nothing to the charge of GOD or man. This is essential to true repentance; and till a man take the whole blame on himself, he cannot feel the absolute need he has of casting his soul on the mercy of God, that he may be saved.

Verse 7. Pharisees] A very numerous sect among the Jews, who, in their origin, were, very probably, a pure and holy people. It is likely, that they got the name of Pharisees, i. e. Separatists (from פרש pharash, to separate) from their separating themselves from the pollution of the Jewish national worship; and hence, the word in the Anglo-saxon version is ȝunᵭoȝ-halȝan, holy persons who stand apart, or by themselves; but, in process of time, like all religious sects and par- ties, they degenerated: they lost the spirit of their institution, they ceased to recur to first principles, and had only the form of godliness, when Jesus Christ preached in Judea; for he bore witness, that they did make the outside of the cup and platter clean—they observed the rules of their institution, but the spirit was gone.

Sadducees] A sect who denied the existence of angels and spirits, consequently all divine influence and inspiration, and also the resurrection of the dead. The Sadducees of that time were the Materialists and Deists of the Jewish nation. When the sect of the Pharisees arose cannot be distinctly ascertained; but it is supposed to have been some time after the Babylonish captivity. The sect of the Sadducees were the followers of one Sadok, a disciple of Antigonus Sochæus, who flourished about three centuries before Christ. There was a third sect among the Jews, called the Essenes or Essenians, of whom I shall have occasion to speak on chap. xix. 12.

Come to his baptism] The Æthiopic version adds the word privately here, the translator probably having read λαθρα in his copy, which gives a very remarkable turn to the passage. The multitudes, who had no worldly interest to support, no character to maintain by living in their usual way, came publicly and openly acknowledged that they were SINNERS; and stood in need of mercy. The others, who endeavoured to secure their worldly interests by making a fair show in the flesh, are supposed to have come privately, that they might not be exposed to reproach; and that they might not lose their reputation for wisdom and sanctity, which their consciences, under the preaching of the Baptist, told them, they had no right to. See below.

O generation of vipers] Γεννηματα εχιδνων. A terribly expressive speech. A serpentine brood from a serpentine stock. As their fathers were so were they, children of the wicked one. This is God's estimate of a SINNER, whether he wade in wealth, or soar in fame. The Jews were the seed of the serpent, who should bruise the heel of the woman's seed, and whose head should be bruised by him.

Who hath warned you] Or, privately shewn you. Τις υπεδειξεν—from υπο, under, and δεικνυμαι, to shew. Does not this seem to allude to the reading of the Æthiopic noticed above? They came privately: and John may be supposed to address them thus: "Did any person give you a private warning? No, you received your convictions under the public ministry of the word. The multitudes of the poor and wretched, who have been convinced of sin, have publicly acknowledged their crimes, and sought mercy—God will unmask you—you have deceived the people—you have deceived yourselves—you must appear just what you are; and, if you expect mercy from God, act like the penitent multitude, and bring forth FRUIT worthy of repentance. Do not begin to trifle with your convictions, by thinking, that because you are descendants of Abraham, therefore you are entitled to God's favour; God can, out of these stones, (pointing probably to those scattered about in the desert, which he appears to have considered as an emblem of the Gentiles) raise up a faithful seed, who, though not natural descendants of your excellent patriarch, yet shall be his worthy children, as being partakers of his faith, and friends of his God." It should be added, that the Greek word also signifies plain or ample information. See on Luke vi. 47.

The wrath to come?] The desolation which was about to fall on the Jewish nation for their wickedness, and threatened in the last words of their own Scriptures. See Mal. iv. 6. Lest I come and smite the earth (את הארץ et ha-arets, this very land) with a curse. This wrath or curse was coming: they did not prevent it by turning to God, and receiving the Messiah, and therefore the wrath of God came upon them to the uttermost. Let him that readeth, understand.

Verse 10. And now also the ax is laid] Or, Even now the ax lieth. As if he had said, There is not a moment to spare—God is about to cut off every impenitent soul—you must therefore either turn to God immediately, or be utterly and finally ruined. It was customary with the prophets, to represent the kingdoms, nations, and individuals, whose ruin they predicted, under the notion of forests and trees, doomed to be cut down. See Jer. xlvi. 22, 23. Ezek. xxxi. 3, 11, 12. The Baptist follows the same metaphor; the Jewish nation is the tree, and the Romans the ax, which, by the just judgment of God, was speedily to cut it down. It has been well observed, that there is an allusion here to a woodman, who having marked a tree for excision, lays his ax at its root, and strips off his outer garment, that he may wield his blows more powerfully; and that his work may be quickly performed. For about sixty years before the coming of Christ, this ax had been lying at the root of the Jewish tree, Judea having been made a province to the Roman empire, from the time that Pompey took the city of Jerusalem, during the contentions of the two brothers Hyrcanus and Aristobulus, which was about sixty-three years before the coming of Christ. See Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 1—5. But as the country might be still considered as in the hands of the Jews, though subject to the Romans, and God had waited on them now, nearly ninety years from the above time, expecting them to bring forth fruit, and none was yet produced; but he kept the Romans, as an ax, lying at the root of this tree, who were ready to cut it down the moment God gave them the commission.

Verse 11. But he that cometh after me] Or, Is coming after me, who is now on his way, and will shortly make his appearance. Jesus Christ began his ministry when he was thirty years of age, Luke iii. 23. which was the age appointed by the Law, Numb iv. 3. John the Baptist was born about six months before Christ, and as he began his public ministry when thirty years of age, then this coming after refers to six months after the commencement of John's public preaching, at which time Christ entered upon his.

Whose shoes I am not worthy to bear] This saying is expressive of the most profound humility and reverence. To put on, take off, and carry the shoes of their masters, was not only among the Jews, but also among the Greeks and Romans, the work of the vilest slaves. This is amply proved by Kypke, from Arrian, Plutarch, and the Babylonian Talmud.

With the Holy Ghost and with fire] That the influences of the Spirit of God are here designed, needs but little proof. Christ's religion was to be a spiritual religion, and was to have its seat in the heart. Outward precepts, however well they might describe, could not produce inward spirituality. This was the province of the Spirit of God, and of it alone, therefore he is represented here under the similitude of fire, because he was to illuminate and invigorate the soul, penetrate every part, and assimilate the whole to the image of the God of Glory. See on John iii. 5.

With fire] Και πυρι. This is wanting in E. S. (two MSS. one of the ninth, the other of the tenth century) eight others, and many Evangelistaria, and in some versions and printed editions; but it is found in the parallel place, Luke iii. 16. and in the most authentic MSS. and versions. It was probably the different interpretations given of it by the Fathers, that caused some transcribers to leave it out of their copies.

The baptism of fire has been differently understood among the primitive Fathers. Some say, it means the tribulations, crosses and afflictions, which believers in Christ are called to pass through. Hence the author of the Opus Imperfectum, on Matthew, says, that there are three sorts of baptism, 1. that of water; 2. that of the Holy Ghost; and 3. that of tribulations and afflictions, represented under the notion of fire. He observes farther, that our blessed Lord went through these three baptisms: 1. That of water, he received from the hands of John. 2. That of the Holy Spirit, he received from the Father. And 3. That of fire, he had in his contest with Satan in the desert. St. Chrysostom says, it means the superabundant graces of the Spirit. Basil and Theophilus explain it of the fire of hell. Cyril, Jerom, and others, understand by it the descent of the Holy Spirit, on the day of Pentecost.

Hilary says, it means a fire that the righteous must pass through in the day of judgment, to purify them from such defilements, as necessarily cleaved to them here, and with which they could not be admitted into glory.

Ambrose says, this baptism shall be administered at the gate of Paradise, by John Baptist; and he thinks, that this is what is meant by the flaming sword, Gen. iii. 24.

Origen and Lactantius conceive it to be a river of fire, at the gate of heaven, something similar to the Phlegethon of the heathens: but they observe, that when the righteous come to pass over, the liquid flames shall divide, and give them a free passage: that Christ shall stand on the brink of it, and receive through the flames, all those, and none but those, who have received in this world the baptism of water in his name: and that this baptism is for those, who, having received the faith of Christ, have not, in every respect, lived conformably to it; for, though they laid the good foundation, yet they built hay, straw, and stubble upon it, and this work of theirs must be tried, and destroyed by this fire. This, they think, is St. Paul's meaning, 1 Cor. iii. 13—15. If any man build on this foundation (viz. Jesus Christ) gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest:—and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is.—If any man's work be burnt he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so, as BY FIRE. From this fire, understood in this way, the Fathers of the following ages, and the school-men, formed the famous and lucrative doctrine of PURGATORY. Some in the primitive church thought, that fire should be in some way or other, joined to the water in baptism; and it is supposed, that they administered it by causing the person to pass between two fires, or to leap through the flame; or by having a torch or lighted candle present. Thus have those called Doctors of the Church trifled. The exposition which I have given, I believe to be the only genuine one.

Verse 12. Whose fan is in his hand] The Romans are here termed God's fan, as in ver. 10. they were called his ax, and in chap. xxii. 7. they are termed his troops or armies.

His floor] Does not this mean the land of Judea, which had been long, as it were, the threshing floor of the Lord? God says, he will now, by the winnowing fan (viz. the Romans) throughly cleanse this floor—the wheat, those who believe in the Lord Jesus, he will gather into his garner, either take to heaven from the evil to come, or put in a place of safety, as he did the Christians, by sending them to Pella in Cœlosyria, previously to the destruction of Jerusalem. But he will burn up the chaff—the disobedient and rebellious Jews, who would not come unto Christ that they might have life.

Unquenchable fire] That cannot be extinguished by man.

Verse 14. John forbad him] Earnestly and pressingly opposed him: this is the proper import of the words διεκωλυεν αυτον. I have observed that δια, in composition, most frequently, if not always, strengthens the signification in classic authors.—Wakefield.

Verse 15. To fulfil all righteousness.] That is, Every righteous ordinance: so I think πασαν δικαιοσυνην should be translated; and so our common version renders a similar word, Luke i. 6. The following passage, quoted from Justin Martyr, will doubtless appear a strong vindication of this translation. "Christ was circumcised, and observed all the other ordinances of the law of Moses, not with a view to his own justification; but to fulfil the dispensation committed to him by the Lord, the God and Creator of all things." Wakefield.

How remarkable are the following words of Creeshna (an Incarnation of the Supreme God, according to the Hindoo theology) related in the Bhagvat Geeta, p. 47. Addressing his disciple Arjoon he says, "I myself, Arjoon, have not in the three regions of the universe, any thing which is necessary for me to perform; nor any thing to obtain, which is not obtained: and yet I live in the exercise of the moral duties. If I were not vigilantly to attend to those duties, all men would presently follow my example. If I were not to perform the moral actions, this world would fail in their duties: I should be the cause of spurious births, and should drive the people from the right way. As the ignorant perform the duties of life from a hope of reward, so the wise man, out of respect to the opinions and prejudices of mankind, should perform the same without motives of interest. The wise man, by industriously performing all the duties of life, should induce the vulgar to attend to them."

The Septuagint use this word often for the Hebrew משפט mishpat, judgment, appointment. And in Ezek. xviii. 19, 21. the person who δικαιοσυνην και ελεος πεποιηκε—hath done righteousness and mercy, is he who sacredly attended to the performance of all the religious ordinances, mentioned in that chapter, and performed them in the genuine spirit of mercy. Δικαιωματα is used 1 Mac. i. 13, 49. ii. 21. and in Heb. x. 1, 10. to denote religious ceremonies. Michælis supposes, that כל חק kol chok, all religious statutes or ordinances, were the words used in the Hebrew original of this gospel.

But was this an ordinance? Undoubtedly: it was the initiatory ordinance of the Baptist's dispensation; now as Christ had submitted to circumcision, which was the initiatory ordinance of the Mosaic dispensation; it was necessary that he should submit to this, which was instituted by no less an authority, and was the introduction to his own dispensation of eternal mercy and truth. But it was necessary on another account: Our Lord represented the High-priest, and was to be the High-priest over the house of God:—now, as the High-priest was initiated into his office by washing and anointing, so must Christ: and hence he was baptized, washed, and anointed by the Holy Ghost. Thus he fulfilled the righteous ordinance of his initiation into the office of High-priest, and thus was prepared to make an atonement for the sins of mankind.

Then he suffered him.] In the Opus Imperfectum, quoted by Griesbach, there is the following addition, which, at least, may serve to shew the opinion of its author: Et Johannes quidem baptizavit illum in aqua, ille autem Johannem cum spiritu. "Then John baptized him with water, and he baptized John with the Spirit."

Verse 16. The heavens were opened unto him] That is, to John the Baptist—and he John saw the Spirit of God—lighting upon him, i. e. Jesus. There has been some controversy about the manner and form in which the Spirit of God rendered itself visible on this occasion. St. Luke iii. 22. says it was in a bodily shape like to a dove: and this likeness to a dove, some refer to a hovering motion, like to that of a dove and not to the form of the dove itself: but the terms of the Text are too precise to admit of this far-fetched interpretation.

This passage affords no mean proof of the doctrine of the Trinity. That three distinct persons are here represented, there can be no dispute. 1. The person of Jesus Christ, baptized by John in Jordan. 2. The person of the Holy Ghost in a bodily shape (σωματικῳ εἰδει, Luke iii. 22.) like a dove. 3. The person of the Father; a voice came out of heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, &c. The voice is here represented, as proceeding from a different place to that in which the persons of the Son and Holy Spirit were manifested; and merely, I think, more forcibly to mark this divine personality.

Verse 17. In whom I am well pleased.] Εν ω ευδοκησα, in whom I have delighted—though it is supposed that the past tense is here used for the present: but see the note on chap. xvii. 5. By this voice, and overshadowing of the Spirit, the mission of the Lord Jesus was publicly and solemnly accredited; God intimating that he had before delighted in him; the Law, in all its ordinances, having pointed him out, for they could not be pleasing to God, but as they were fulfilled in, and shewed forth the Son of Man, till he came.

As the office of a herald is frequently alluded to in this chapter, and also in various other parts of the New Testament, I think it best to give a full account of it here, especially as the office of the ministers of the gospel is represented by it. Such persons can best apply the different correspondences between their own and the herald's office.

At the Olympic and Isthmian games, heralds were persons of the utmost consequence and importance. Their office was, 1. To proclaim from a scaffold, or elevated place, the combat that was to be entered on.

2. To summon the Agonistæ, or contenders, to make their appearance, and to announce their names.

3. To specify the prize for which they were to contend.

4. To admonish and animate, with appropriate discourses, the Athletæ, or combatants.

5. To set before them, and explain, the laws of the Agones, or contenders; that they might see, that even the conqueror could not receive the crown or prize, unless he had strove lawfully.

6. After the conflict was ended, to bring the business before the judges, and according to their determination, to proclaim the victor.

7. To deliver the prize to the conqueror, and to put the crown on his head, in the presence of the assembly.

8. They were the persons who convoked all solemn and religious assemblies, and brought forth, and often slew, the sacrifices offered on those occasions.

9. They frequently called the attention of the people during the sacrifices, to the subject of devotion, with hoc age! τουτο πραττε: mind what you are about; don't be idle; think of nothing else. See PLUTARCH in Coriolanus.

The office, and nearly the word itself, was in use among the ancient Babylonians, as appears from Dan. iii. 4. where the Chaldee word כרוזא caroza, is rendered by the Septuagint κηρυξ kerux, and by our translation very properly, herald. His business in the above place, was to call an assembly of the people, for the purpose of public worship; to describe the object and nature of that worship, and the punishment to be inflicted on those who did not join in the worship, and properly assist in the solemnities of the occasion.

Dan. iii. 4. is the only place in our translation, in which the word herald is used: but the word κηρυξ, used by St. Paul, 1 Tim. ii. 7. 2 Tim. i. 11. and by St. Peter, 2 Epist. ii. 5. is found in the Septuagint, Gen. xli. 43. as well as in Dan. iii. 4. and the verb κηρυσσω is found in different places of that version, and in a great number of places in the New Testament.

It is worthy of remark, that the office of the κηρυξ, kerux, or herald, must have been anciently known, and indeed established among the Egyptians: for in Gen. xli. 43. where an account is given of the promotion of Joseph to the second place in the kingdom, where we say, And they cried before him, saying, Bow the knee; the Septuagint has και εκηρυξεν εμπροσθεν αυτου κηρυξ· And a HERALD made proclamation before him. As the Septuagint translated this for Ptolemy Philadelphus, the Egyptian king, and were in Egypt when they translated the Law, we may safely infer, that the office was not only known, but in use among the Egyptians, being denominated in their language אברך abrek, which our translators, following the Vulgate, have rendered, Bow the knee; but which the Septuagint understood to be the title of an officer, who was the same among the Egyptians, as the κηρυξ among the Greeks. This is a probable meaning of the word, which escaped me when I wrote the note on Gen. xli. 43.

As every kind of office had some peculiar badge, or ensign, by which it was known among the ancients, so the heralds were known, by generally carrying a caduceus. This was a rod with two spread wings at the top, and about which two serpents were entwined. The poets fabled, that this rod was given by Apollo, the god of wisdom and music, to Mercury the god of eloquence, and the messenger of the gods. To it wonderful properties are ascribed—especially that it produces sleep, and that it raises the dead. Who does not at once see, that the caduceus and its properties clearly point out the office, honor, and influence of the herald! As persons of strong voice, and ready speech, and copious eloquence, were always chosen for heralds, they were represented as endued with wisdom and eloquence from above. They lulled men to sleep, i. e. by their persuasive powers of speech, they calmed the turbulent dispositions of an enflamed populace, when proceeding to acts of rebellion and anarchy:—or they roused the dormant zeal of the community, who, through long oppression, despairing of succour or relief, seemed careless about their best interests; being stupidly resolved to sink under their burdens, and expect release only in death.

As to the caduceus itself, it was ever the emblem of peace among the ancients: the rod was the emblem of power, the two serpents of wisdom and prudence, and the two wings of diligence and dispatch. The first idea of this wonderful rod, seems to have been borrowed from the rod of Moses. See the note on Exod. iv. 17.

The word κηρυξ kerux, or herald, here used, is evidently derived from κηρυσσειν, to proclaim, call aloud; and this from γηρυς the voice: because these persons were never employed in any business, but such only as could not be transacted, but by the powers of speech, and the energy of ratiocination.

For the derivation of the word herald, we must look to the northern languages. Its meanings in Junius, Skinner, and Minshieu, are various, but not essentially different; they all seem to point out different parts of the herald's office. 1. In the Belgic, heer signifies army. Hence heer-alt, a senior officer, or general, in the army. 2. Or heer-held, the hero of the army: he who had distinguished himself most in his country's behalf. 3. Or from the Gallo-teutonic herr-haut, the high lord, because their persons were so universally respected, as we have already seen. 4. Or from the simple Teutonic herr-hold, he who is faithful to his lord. And lastly, according to Minshieu, from the verb hier-holden, stop here; because, in proclaiming peace, they arrested bloodshed and death, and prevented the farther pregress of war.

These officers act an important part in all heroic history, and particularly in the Iliad and Odyssey, from which, as the subject is of so much importance, I shall make a few extracts.

I. Their character was sacred. Homer gives them the epithet of divine, θειοι.

——————Δολων, Ευμηδεος υιος, Κηρυκος θειοιο. Iliad. x. 315.

'Dolon, son of Eumedes, the divine herald.' They were also termed inviolable, ασυλοι; also, great, admirable, &c. In the first book of the Iliad, we have a proof of the respect paid to heralds, and the inviolability of their persons. Agamemnon commands the heralds, Talthybius and Eurybates, his faithful ministers, to go to the tent of Achilles, seize the young Briseis, and bring her to him. They reluctantly obey; but when they come into the presence of Achilles, knowing the injustice of their master's cause, they are afraid to announce their mission. Achilles, guessing their errand, thus addresses them:

Χαιρετε, κηρυκες, Διος αγγελοι, ηδε και ανδρων. κ. τ. λ.

"Hail, O ye heralds, messengers of God and of men! come forward. I cannot blame you—Agamemnon only is culpable, who has sent you for the beautiful Briseis. But come, O godlike Patroclus, bring forth the damsel, and deliver her to them, that they may lead her away, &c." Iliad. i. 334, &c.

II. Their functions were numerous; they might enter without danger into besieged cities, or even into battles.

III. They convoked the assemblies of the leaders, according to the orders they received from the general or king.

IV. They commanded silence, when kings were to address the assembly (Iliad. xviii. 503. Κηρυκες δ'αρα λαων εερητυον. See also Iliad. ii. 280.) and delivered the sceptre into their hands, before they began their harangue.

Ην δ'αρα κηρυξ
Χερσι σκηπτρον εθηκε, σιωπησαι τ' ικελευσεν. Iliad xxiii. 567.

V. They were the carriers and executors of the royal commands (Iliad i. 320.) and went in search of those who were summoned to appear, or whose presence was desired.

VI. They were entrusted with the most important missions; and accompanied princes in the most difficult circumstances. Priam, when he went to Achilles, took no person besides a herald with him. (Iliad. xxiv. 674, 689.) When Ulysses sent two of his companions to treat with the Lestrygons, he sent a herald at the same time. (Odys. x. 102.) Agamemnon, when he wished to soften Achilles, joined Eurybates and Hodius, his heralds, to the deputation of the princes. (Iliad. ix. 170.)

VII. Heralds were employed to proclaim and publish whatever was to be known by the people. (Odys. xx. 276.)

VIII. They declared war and proclaimed peace. (Odys. xviii. 334.)

IX. They took part in all sacred ceremonies: they mingled the wine and water in the large bowls for the libations, which were made at the conclusion of treaties. They were the priests of the people in many cases; they led forth the victims, cut them in pieces, and divided them among those engaged in the sacrifices, (Odys. i. 109, &c.)

X. In Odyssey lib. xvii. a herald presents a piece of flesh to Telemachus, and pours out his wine.

XI. They sometimes waited on princes at table, and rendered them many other personal services. (Iliad. ii. 280. Odyss. i. 143, &c. 146, 153. ii. 6, 38.) In the Iliad. lib. x. 3. Eurybates carries the clothes to Ulysses. And a herald of Alcinous conducts Demodocus, the singer, into the festive hall. (Odys. viii. 470.) Many others of their functions, services, and privileges, the Reader may see, by consulting DAMM'S Homeric Lexicon, under Κηρ.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit] This transaction appears to have taken place immediately after Christ's baptism; and this bringing up of Christ was through the influence of the Spirit of God; that Spirit which had rested upon him in his baptism.

To be tempted] The first act of the ministry of Jesus Christ, was a combat with Satan. Does not this receive light from Gen. iii. 17. I will put enmity between the woman's seed and thy seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

Verse 2. And when he had fasted forty days] It is remarkable, that Moses, the great law-giver of the Jews, previously to his receiving the Law from God, fasted forty days in the mount: that Elijah, the chief of the prophets, fasted also forty days: and that Christ, the giver of the New Covenant, should act in the same way. Was not all this intended to shew, that God's kingdom on earth, was to be spiritual and divine? that it should not consist in meat and drink, but in righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost? Rom. xiv. 17. Relative to the forty days' fast of Moses, there is a beautiful saying in the Talmudists. "Is it possible, that any man can fast forty days and forty nights? To which Rabbi Meir answered, When thou takest up thy abode in any particular city, thou must live according to its customs. Moses ascended to heaven, where they neither eat nor drink, therefore he became assimilated to them. We are accustomed to eat and drink, and when angels descend to us, they eat and drink also." Moses, Elijah, and our blessed Lord could fast forty days and forty nights, because they were in communion with God, and living a heavenly life.

Verse 3. And when the tempter] This onset of Satan was made (speaking after the manner of men) judiciously: he came when Jesus, after having fasted forty days and forty nights, was hungry: now as hunger naturally diminishes the strength of the body, the mind gets enfeebled, and becomes easily irritated: and if much watching and prayer be not employed, the uneasiness which is occasioned by a lack of food, may soon produce impatience, and in this state of mind the tempter has great advantages. The following advice of an Arabian philosopher to his son, is worthy of attention. "My son, never go out of the house in the morning, till thou hast eaten something: by so doing, thy mind will be more firm; and shouldest thou be insulted by any person, thou wilt find thyself more disposed to suffer patiently: for hunger dries up, and disorders the brain." Bibliot. Orient. Suppl. p. 449. The state of our bodily health and worldly circumstances, may afford our adversary many opportunities of doing us immense mischief. In such cases, the sin to which we are tempted, may be justly termed, as in Heb. xii. 1. την ευπεριστατον αμαρτιαν, the well circumstanced sin, because all the circumstances of time, place and state of body and mind, are favourable to it.

If thou be the Son of God] Or, a son of God, υιος του Θεου. υιος is here, and in Luke iv. 3. written without the article; and therefore should not be translated THE Son, as if it were ὁ υιος, which is a phrase that is applicable to Christ as the Messiah: but it is certain, whatever Satan might suspect, he did not fully know that the person he tempted was the true Messiah. Perhaps one grand object of his temptation, was to find this out.

Command that these stones] The meaning of this temptation is: "Distrust the divine providence and support, and make use of illicit means to supply thy necessities."

Verse 4. But by (or, upon, επι) every word] Ρημα, in Greek, answers to דבר dabar in Hebrew, which means not only a word spoken, but also thing, purpose, appointment, &c. Our Lord's meaning seems to be this: God purposes the welfare of his creatures—all his appointments are calculated to promote this end. Some of them may appear to man to have a contrary tendency; but even fasting itself, when used in consequence of a divine injunction, becomes a mean of supporting that life which it seems naturally calculated to impair or destroy.

Verse 5. Pinnacle of the temple] It is very likely that this was what was called the στοα βασιλικη, the king's gallery; which, as Josephus says, "deserves to be mentioned among the most magnificent things under the sun: for upon a stupendous depth of a valley, scarcely to be fathomed by the eye of him that stands above, Herod erected a gallery of a vast height, from the top of which if any looked down he would grow dizzy, his eyes not being able to reach so vast a depth."—Ant. l. xv. c. 14. See Dr. Lightfoot on this place.

Verse 6. Cast thyself down] Our Lord had repelled the first temptation by an act of confidence in the power and goodness of God; and now Satan solicits him to make trial of it. Through the unparalleled subtlety of Satan, the very means we make use of to repel one temptation, may be used by him as the ground-work of another. This method he often uses, in order to confound us in our confidence.

He shall give his angels charge, &c.] This is a mutilated quotation of Psal. xci. 11. The clause, to keep thee in all thy ways, Satan chose to leave out, as quite unsuitable to his design. That God has promised to protect and support his servants, admits of no dispute; but as the path of duty is the way of safety, they are entitled to no good, when they walk out of it.

In their hands they shall bear thee up] This quotation from Psal. xci. 11. is a metaphor taken from a nurse's management of her child: in teaching it to walk, she guides it along plain ground; but when stones or other obstacles occur, she lifts up the child, and carries it over them, and then sets it down to walk again. Thus she keeps it in all its ways, watching over, and guarding every step it takes. To this St. Paul seems also to allude, 1 Thess. ii. 7. We were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children. Thus the most merciful God deals with the children of men, ever guarding them by his eye, and defending them by his power.

Verse 7. Thou shalt not tempt] To expose myself to any danger naturally destructive, with the vain presumption that God will protect and defend me from the ruinous consequences of my imprudent conduct, is to tempt God.

Verse 8. An exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him] If the words, all the kingdoms of the world, be taken in a literal sense, then this must have been a visionary representation, as the highest mountain on the face of the globe could not suffice to make evident even one hemisphere of the earth, and the other must of necessity be in darkness.

But if we take the world to mean only the land of Judea, and some of the surrounding nations, as it appears sometimes to signify, (see on Luke ii. 1.) then the mountain described by the Abbé Mariti (Travels through Cyprus, &c.) could have afforded the prospect in question. Speaking of it, he says, "Here we enjoyed the most beautiful prospect imaginable. This part of the mountain overlooks the mountains of Arabia, the country of Gilead, the country of the Amorites, the plains of Moab, the plains of Jericho, the river Jordan, and the whole extent of the Dead Sea. It was here that the Devil said to the Son of God, All these kingdoms will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." Probably St. Matthew, in the Hebrew original, wrote ארץ haarets, which signifies the world, the earth, and often the land of Judea only. What renders this more probable, is, that at this time Judea was divided into several kingdoms, or governments, under the three sons of Herod the Great, viz. Archelaus, Antipas, and Philip; which are not only called Ethnarchs and Tetrarchs in the Gospels, but also βασιλεις, kings, and are said βασιλευειν, to reign, as Rosenmuller has properly remarked. See chap. ii. 22. xiv. 9.

Verse 9. If thou wilt fall down and worship me.] As if he had said, "The whole of this land is now under my government, do me homage for it, and I will deliver it into thy hand."

12 ¶ [c] Now when Jesus had heard that John was [d] cast into prison, he departed into Galilee;

13 And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim:

a Deut. 6. 13. & 10. 20. Josh. 24. 14. 1 Sam. 7. 3.——b Heb. 1. 14.

c Mark 1. 14. Luke 3. 20. & 4. 14, 31. John 4. 43.——d Or, delivered up.

Verse 10. Get thee hence] Or, behind me, οπισω μου. This is added by a multitude of the best MSS. VERSIONS, and FATHERS. This temptation, savouring of nothing but diabolic impudence, Jesus did not treat it as the others; but, with divine authority, commanded the tempter to return to his own place.

In the course of this trial, it appears that our blessed Lord was tempted, 1st. To DISTRUST. Command these stones to become bread. 2dly. To PRESUMPTION. Cast thyself down. 3dly. To worldly AMBITION. All these will I give. 4thly. To IDOLATRY. Fall down and worship me, or, do me homage. There is probably not a temptation of Satan, but is reducible to one or other of these four articles.

From the whole we may learn:

First. No man, howsoever holy, is exempted from temptation: for God manifested in the flesh, was tempted by the Devil.

Secondly. That the best way to foil the adversary, is by the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, Eph. vi. 17.

Thirdly. That to be tempted even to the greatest abominations, (while a person resists) is not sin: for Christ was tempted to worship the DEVIL.

Fourthly. That there is no temptation which is from its own nature, or favouring circumstances, irresistible. God has promised to bruise even Satan under our feet.

As I wish to speak what I think most necessary on every subject when I first meet it, and once for all, I would observe, first, That the fear of being tempted, may become a most dangerous snare.

Secondly, That when God permits a temptation or trial to come, he will give grace to bear or overcome it.

Thirdly, That our spiritual interests shall be always advanced, in proportion to our trials and faithful resistance.

Fourthly, That a more than ordinary measure of divine consolation shall be the consequence of every victory.

Verse 11. Behold, angels came and ministered unto him] That is, brought that food which was necessary to support nature.

The name given to Satan in the third verse is very emphatic ὁ πειραζων, the tempter, or trier, from πειρω, to pierce through. To this import of the name, there seems to be an allusion Eph. vi. 16. The fiery DARTS of the wicked one. This is the precise idea of the word in Deut. viii. 2. To humble thee, and to prove thee, TO KNOW WHAT WAS IN THY HEART: לנסתך linesteca, πειρασῃ σε, LXX. that he might bore thee through. The quality and goodness of many things are proved by piercing or boring through; for this shews what is in the heart. Perhaps nothing tends so much to discover what we are, as trials either from men or devils.

Shalt thou serve, or pay religious veneration, λατρευσεις. This is Mr. Wakefield's translation, and I think cannot be mended. Λατρεια comes from λα, very much, and τρεω, I tremble. When a sinner approaches the presence of God, conscious of HIS infinite holiness and justice, and of his own vileness, he will then fully comprehend what this word means. See this religious reverence exemplified in the case of Moses, when in the presence of God: I exceedingly fear, said he, and tremble, Heb. xii. 21. And yet this fear of God is the beginning of wisdom. See the observations at the end of the chapter.

Verse 13. And leaving Nazareth] Or, entirely leaving Nazareth, και καταλιπων την Ναζαρετ, from κατα, intensive, and λειπω, I leave. It seems that, from this time, our blessed Lord made Capernaum his ordinary place of residence; and utterly forsook Nazareth, because they had wholly rejected his word, and even attempted to take away his life. See Luke iv. 29.

Galilee was bounded by mount Lebanon on the north, by the river Jordan and the sea of Galilee on the east, by Chison on the south, and by the Mediterranean on the west.

Nazareth, a little city in the tribe of Zebulon, in lower Galilee, with Tabor on the west, and Ptolemais on the east. It is supposed that this city was the usual residence of our Lord for the first thirty years of his life. It was here he became incarnate, lived in subjection to Joseph and Mary, and from which he took the name of a Nazorean.

Capernaum, a city famous in the New Testament, but never mentioned in the Old. Probably it was one of those cities which the Jews built after their return from Babylon. It stood on the sea-coast of Galilee, on the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim, as mentioned in the text. This was called his own city, chap. ix. 1, &c. and here, as a citizen, he paid the half shekel, chap. xvii. 24. Among the Jews, if a man became a resident in any city for twelve months, he thereby became a citizen, and paid his proportion of dues and taxes. See Lightfoot. Capernaum is well known to Zabulon, the country of this tribe, in which Nazareth and Capernaum were situated, bordered on the lake of Gennesareth, stretching to the frontiers of Sidon, Gen. xlix. 13. Nephthalim was contiguous to it, and both were on the east side of Jordan, Josh. xix. 34.

Verse 15. Galilee of the Gentiles] Or of the nations. So called, because it was inhabited by Egyptians, Arabians, and Phœnicians, according to the testimony of Strabo and others. The Hebrew גוים goyim, and the Greek εθνων, signify nations; and in the Old and New Testaments, mean those people who were not descendants of any of the twelve tribes. The word Gentiles, from gens, a nation, signifies the same. It is worthy of remark, that it was a regular tradition among the ancient Jews, that the Messiah should begin his ministry in Galilee. See the proofs in Schoetgen.

Verse 16. The people which sat in darkness] This is quoted from Isa. ix. 2. where, instead of sitting, the prophet used the word walked. The Evangelist might on purpose change the term, to point out the increased misery of the state of these persons. Sitting in darkness, expresses a greater degree of intellectual blindness, then walking in darkness does. In the time of Christ's appearing, the people were in a much worse state, than in the time of the prophet, which was nearly 700 years before; as, during all this period, they were growing more ignorant and sinful.

The region and shadow of death] These words are amazingly descriptive. A region of death—DEATH'S country, where, in a peculiar manner, Death lived, reigned, and triumphed, subjecting all the people to his sway.

Shadow of death] Σκια θανατου, used only here and in Luke i. 79. but often in the Old Covenant, where the Hebrew is צל מות tsal maveth. It is not easy to enter fully into the ideal meaning of this term. As in the former clause, Death is personified, so here. A shadow is that darkness cast upon a place by a body raised between it and the light or sun. Death is here represented as standing between the land abovementioned, and the Light of Life, or Sun of Righteousness: in consequence of which, all the inhabitants were involved in a continual cloud of intellectual darkness, misery, and sin. The heavenly Sun was continually eclipsed to them, till this glorious time, when Jesus Christ, the true Light, shone forth in the beauty of holiness and truth. Christ began his ministry in Galilee, and frequented this uncultivated place more than he did Jerusalem, and other parts of Judea: here his preaching was peculiarly needful; and by this was the prophecy fulfilled.

Verse 17. Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent] See on chap. iii. 1, 2. Every preacher commissioned by God to proclaim salvation to a lost world, begins his work with preaching the doctrine of repentance. This was the case with all the Prophets, John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, all the Apostles, and all their genuine successors in the Christian ministry. The reasons are evident in the notes already referred to; and for the explanation of the word κηρυσσειν, preaching, or proclaiming as a herald, see at the end of chap. iii.

Verse 18. Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother] Why did not Jesus Christ call some of the eminent scribes or Pharisees to publish his gospel, and not poor unlearned fishermen, without credit or authority? Because it was the kingdom of heaven they were to preach, and their teaching must come from above: besides, the conversion of sinners, though it be effected instrumentally by the preaching of the gospel, yet the grand agent in it is the Spirit of God. As the instruments were comparatively mean, and the work which was accomplished by them, was grand and glorious, the excellency of the power at once appeared to be of GOD, and not of man; and thus the glory, due alone to his name, was secured, and the great Operator of all good had the deserved praise. Seminaries of learning, in the order of God's providence and grace, have great and important uses; and in reference to such uses, they should be treated with great respect: but to make preachers of the Gospel, is a matter to which they are utterly inadequate; it is a prerogative that God never did, and never will, delegate to man.

Where the seed of the kingdom of God is sowed, and a dispensation of the gospel is committed to a man, a good education may be of great and general use: but it no more follows, because a man has had a good education, that therefore he is qualified to preach the gospel, than it does, that because he has not had that, therefore he is unqualified: for there may be much ignorance of divine things where there is much human learning; and a man may be well taught in the things of God, and be able to teach others, who has not had the advantages of a liberal education.

Men-made ministers have almost ruined the heritage of God. To prevent this, our Church requires that a man be inwardly moved to take upon himself this ministry, before he can be ordained to it. And he who cannot say, that he trusts (has rational and scriptural conviction) that he is moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon himself this office, is an intruder into the heritage of God, and his ordination ipso facto vitiated and of none effect. See the truly apostolic Ordination Service of the Church of England.

Fishers.] Persons employed in a lawful and profitable avocation, and faithfully discharging their duty in it. It was a tradition of the Elders that one of Joshua's ten precepts was, that all men should have an equal right to spread their nets and fish in the sea of Tiberias, or Galilee. The persons mentioned here, were doubtless men of pure morals; for the minister of God should have a good report from them that are without.

Verse 19. Follow me] Come after me, δευτε οπισω μου. Receive my doctrine, imitate me in my conduct—in every respect be my disciples. We may observe that, most of the calls of God to man are expressed in a few solemn words, which alarm the conscience, and deeply impress the heart.

I will make you fishers of men.] Ezek. chap. xlvii. 8—10. casts much light on this place: and to this Prophet our Lord probably alludes. To follow Christ, and be admitted into a partnership of his ministry, is a great honour; but those only who are by himself fitted for it, God calls. Miserable are those who do not wait for this call—who presume to take the name of fishers of men, and know not how to cast the net of the divine word, because not brought to an acquaintance with the saving power of the God who bought them. Such persons having only their secular interest in view, study not to catch men, but to catch money: and though, for charity's sake, it may be said of a pastor of this spirit, he does not enter the sheepfold as a thief, yet he certainly lives as a hireling. See Quesnel. Following a person, in the Jewish phrase, signifies being his disciple or scholar. See a similar mode of speech 2 Kings vi. 19.

Verse 20. They straightway left their nets] A change, as far as it respected secular things, every way to their disadvantage. The proud and the prophane may exult and say, "Such preachers as these cannot be much injured by their sacrifices of secular property—they have nothing but nets, &c. to leave." Let such carpers at the institution of Christ know, that he who has nothing but a net, and leaves that for the sake of doing good to the souls of men, leaves his ALL: besides, he lived comfortably by his net before; but, in becoming the servant of all for Christ's sake, he often exposes himself to the want of even a morsel of bread. See on chap. xix. 27.

Verse 22. Left the ship and their father] By the ship, το πλοιον, we are to understand the mere fishing-boat, used for extending their nets in the water, and bringing the hawser or rope of the farther end to shore, by which the net was pulled to land. But why should these be called to leave their employment and their father, probably now aged? To this I answer, that to be obedient to, provide for, and comfort our parents, is the highest duty we owe or can discharge, except that to God. But when God calls to the work of the ministry, father and mother and all must be left. Were we necessary to their comfort and support before? Then God, if he call us into another work or state, will take care to supply to them our lack of service some other way; and if this be not done, it is a proof we have mistaken our call. Again, were our parents necessary to us, and in leaving them for the sake of the Gospel, or in obedience to a divine command, do we deprive ourselves of the comforts of life? No matter—we should prefer the honour of serving the Most High, even in poverty and humility, to all the comforts of a father's house. But what an honour was the vocation of James and John, to old Zebedee their father! His sons are called to be heralds of the God of heaven! Allowing him to have been a pious man, this must have given him unutterable delight.

Verse 23. Teaching in their synagogues] Synagogue, συναγωγη, from συν, together, and αγω, I bring, a public assembly of persons, or the place where such persons publicly assembled. Synagogues, among the Jews, were not probably older than the return from the Babylonish captivity. They were erected ing in their synagogues, and preaching [a] the gospel of the kingdom, [b] and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people.

24 And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases, and torments, and those which were not only in cities and towns, but in the country, and especially by rivers, that they might have water for the convenience of their frequent washings.

Not less than ten persons of respectability, composed a synagogue, as the Rabbins supposed that this number of persons, of independent property, and well skilled in the law, were necessary to conduct the affairs of the place, and keep up the divine worship. See Lightfoot. Therefore, where this number could not be found, no synagogue was built; but there might be many synagogues in one city or town, provided it were populous. Jerusalem is said to have contained 480. This need not be wondered at, when it is considered that every Jew was obliged to worship God in public, either in a synagogue or in the temple.

The chief things belonging to a synagogue were:

1st. The ark or chest, made after the mode of the ark of the covenant, containing the Pentateuch.

2dly. The pulpit and desk, in the middle of the synagogue, on which he stood who read or expounded the law.

3dly. The seats or pews for the men below, and the galleries for the women above.

4thly. The lamps to give light in the evening service, and at the feast of the dedication. And 5thly. Apartments for the utensils and alms-chests.

The synagogue was governed by a council or assembly, over whom was a president, called in the Gospels, the ruler of the Synagogue. These are sometimes called chiefs of the Jews, the rulers, the priests or elders, the governors, the overseers, the fathers of the synagogue. Service was performed in them three times a day—morning, afternoon, and night. Synagogue, among the Jews, had often the same meaning as congregation among us, or place of judicature, see Jam. ii. 2.

Preaching the gospel of the kingdom] Or, proclaiming the glad tidings of the kingdom. See the preceding notes. Behold here the perfect pattern of an evangelical preacher: 1. He goes about seeking sinners on every side, that he may shew them the way to heaven. 2. He proclaims the glad tidings of the kingdom, with a freedom worthy of the King whom he serves. 3. He makes his reputation and the confidence of the people subservient not to his own interest, but to the salvation of souls. 4. To his preaching he joins, as far as he has ability, all works of mercy, and temporal assistance to the bodies of men. 5. He takes care to inform men that diseases, and all kinds of temporal evils, are the effects of sin, and that their hatred to iniquity should increase in proportion to the evils they endure through it. 6. And that nothing but the power of God can save them from sin and its consequences.

For glad tidings, or gospel, see chap. i. title. Proclaiming, see chap. iii. 1, and end; and for the meaning of kingdom, see chap. iii. 2.

All manner of sickness, and all manner of disease] There is a difference between νοσος, translated here sickness, and μαλαχια, translated disease. The first is thus defined: νοσος, την χρονιαν κακοπαθειαν, a disease of some standing, a chronic disorder.

Infirmity, μαλαχια, την προσκαιρον ανωμαλιαν του σωματος, a temporary disorder of the body. Theophylact. This is a proper distinction, and is necessary to be observed.

Verse 24. Sick people] Τους κακως εχοντας, those who felt ill—were afflicted with any species of malady.

And torments] βασανοις, from βασανιζω, to examine by torture, such as, cholics, gouts and rheumatisms, which racked every joint.

Possessed with devils] Dæmoniacs. Persons possessed by evil spirits. This is certainly the plain obvious meaning of dæmoniac in the Gospels.

Many eminent men think, that the sacred writers accommodated themselves to the unfounded prejudices of the common people, in attributing certain diseases to the influence of evil spirits, which were merely the effects of natural causes: but that this explanation can never comport with the accounts given of these persons, shall be proved as the places occur.

Our common version, which renders the word, those possessed by devils, is not strictly correct; as the word devil, διαβολος, is not found in the plural in any part of the Sacred Writings, when speaking of evil spirits: for though there are multitudes of Dæmons, Mark v. 9. yet it appears there is but one DEVIL, who seems to be supreme, or head, over all the rest. Διαβολος signifies an accuser, or slanderer, 1 Tim. iii. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 3. Tit. ii. 3. Perhaps Satan was called so, 1st. because he accused or slandered God in Paradise, as averse from the increase of Man's knowledge and happiness, Gen. iii. 5. John viii. 44. and 2dly. because he is the accuser of men, Rev. xii. 9, 10. See also Job i. 2. The word comes from δια, through, and βαλλειν, to cast, or shoot, because of the influence of his evil suggestions; compared, Eph. vi. 16.

possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them.

to fiery darts: and thus it is nearly of the same meaning with ὁ πειραζων, he who pierces through. See on ver. 3.

Lunatic] Persons afflicted with epileptic or other disorders, which are always known to have a singular increase at the change and full of the moon. This undoubtedly proceeds from the superadded attractive influence of the sun and moon upon the earth's atmosphere, as in the periods mentioned above these two luminaries are both in conjunction; and their united attractive power being exerted on the earth at the same time, not only causes the flux and reflux of the ocean, but occasions a variety of important changes in the bodies of infirm persons, of animals in general, but more particularly in those who are more sensible of these variations. And is this any wonder, when it is well known, that a very slight alteration in the atmosphere causes the most uncomfortable sensations to a number of invalids? But sometimes even these diseases were caused by dæmons. See on chap. viii. 16, 34. and xvii. 15.

Palsy] Palsy is defined, a sudden loss of tone and vital power in a certain part of the human body. This may affect a limb, the whole side, the tongue, or the whole body. This disorder is in general incurable, except by the miraculous power of God, unless in its slighter stages.

He healed them.] Either with a word or a touch; and thus proved, that all nature was under his control.

Verse 25. This verse is immediately connected with the vth. chapter, and should not be separated from it.

Great multitudes] This, even according to the Jews, was one proof of the days of the Messiah: for they acknowledged, that in his time there should be a great famine of the word of God; and thus they understood Amos viii. 11. Behold, the days come—that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread—but of hearing the words of the Lord. And as the Messiah was to dispense this word, the bread of life; hence they believed that vast multitudes from all parts should be gathered together to him. See Schoetgenius on this place.

Decapolis] A small country situated between Syria and Galilee of the Nations. It was called Decapolis, Δεκαπολις from δεκα, ten, and πολις, a city, because it contained only ten cities; the metropolis, and most ancient of which, was Damascus.

From beyond Jordan.] Or, from the side of Jordan. Probably this was the country which was occupied anciently by the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh; for the country of Decapolis lay on both sides of the river Jordan. See Numb. xxxii. 5, 33.

The account of our Lord's temptation, as given by the Evangelist, is acknowledged on all hands to be extremely difficult. Two modes of interpretation have been generally resorted to, in order to make the whole plain and intelligible: viz. the literal and allegorical. In all cases, where it can possibly apply, I prefer the first: the latter should never be used, unless obviously indicated in the text itself; or so imperiously necessary, that no other mode of interpretation can possibly apply. In the preceding observations, I have taken up the subject in a literal point of view; and it is hoped that most of the difficulties in the relation have been removed, or obviated, by this plan. An ingenious correspondent has favoured me with some observations on the subject, which have much more than the merit of novelty to recommend them. I shall give an abstract of some of the most striking; and leave the whole to the reader's further consideration.

The thoughts in this communication proceed on this ground: "These temptations were addressed to Christ as a public person, and respected his conduct in the execution of his ministry; and are reported to his Church as a forcible and practical instruction, concerning the proper method of promoting the kingdom of God upon earth. They are warnings against those Satanic illusions, by which the servants of Christ are liable to be hindered in their great work, and even stopped in the prosecution of it.

"As our Lord had, at his baptism, been declared to be the SON of GOD, i. e. the promised Messiah, this was probably well known to Satan, who did not mean to insinuate any thing to the contrary, when he endeavoured to engage him to put forth an act of that power which he possessed as the Messiah. The mysterious union of the divine with the human nature, in our Lord's state of humiliation, Satan might think possible to be broken; and therefore endeavoured, in the first temptation, Command these stones to be made bread, to induce our Lord to put forth a separate independent act of power; which our Lord repelled, by shewing his intimate union with the Divine Will, which he was come to fulfil—Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Thus shewing, as he did on another occasion, that it was his meat and drink to do the will of his Father.

"2. The ground of the temptation was then changed; and the fulfilment of the Divine Will, in the completion of a prophetic promise, was made the ostensible object of the next attack. Cast thyself down—for it is WRITTEN, He will give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands shall they bear thee up, &c. This our Lord repelled with—Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God—as Satan had designed to induce him to seek this public miraculous confirmation of God's peculiar care over him, as the promised Messiah; of his being which, according to the hypothesis above, Satan had no doubt—Moses being appointed to a great and important work, needed miraculous signs to strengthen his faith; but the sacred humanity of our blessed Lord needed them not; nor did his wisdom judge, that such a sign from heaven was essential to the instruction of the people.

"3. The last temptation was the most subtle and the most powerful—All these will I give unto thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. To inherit all nations, had been repeatedly declared to be the birth-right of the Messiah. His right to universal empire could not be controverted; nor could Satan presume to make the investiture. What, then, was his purpose? Satan had hitherto opposed, and that with considerable success, the kingdom of God upon earth; and what he appears to propose here, were, terms of peace, and an honourable retreat. The worship which he exacted was an act of homage, in return for his cession of that ascendancy which, through the sin of man, he had obtained in the world. Having long established his rule among men, it was not at first to be expected, that he would resign it without a combat: but the purpose of this last temptation appears to be an offer to decline any farther contest; and yet more, if his terms were accepted, apparently to engage his influence to promote the kingdom of the Messiah. And as the condition of this proposed alliance, he required, not divine worship, but such an act of homage as implied amity and obligation; and if this construction be allowed, he may be supposed to have enforced the necessity of the measure, by every suggestion of the consequences of a refusal. The sufferings which would inevitably result from a provoked opposition, which would render the victory, though certain to Christ himself, dearly bought; added to which, the conflict he was prepared to carry on through succeeding ages, in which all his subtlety and powers should be employed to hinder the progress of Christ's cause in the earth, and that with a considerable degree of anticipated success. Here the Devil seems to propose to make over to Christ the power and influence he possessed in this world, on condition that he would enter into terms of peace with him: and the inducement offered was, that thereby our Lord should escape those sufferings both in his own person, and in that of his adherents, which a provoked contest would ensure. And we may suppose, that a similar temptation lies hid in the desires excited even in some of the servants of Christ, who may feel themselves often induced to employ worldly influence and power for the promotion of his kingdom, even though, in so doing, an apparent communion of Christ and Belial is the result: for it will be found, that neither worldly riches, nor power, can be employed in the service of Christ, till, like the spoils taken in war, Deut. xxxi. 21—23. they have passed through the fire and water, as, without a divine purification, they are not fit to be employed in the service of God and his Church.

"Hence we may conclude, that the first temptation had for its professed object, 1st. our Lord's personal relief and comfort, through the inducement of performing a separate and independent act of power. The second temptation professed to have in view his public acknowledgment by the people as the MESSIAH: for should they see him work such a miracle as throwing himself down from the pinnacle of the temple without receiving any hurt, they would be led instantly to acknowledge his divine mission; and the evil of this temptation may be explained, as seeking to secure the success of his mission by other means than those, which, as the Messiah, he had received from the Father. Compare John xiv. 31. The third temptation was a subtle attempt to induce Christ to acknowledge Satan as an ally, in the establishment of his kingdom."—E. M. B.

The above is the substance of the ingenious theory of my correspondent, which may be considered as a third mode of interpretation, partaking equally of the allegoric and literal. I still, however, think, that the nearer we keep to the letter in all such difficult cases, the more tenable is our ground, especially where the subject itself does not obviously require the allegorical mode of interpretation. Among many things worthy of remark in the preceding theory, the following deserves most attention: That Satan is ever ready to tempt the governors and ministers of the Christian Church to suppose, that worldly means, human policy, secular interests and influence, are all essentially necessary for the support and extension of that kingdom which is not of this world! Such persons can never long preserve hallowed hands—they bring the world into the Church; endeavour to sanctify the bad means they use, by the good end they aim at; and often, in the prosecution of their object, by means which are not of God's devising, are driven into straits and difficulties, and, to extricate themselves, tell lies for God's sake. This human policy is from beneath—God will neither sanction nor bless it. It has been the bane of true religion in all ages of the world; and in every country where the cause of Christianity has been established, such schemers and plotters in the Church of God are as dangerous to its interests, as a plague is to the health of society. The governors and ministers of the Christian Church, should keep themselves pure, and ever do God's work in his own way. If the slothful servant should be cast out of the vineyard, he that corrupts the good seed of the divine field, or sows tares among the wheat, should be considered as an enemy to righteousness, and be expelled from the sacred pale as one who closes in with the temptation—"All these things (the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them) will I give unto THEE, if thou wilt fall down and worship ME." However necessary the Church may be to the State; and the State to the Church, yet the latter is never in so much danger, as when the former smiles upon it.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. And seeing the multitudes] Τους οχλους, these multitudes, viz. those mentioned in the preceding verse, which should make the first verse of this chapter.

He went up into a mountain] That he might have the greater advantage of speaking so as to be heard by that great concourse of people which followed him.

And when he was set] The usual posture of public teachers among the Jews, and among many other people. Hence sitting was a synonymous term for teaching among the Rabbins.

His disciples] The word μαθητης signifies literally a scholar. Those who originally followed Christ, considered him in the light of a divine teacher, and conscious of their ignorance, and the importance of his teaching, they put themselves under his tuition, that they might be instructed in heavenly things. Having been taught the mysteries of the kingdom of God, they became closely attached to their Divine master, imitating his life and manners; and recommending his salvation to all the circle of their acquaintance. This is still the characteristic of a genuine disciple of Christ.

Verse 3. Blessed are the poor in spirit, &c.] Or, happy, μακαριοι, from μα or μη, not, and κηρ, fate or death; intimating, that such persons were endued with immortality, and consequently were not liable to the caprices of fate. Homer, Iliad. i. 339. calls the supreme Gods, Θεων μακαρων, the ever happy, and IMMORTAL Gods, and opposes them to θνητων ανθρωπων mortal men.

Τω δ' αυτω μαρτυροι εστων
Προς τε Θεων μακαρων, προς τε θνητων ανθρωπων.

"Be ye witnesses before the immortal gods, and before mortal men." From this definition we may learn, that the person whom Christ terms happy, is one who is not under the influence of fate or chance, but is governed by an all-wise providence, having every step directed to the attainment of immortal glory, being transformed by the power into the likeness of the ever-blessed God. Though some of the persons, whose states are mentioned in these verses, cannot be said to be as yet blessed or happy, in being made partakers of the Divine nature; yet they are termed happy by our Lord, because they are on the straight way to this blessedness.

Taken in this light, the meaning is similar to that expressed by the poet, when describing a happy man.

FELIX, qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas:
Atque metus omnes & inexorabile FATUM
Subjecit pedibus; strepitumque Acherontis avari!
Virg. Geor. ii. v. 490.

Which may be thus paraphrased.

"Happy is he who gains the knowledge of the first cause of all things! who can trample on every fear, and the doctrine of inexorable FATE; and who is not terrified by death, nor by the threatened torments of the invisible world."

Poor in spirit] One who is deeply sensible of his spiritual poverty and wretchedness. Πτωχος, a poor man, comes from πτωσσω, to tremble or shrink with fear. Being destitute of the true riches, he is tremblingly alive to the necessities of his soul, shrinking with fear lest he should perish without the salvation of God. Such, Christ pronounces happy, because there is but a step between them and that kingdom which is here promised. Some contend, that μακαριοι should be referred to πνευματι, and the verse translated thus: Happy or blessed in spirit are the poor. But our Lord seems to have the humiliation of the spirit particularly in view.

Kingdom of heaven.] Or, των ουρανων, of the heavens. A participation of all the blessings of the New Covenant here, and the blessings of Glory above. See this phrase explained, chap. iii. 2. Blessed are the poor! this is God's word: but who believes it? Do we not say, Yea rather, Blessed is the rich?

The Jewish Rabbins have many good sayings relative to that poverty and humility of spirit, which Christ recommends in this verse. In the treatise called Bammidbar Rabba, s. 20. we have these words: There were three (evils) in Balaam, the evil eye, (envy) the towering spirit, (pride) and, the extensive mind (avarice.)

Tanchum, fol. 84. The law does not abide with those who have the extensive mind, (avarice) but with him only who has a contrite heart.

Rabbi Chanina said, "Why are the words of the Law compared to water? Because, as waters flow from heights, and settle in low places; so the words of the Law rest only with him who is of a humble heart." See Schoetgen.

Verse 4. Blessed are they that mourn] That is, those, who feeling their spiritual poverty, mourn after God, lamenting the iniquity that separated them from the fountain of blessedness. Every one flies from sorrow, and seeks after joy: and yet true joy must necessarily be the fruit of sorrow. The whole need not (do not feel the need of) the physician; but they that are sick do; i. e. they who are sensible of their disease. Only such persons as are deeply convinced of the sinfulness of sin, feel the plague of their own heart, and turn with disgust from all worldly consolations, because of their insufficiency to render them happy, have God's promise of solid comfort. They SHALL BE comforted, says Christ, παρακληθησονται from παρα, near, and καλεω, I call. He will call them to himself, and speak the words of pardon, peace, and life eternal, to their hearts. See this notion of the word expressed fully by our Lord, chap. xi. 28. COME UNTO ME all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Verse 5. Blessed are the meek] Happy, οι πραεις, from ραος, easy, those who are of a quiet, gentle spirit, in opposition to the proud and supercilious Scribes and Pharisees, and their disciples. We have a compound word in English, which once fully expressed the meaning of the original, viz. gentleman; but it has now almost wholly lost its original signification. Our word meek comes from the old Anglo-saxon meca, or meccea, a companion or equal, because he who is of a meek or gentle spirit, is ever ready to associate with the meanest of those who fear God, feeling himself superior to none: and well knowing, that he has nothing of spiritual or temporal good, but what he has received from the mere bounty of God, having never deserved any favour from his hand.

For they shall inherit the earth.] Or, την γην, the land. Under this expression, which was commonly used by the prophets to signify the land of Canaan, in which all temporal good abounded, Judg. xviii. 9, 10. Jesus Christ points out that abundance of spiritual good which was provided for men in the gospel. Besides, Canaan was a type of the kingdom of God, and who is so likely to inherit glory, as the man in whom the meekness and gentleness of Jesus dwell? In some good MSS. and several ancient versions, the fourth and fifth verses are transposed: see the authorities in the various readings in Professor Griesbach's edition. The present arrangement certainly is most natural: 1. Poverty, to which the promise of the kingdom is made. 2. Mourning or distress, on account of this impoverished state, to which consolation is promised. And 3. Meekness established in the heart by the consolations received.

Verse 6. They which do hunger and thirst] As the body has its natural appetites of hunger and thirst for the food and drink suited to its nourishment, so has the soul. No being is indestructible or unfailing in its nature but GOD; no being is independent but him: as the body depends for its nourishment, health, and strength upon the earth; so does the soul upon heaven. Heavenly things cannot support the body, they are not suited to its nature; earthly things cannot support the soul, for the same reason. When the uneasy sensation termed hunger, takes place in the stomach, we know we must get food, or perish. When the soul is awakened to a sense of its wants, and begins to hunger and thirst after righteousness or holiness, which is its proper food, we know that it must be purified by the Holy Spirit, and be made a partaker of that living bread, John viii. 48. or perish everlastingly. Now, as God never inspires a prayer but with the design to answer it, he who hungers and thirsts after the full salvation of God, may depend on being speedily and effectually blessed or satisfied, well-fed, as the word χορτασθησονται implies. Strong and intense desire after any object has been, both by poets and orators, represented metaphorically by hunger and thirst. See the well known words of Virgil, Æneid iii. 55.

——Quid non mortalia pectora cogis,
Auri sacra FAMES!

"O cursed hunger after gold! what canst thou not influence the hearts of men to perpetrate?" How frequently do we find, inexplebilis honorum FAMES—SITIENS virtutis—famæ SITIS, the insatiable hunger after honour, a thirst for virtue, thirst after fame, and such like? Righteousness here is taken for all the blessings of the New Covenant—all the graces of the Messiah's kingdom—a full restoration to the image of God!

Verse 7. The merciful] The word mercy, among the Jews, signified two things: the pardon of injuries, and almsgiving. Our Lord undoubtedly takes it in its fullest latitude here. To know the nature of mercy, we have only to consult the grammatical meaning of the Latin word misericordia, from which ours is derived. It is composed of two words: miserans, pitying, and cor, the heart; or miseria cordis, pain of heart. Mercy supposes two things: 1. a distressed object: and 2. a disposition of the heart, through which it is affected at the sight of such an object. This virtue therefore is no other than a lively emotion of the heart, which is excited by the discovery of any creature's misery; and such an emotion as manifests itself outwardly, by effects suited to its nature. The merciful man is here termed by our Lord ελεημων, from ελεος, which is generally derived from the Hebrew חיל chil, to be in pain as a woman in travail: or from ילל ilel, to cry, or lament grievously; because a merciful man enters into the miseries of his neighbour, feels for, and mourns with him.

They shall obtain mercy] Mercy is not purchased but at the price of mercy itself; and even this price is a gift of the mercy of God. What mercy can those vindictive persons expect, who forgive nothing, and are always ready to improve every advantage they have of avenging themselves? Whatever mercy a man shews to another, God will take care to shew the same to him. The following elegant and nervous saying of one of our best poets, is worthy of the reader's most serious attention.

"The quality of mercy is not strained;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blessed;
It blesseth him who gives, and him who takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest: it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown.
It is an attribute of God himself;
And earthly pow'r doth then shew likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice.——
Though justice be thy plea, consider this,
That in the course of justice, none of us
Should see salvation. We do pray for mercy;
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy——
Why all the souls that are, were forfeit once:
And he who might the 'vantage best have took
Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If He who is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? Oh! think on that,
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man, new made.——
How shalt thou hope for mercy, rend'ring none?"

In the Tract Shabbath, fol. 151. there is a saying very like this of our Lord. "He who shews mercy to men, God will shew mercy to him: but to him who shews no mercy to man God will shew no mercy."

Verse 8. Pure in heart] In opposition to the Pharisees, who affected outward purity while their hearts were full of corruption and defilement. A principal part of the Jewish religion consisted in outward washings and cleansings: on this ground they expected to see God, to enjoy eternal glory: but Christ here shews, that a purification of the heart from all vile affections and desires, is essentially requisite in order to enter into the kingdom of God. He whose soul is not delivered from all sin, through the blood of the covenant, can have no scriptural hope of ever being with God. There is a remarkable illustration of this passage, quoted by Mr. Wakefield from Origen, Contra Cels. lib. vi. "God has no body, and therefore is invisible: but men of contemplation can discern him with the heart and understanding. But A DEFILED HEART CANNOT SEE GOD: but HE MUST BE PURE WHO WISHES TO ENJOY A PROPER VIEW OF A PURE BEING."

Shall see God.] This is a Hebraism, which signifies possess God, enjoy his felicity: as seeing a thing, was used among the Hebrews for possessing it. See Psal. xvi. 10. Thou wilt not suffer thy Holy One to SEE corruption, i. e. he shall not be corrupted. So John iii. 3. Except a man be born again, he cannot SEE the kingdom of God, i. e. he cannot enjoy it. So John iii. 16. He that believeth not the Son, shall not SEE life, i. e. shall not be put in possession of eternal glory.

Probably our Lord alludes to the advantages those had, who were legally pure, of entering into the sanctuary, into the presence of God, while those who had contracted any legal defilement, were excluded from it. This also was obviously typical.

Verse 9. The peace-makers] Ειρηνη, peace, is compounded of ειρειν (εις) εν connecting into one: for as WAR distracts, and divides nations, families, and individuals, from each other, inducing them to pursue different objects and different interests: so PEACE restores them to a state of unity, giving them one object, and one interest. A peace-maker is a man, who, being endowed with a generous public spirit, labours for the public good; and feels his own interest promoted, in promoting that of others; therefore, instead of fanning the fire of strife, he uses his influence and wisdom to reconcile the contending parties, adjust their differences, and restore them to a state of unity. As all men are represented to be in a state of hostility to God and each other, the Gospel is called the Gospel of peace, because it tends to reconcile men to God and to each other. Hence our Lord here terms peace-makers the children of God: for as he is the Father of peace, those who promote it are reputed his children. But whose children are they who foment divisions in the church, the state, or among families? Surely they are not of that GOD, who is the Father of peace and lover of concord; of that CHRIST, who is the sacrifice and mediator of it; of that SPIRIT, who is the nourisher and bond of peace; nor of that CHURCH of the Most High, which is the kingdom and family of peace.

St. Clement, Strom. lib. iv. s. 6. in fin. says, that "Some who transpose the Gospels, add this verse: Happy they who are persecuted by justice, for they shall be perfect: happy they who are persecuted on my account, for they shall have a place where they shall not be persecuted."

Verse 10. They which are persecuted] Δεδιωγμενοι, they who are hard pressed upon, and pursued with repeated acts of enmity. Parkhurst. They are happy who suffer, seems a strange saying: and that the righteous should suffer, merely because they are such, seems as strange. But such is the enmity of the human heart to every thing of God and goodness, that all those who live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution in one form or other. As the religion of Christ gives no quarter to vice; so the vicious will give no quarter to this religion, or to its professors.

For their's is the kingdom of heaven] That spiritual kingdom, explained chap. iii. 2. and that kingdom of glory, which is its counterpart and consequence.

Verse 11. When men shall revile you, and persecute] The persecution mentioned in the preceding verse comprehends all outward acts of violence—all that the hand can do. This comprehends all calumny, slander, &c. all that the tongue can effect. But as διωκειν, which we render to persecute, is a forensic term, and signifies legal persecutions and public accusations, which, though totally unsubstantiated, were the means of destroying multitudes of the primitive Christians, our Lord probably refers to such. No Protestant can think, without horror, of the great numbers burnt alive in this country, on such accusations, under the popish reign of her, who is emphatically called Bloody Queen Mary.

Verse 12. Rejoice] In the testimony of a good conscience; for without this, suffering has nothing but misery in it.

Be exceeding glad] Αγαλλιασθε, leap for joy. There are several cases on record, where this was literally done by the martyrs in Queen Mary's days.

Great is your reward in heaven] In the Talmudical Tract Pirkey Aboth, are these words: "Rabbi Tarpon said, The day is short: the work is great: the labourers are slow: the REWARD IS GREAT: and the father of the family is urgent."

The followers of Christ are encouraged to suffer joyfully on two considerations. 1. They are thereby conformed to the prophets who went before. 2. Their reward in heaven is a great one. God gives the grace to suffer, and then crowns that grace with glory; hence it is plain, the reward is not of debt, but of grace: Rom. vi. 23.

Verse 13. Ye are the salt of the earth] Our Lord shews here what the preachers of the Gospel, and what all who profess to follow him, should be; the salt of the earth, to preserve the world from putrefaction and destruction. See the note on Lev. ii. 13.

But if the salt have lost his savour] That this is possible in the land of Judea, we have proof from Mr. Maundrell, who, describing the Valley of Salt, speaks thus: "Along, on one side of the valley, towards Gibul, there is a small precipice about two men's lengths, occasioned by the continual taking away of the salt; and in this, you may see how the veins of it lie. I broke a piece of it, of which, that part that was exposed to the rain, sun, and air, though it had the sparks and particles of salt, YET IT HAD PERFECTLY LOST ITS SAVOUR: the inner part, which was connected to the rock, retained its savour, as I found by proof. See his Trav. 5th edit. last page. A preacher or private Christian, who has lost the life of Christ, and the witness of his Spirit, out of his soul, may be likened to this salt. He may have the sparks and glittering particles of true wisdom, but without its unction or comfort. Only that which is connected with the rock, the soul that is in union with Christ Jesus by the Holy Spirit, can preserve its savour, and be instrumental of good to others.

To be trodden under foot] There was a species of salt in Judea, which was generated at the lake Asphaltitis, and hence called bituminous salt, easily rendered vapid, and of no other use but to be spread in a part of the temple, to prevent slipping in wet weather. This is probably what our Lord alludes to in this place. The existence of such a salt, and its application to such a use, Schoetgenius has largely proved in his Horæ Hebraicæ, vol. i. p. 18, &c.

Verse 14. Ye are the light of the world] That is, the instruments which God chooses to make use of, to illuminate the minds of men, as he uses the sun (to which probably he pointed) to enlighten the world. Light of the world, נר עולם ner ólam, was a title applied to the most eminent Rabbins. Christ transfers the title from these, and gives it to his own disciples, who, by the doctrines that he taught them, were to be the means of diffusing the light of life throughout the universe.

A city that is set on a hill] This place may receive light from the following passage in Maundrel's Travels. "A few points towards the north (of Tabor) appears that which they call the Mount of Beatitudes, a small rising, from which our blessed Saviour delivered his Sermon in the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters of Matthew. Not far from this little hill is the city Saphet, supposed to be the ancient Bethulia. It stands upon a very eminent and conspicuous mountain, and is SEEN FAR and NEAR. May we not suppose, that Christ alludes to this city, in these words of his, A city set on a hill cannot be hid?" p. 115. Quesnell remarks here: "The Christian life is something very high and sublime, to which we cannot arrive without pains: whilst it withdraws us from the earth, and carries us nearer heaven, it places us in view, and as a mark, to the malice of carnal men."

Verse 15. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel] A bushel μοδιος:—a measure both among the Greeks and Romans, containing a little more than a peck English. From some ancient writers we learn, that only those who had bad designs hid a candle under a bushel; that, in the dead of the night, when all were asleep, they might rise up, and have light at hand to help them to effect their horrid purposes of murder, &c. See Wetstein, Kypke, Wolf, &c.

Verse 16. Let your light so shine] Or, more literally, Thus let your light shine, Ουτω λαμψατω το φως. As the sun is lighted up in the firmament of heaven to diffuse its light and heat freely to every inhabitant of the earth; and as the lamp is not set under the bushel, but placed upon the lamp-stand, that it may give light to all in the house; THUS let every follower of Christ, and especially every preacher of the Gospel, diffuse the light of heavenly knowledge, and the warmth of divine love, through the whole circle of their acquaintance.

That they may see your good works] It is not sufficient to have light—we must walk in the light, and by the light. Our whole conduct should be a perpetual comment on the doctrine we have received, and a constant exemplification of its power and truth.

And glorify your Father] The following curious saying is found in Bammidbar Rabba, s. 15. "The Israelites said to the holy blessed God, Thou commandest us to light lamps to thee: and yet thou art the Light of the world, and with thee the light dwelleth. The holy blessed God answered, I do not command this because I need light; but that you may reflect light upon me, as I have illuminated you:—that the people may say, Behold, how the Israelites illustrate him, who illuminates them in the sight of the whole earth." See more in Schoetgen. Real Christians are the children of God—they are partakers of his holy and happy nature: they should ever be concerned for their Father's honour, and endeavour so to recommend him and his salvation, that others may be prevailed on to come to the light, and walk in it. Then God is said to be glorified, when the glorious power of his grace is manifested in the salvation of men.

a Rom. 3. 31. & 10. 4. Gal. 3. 24.

b Luke 16. 17.

Verse 17. Think not that I am come to destroy the law] Do not imagine that I am come to violate the Law—καταλυσαι, from κατα, and λυω, I loose, violate, or dissolve—I am not come to make the Law of none effect—to dissolve the connection which subsists between its several parts, or the obligation men are under to have their lives regulated by its moral precepts; nor am I come to dissolve the connecting reference it has to the good things promised. But I am come, πληρωσαι, to complete—to perfect its connection and reference, to accomplish every thing shadowed forth in the Mosaic ritual, to fill up its great design; and to give grace to all my followers, πληρωσαι, to fill up, or complete, every moral duty. In a word, Christ completed the Law: 1st. In itself, it was only the shadow, the typical representation of good things to come; and he added to it that which was necessary to make it perfect, HIS OWN SACRIFICE, without which it could neither satisfy God, nor sanctify men. 2dly. He completed it in himself, by submitting to its types with an exact obedience, and verifying them by his death upon the cross. 3dly. He completes this Law, and the sayings of his Prophets, in his members, by giving them grace to love the Lord with all their heart, soul, mind, and strength, and their neighbour as themselves; for this is all the Law and the Prophets.

It is worthy of observation, that the word גמר gamar, among the Rabbins, signifies not only to fulfil, but also to teach; and consequently, we may infer that our Lord intimated, that the Law and the Prophets were still to be taught or inculcated by him and his disciples: and this he and they have done in the most pointed manner. See the Gospels and Epistles: and see especially this Sermon on the mount, the Epistle of James, and the Epistle to the Hebrews. And this meaning of the word gives the clear sense of the Apostle's words, Coloss. i. 25. Whereof I am made a minister, πληρωσαι τον λογον του Θεου, to fulfil the word of God, i. e. to teach the doctrine of God.

Verse 18. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven] In the very commencement of his ministry, Jesus Christ teaches the instability of all visible things. "The heaven which you see, and which is so glorious, and the earth which you inhabit and love, shall pass away; for the things which are seen are temporal, προσκαιρα, are for a time; but the things which are not seen are eternal, αιωνια, ever-during," 2 Cor. iv. 18. And the WORD of the Lord endureth for ever.

One jot or one tittle] One yod, (י) the smallest letter in the Hebrew alphabet. One tittle, or point, κεραια, either meaning those points which serve for vowels in this language, if they then existed; or the apices, or points of certain letters, such as ר resh, or ד daleth, ה he or ח cheth, (as the change of any of these into the other, would make a most essential alteration in the sense, or, as the Rabbins say, destroy the world).

That this saying one jot, or one tittle, is a proverbial mode of expression among the Jews, and that it expressed the meaning given to it above, is amply proved by the extracts in Lightfoot and Schoetgen. The Reader will not be displeased to find a few of them here, if he can bear with the allegorical and strongly figurative language of the Rabbins.

"The book of Deuteronomy came and prostrated itself before the Lord, and said, 'O Lord of the world, thou hast written in me thy Law; but now, a Testament defective in some parts, is defective in all. Behold, Solomon endeavours to root the letter י yod out of me:' (in this text, Deut. xvii. 5. לא ירבה נשים lo yirbeh nashim, he shall not multiply wives.) The holy blessed God answered, 'Solomon, and a thousand such as he, shall perish, but the least word shall not perish out of thee.'

In Shir Hashirim Rabba, are these words: "Should all the inhabitants of the earth gather together, in order to whiten one feather of a crow, they could not succeed: so, if all the inhabitants of the earth should unite to abolish one י yod, which is the smallest letter in the whole Law, they should not be able to effect it."

In Vayikra Rabba, s. 19. it is said: "Should any person in the words of Deut. vi. 4. Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is אחד achad, ONE Lord, change the ד daleth into a ר resh, he would ruin the world." [Because, in that case, the word אחר achar, would signify a strange or false God.]

"Should any one, in the words of Exod. xxxiv. 14. Thou shalt worship no OTHER, אחר achar, God, change ר resh into ד daleth, he would ruin the world." [Because the command would then run, Thou shalt not worship the ONLY or true God.]

"Should any one, in the words of Levit. xxii. 32. Neither shall ye PROPHANE, תחללו techalelu, my holy name, change ח cheth into ה he, he would ruin the world." [Because the sense of the commandment would then be, Neither shall ye PRAISE my holy name.]

"Should any one, in the words of Psal. cl. 6. Let every thing that hath breath PRAISE, תהלל tehalel, the Lord, change ה he into ח cheth, he would ruin the world." [Because the command would then run, Let every thing that hath breath PROPHANE the Lord.]

"Should any one, in the words of Jerem. v. 10. They lied AGAINST the Lord, ביהוה beihovah, change ב beth into כ caph, he would ruin the world." [For then the words would run, they lied LIKE the Lord.]

"Should any one, in the words of Hosea v. 7. They have dealt treacherously, ביהוה beihovah, AGAINST the Lord, change ב beth into כ caph, he would ruin the world." [For then the words would run, They have dealt treacherously LIKE the Lord.]

"Should any one, in the words of 1 Sam. ii. 2. There is none holy AS the Lord, change כ caph into ב beth, he would ruin the world." [For then the words would mean, There is no holiness IN the Lord.]

These examples fully prove, that the μια κεραια of our Lord, refers to the apices, points, or corners, that distinguish ב beth from כ caph; ח cheth from ה hé; and ר resh from ד daleth. For the Reader will at once perceive, how easily a כ caph may be turned into a ב beth; a ה hé into a ח cheth; and ר resh into a ד daleth: and he will also see of what infinite consequence it is to write and print such letters correctly.

Till all be fulfilled.] Or, accomplished. Though all earth and hell should join together to hinder the accomplishment of the great designs of the Most High; yet it shall be all in vain—even the sense of a single letter shall not be lost. The words of God which point out his designs, are as unchangeable as his nature itself. Every sinner, who perseveres in his iniquity, shall surely be punished with separation from God and the glory of his power; and every soul that turns to God, through Christ, shall as surely be saved, as that Jesus himself hath died.

Verse 19. Whosoever—shall break one of these least commandments] The Pharisees were remarkable for making a distinction between weightier and lighter matters in the Law, and between what has been called, in a corrupt part of the Christian Church, mortal and venial sins. See on chap. xxii. 36.

Whosoever shall break. What an awful consideration is this! He who, by his mode of acting, speaking, or explaining, the words of God, sets the holy precept aside, or explains away its force and meaning, shall be called least—shall have no place in the kingdom of Christ here, nor in the kingdom of glory above. That this is the meaning of these words, is evident enough from the following verse.

Verse 20. Except your righteousness shall exceed] περισσευση, Unless your righteousness abound more—unless it take in, not only the letter, but the spirit and design of the moral and ritual precept: the one directing you how to walk so as to please God; the other pointing out Christ, the great Atonement, through and by which a sinner is enabled to do so—more than that of the scribes and Pharisees, who only attended to the letter of the Law, and had indeed made even that of no effect by their traditions—ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. This fully explains the meaning of the preceding verse. The old English word is ꝑıhtꝑıꝑnyꝭ, rightwiseness, i. e. complete, thorough, excellent WISDOM. For a full explanation of this verse, see Luke xviii. 10, &c.

Verse 21. Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time] τοις αρχαιοις, to or by the ancients. By the ancients, we may understand those who lived before the Law, and those who lived under it; for murder was, in the most solemn manner, forbidden before, as well as under the Law, Gen. ix. 5, 6.

But it is very likely that our Lord refers here merely to traditions and glosses relative to the ancient Mosaic ordinance; and such as, by their operation, rendered the primitive command of little or no effect. Murder from the beginning has been punished with death; and it is, probably, the only crime that should be punished with death. There is much reason to doubt, whether the punishment of death, inflicted for any other crime, is not in itself murder, whatever the authority may be that has instituted it. GOD, and the greatest legislators that have ever been in the universe, are of the same opinion. See Montesquieu, Blackstone, and the Marquis Beccaria, and the arguments and testimonies lately produced by Sir Samuel Romilly, in his motion for the amendment of the criminal laws of this kingdom. It is very remarkable, that the criminal code published by Joseph II. late Emperor of Germany, though it consists of seventy-one capital crimes, has not death attached to any of them. Even murder with an intention to rob, is punished only with "imprisonment for thirty years, to lie on the floor, to have no nourishment but bread and water, to be closely chained, and to be publicly whipped once a year, with less than one hundred lashes." See Colquhoun on the Police of the City of London, p. 272.

Verse 22. Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause] ὁ ὀργιζομενος—εικη, who is vainly incensed. "This translation is literal; and the very objectionable phrase, without a cause, is left out, εικη being more properly translated by that above." What our Lord seems here to prohibit, is not merely that miserable facility which some have of being angry at every trifle, continually taking offence against their best friends: but that anger which leads a man to commit outrages against another, thereby subjecting himself to that punishment which was to be inflicted on those who brake the peace. εικη, vainly, or, as in the common translation, without a cause, is wanting in the famous Vatican MS. and two others, the Ethiopic, latter Arabic, Saxon, Vulgate, two copies of the old Itala, J. Martyr, Ptolomeus, Origen, Tertullian, and by all the ancient copies quoted by St. Jerom. It was probably a marginal gloss originally, which in process of time crept into the text.

Shall be in danger of the judgment] ενοχος εσται, shall be liable to the judgment. That is, to have the matter brought before a senate, composed of twenty-three magistrates, whose business it was to judge in cases of murder and other capital crimes. It punished criminals by strangling or beheading; but Dr. Lightfoot supposes the judgment of God to be intended. See at the end of this chapter.

Raca ריקה from the Hebrew רק rak, to be empty. It signifies a vain, empty, worthless fellow, shallow brains, a term of great contempt. Such expressions were punished among the Gentoos by a heavy fine. See all the cases Code of Gentoo Laws, chap. xv. sect. 2.

The council] Συνεδριον, the famous council, known among the Jews by the name of Sanhedrin. It was composed of seventy-two elders, six chosen out of each tribe. This grand Sanhedrin not only received appeals from the inferior Sanhedrins, or court of twenty-three, mentioned above; but could alone take cognizance, in the first instance, of the highest crimes, and alone inflict the punishment of stoning.

Thou fool] Moreh, probably from מרה marah, to rebel, a rebel against God, apostate from all good. This term implied, among the Jews, the highest enormity, and most aggravated guilt. Among the Gentoos, such an expression was punished by cutting out the tongue, and thrusting a hot iron, of ten fingers' breadth, into the mouth of the person who used it. Code of Gentoo Laws, chap. xv. sect. 2. p. 212.

Shall be in danger of hell fire.] ενοχος εσται εις την γεενναν του πυρος, shall be liable to the hell of fire. Our Lord here alludes to the valley of the son of Hinnom, גי הנם Ghi hinom. This place was near Jerusalem, and had been formerly used for those abominable sacrifices in which the idolatrous Jews had caused their children to pass through the fire to Molech. A particular place in this valley was called Tophet, from תפת tophet, the fire-stove, in which some suppose they burnt their children alive to the above idol. See 2 Kings xxiii. 10. 2 Chron. xxviii. 3. Jer. vii. 31, 32. From the circumstance of this valley having been the scene of those infernal sacrifices, the Jews, in our Saviour's time, used the word for hell, the place of the damned. See the word applied in this sense by the Targum, on Ruth ii. 12. Psal. cxl. 12. Gen. iii. 24. xv. 17. It is very probable, that our Lord means no more here than this: If a man charge another with apostacy from the Jewish religion, or rebellion against God, and cannot prove his charge, then he is exposed to that punishment, (burning alive) which the other must have suffered, if the charge had been substantiated. There are three kinds of offences here, which exceed each other in their degrees of guilt. 1st. Anger against a man, accompanied with some injurious act. 2dly. Contempt, expressed by the opprobrious epithet raka, or shallow brains. 3dly. Hatred and mortal enmity, expressed by the term moreh or apostate, where such apostacy could not be proved. Now, proportioned to these three offences were three different degrees of punishment, each exceeding the other in its severity, as the offences exceeded each other in their different degrees of guilt. 1st. The judgment, the council of twenty-three, which could inflict the punishment of strangling. 2dly. The Sanhedrin, or great council, which could inflict the punishment of stoning. And 3dly. the being burnt alive in the valley of the son of Hinnom. This appears to be the meaning of our Lord.

Now, if the above offences were to be so severely punished, which did not immediately affect the life of another, how much sorer must the punishment of murder be? ver. 21. And as there could not be a greater punishment inflicted than death, in the above terrific forms, and this was to be inflicted for minor crimes; then the punishment of murder must not only have death here, but a hell of fire in the eternal world, attached to it. It seems that these different degrees of guilt, and the punishment attached to each, had not been properly distinguished among the Jews. Our Lord here calls their attention back to them, and gives them to understand, that in the coming world there are different degrees of punishment prepared for different degrees of vice; and that not only the outward act of iniquity should be judged and punished by the Lord, but that injurious words, and evil passions should all meet their just recompence and reward. Murder is the most punishable of all crimes, according to the written Law, in respect both of our neighbour and civil society. But He who sees the heart, and judges it by the eternal law, punishes as much, a word, or a desire, if the hatred whence they proceed be complete and perfected. Dr. Lightfoot has some curious observations on this passage in the preface to his Harmony of the Evangelist. See his works, Vol. II. and the conclusion of this chapter.

Verse 23. Therefore if thou bring thy gift] Evil must be nipped in the bud. An unkind thought of another may be the foundation of that which leads to actual murder. A Christian, properly speaking, cannot be an enemy to any man; nor is he to consider any man his enemy, without the fullest evidence: for surmises to the prejudice of another, can never rest in the bosom of him who has the love of God in his heart, for to him all men are brethren. He sees all men as children of God, and members of Christ, or at least capable of becoming such. If a tender forgiving spirit was required, even in a Jew, when he approached God's altar with a bullock or a lamb, how much more necessary is this in a man who professes to be a follower of the Lamb of God; especially when he receives the symbols of that Sacrifice which was offered for the life of the world, in what is commonly called the sacrament of the Lord's supper?

Verse 24. Leave there thy gift before the altar] This is as much as to say, "Do not attempt to bring any offering to God whilst thou art in a spirit of enmity against any person, or hast any difference with thy neighbour, which thou hast not used thy diligence to get adjusted." It is our duty and interest, both to bring our gift, and offer it too; but God will not accept of any act of religious worship from us, while any enmity subsists in our hearts toward any soul of man; or while any subsists in our neighbour's heart towards us, which we have not used the proper means to remove. A religion, the very essence of which is love, cannot suffer at its altars a heart that is revengeful and uncharitable, or which does not use its utmost endeavours to revive love in the heart of another. The original word, δωρον, which we translate gift, is used by the Rabbins in Hebrew letters דורון doron, which signifies not only a gift, but a sacrifice offered to God. See several proofs in Schoetgen.

Then come and offer thy gift.] Then, when either thy brother is reconciled to thee, or thou hast done all in thy power to effect this reconciliation. My own obstinacy and uncharitableness must render me utterly unfit to receive any good from God's hands, or to worship him in an acceptable manner; but the wickedness of another can be no hinderance to me, when I have endeavoured earnestly to get it removed, though without effect.

Verse 25. Agree with thine adversary quickly] Adversary, αντιδικος, properly a plaintiff in law—a perfect law term. Our Lord enforces the exhortation given in the preceding verses from the consideration of what was deemed prudent in ordinary law-suits. In such cases, men should make up matters with the utmost speed; as running through the whole course of a law-suit, must not only be vexatious, but be attended with great expense; and in the end, though the loser may be ruined, yet the gainer has nothing. A good use of this very prudential advice of our Lord is this: Thou art a sinner: God hath a controversy with thee. There is but a step between thee and death. Now is the accepted time. Thou art invited to return to God by Christ Jesus. Come immediately at his call, and he will save thy soul. Delay not! Eternity is at hand; and if thou die in thy sins, where God is thou shalt never come.

Those who make the adversary, God; the judge, Christ; the officer, Death; and the prison, Hell, abuse the passage, and highly dishonour God.

Verse 26. The uttermost farthing.] Κοδραντην. The Rabbins have this Greek word corrupted into קרדיונטס kordiontes, and קונטריק, kontrik, and say, that two פרוטות prutoth make a kontarik, which is exactly the same with those words in Mark xii. 42. λεπτα δυο, ο εστι κοδραντης, two mites, which are one farthing. Hence it appears, that the λεπτον lepton was the same as the prutah. The weight of the prutah was half a barley corn, and it was the smallest coin among the Jews, as the kodrantes, or farthing, was the smallest coin among the Romans. If the matter issue in law, strict justice will be done, and your creditor be allowed the fulness of his just claim; but if, while you are on the way, going to the magistrate, you come to a friendly agreement with him, he will relax in his claims, take a part for the whole, and the composition be in the end, both to his and your profit.

This text has been considered a proper foundation on which to build not only the doctrine of a purgatory, but also that of universal restoration. But the most unwarrantable violence must be used before it can be pressed into the service of either of the above antiscriptural doctrines. At the most, the text can only be considered as a metaphorical representation of the procedure of the great Judge; and let it ever be remembered, that by the general consent of all (except the basely interested) no metaphor is ever to be produced in proof of any doctrine. In the things that concern our eternal salvation, we need the most pointed and express evidence on which to establish the faith of our souls.

Verse 27. Ye have heard that it was said by them of old] By the ancients, τοις αρχαιοις is omitted by nearly a hundred MSS. and some of them of the very greatest antiquity and authority; also by the Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Gothic, and Slavonian versions; by four copies of the old Itala; and by Origen, Cyril, Theophylact, Euthymius and Hilary. On this authority Wetstein and Griesbach have left it out of the text.

Verse 28. Whosoever looketh on a woman, to lust after her] Επιθυμησαι αυτης, earnestly to covet her. The verb επιθυμεω is undoubtedly used here by our Lord, in the sense of coveting through the influence of impure desire. The word is used in precisely the same sense, on the same subject, by Herodotus, book the first, near the end. I will give the passage, but I dare not translate it. To the learned Reader it will justify my translation, and the unlearned must take my word. Της ΕΠΙΘΥΜΗΣΕΙ γυναικος Μασσαγετης αιης, μισγεται αδεως. Raphelius, on this verse, says, επιθυμειν hoc loco, est turpi cupiditate mulieris potiundæ flagrare. In all these cases, our blessed Lord points out the spirituality of the Law; which was a matter to which the Jews paid very little attention. Indeed it is the property of a Pharisee to abstain only from the outward crime. Men are very often less inquisitive to know how far the will of God extends, that they may please him in performing it, than they are to know how far they may satisfy their lusts without destroying their bodies and souls utterly, by an open violation of his law.

Hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.] It is the earnest wish or desire of the soul, which in a variety of cases, constitutes the good or evil of an act. If a man earnestly wish to commit an evil, but cannot, because God puts time, place, and opportunity out of his power; he is fully chargeable with the iniquity of the act, by that God who searches and judges the heart. So, if a man earnestly wish to do some kindness, which it is out of his power to perform, the act is considered as his; because God, in this case, as in that above, takes the will for the deed. If voluntary and deliberate looks and desires make adulterers and adulteresses, how many persons are there whose whole life is one continued crime? whose eyes being full of adultery, they cannot cease from sin. 2 Pet. ii. 14. Many would abhor to commit one external act before the eyes of men, in a temple of stone; and yet they are not afraid to commit a multitude of such acts in the temple of their hearts, and in the sight of God!

Verse 29. And if thy right eye offend thee] The right eye and the right hand are used here to point out those sins which appear most pleasing and profitable to us; from which we must be separated, if we desire ever to see the kingdom of God.

Offend thee] Σκανδαλιζει σε. Te fait broncher, cause thee to stumble, French Bible. Σκανδαληθρα is explained by Suidas, "that piece of wood in a trap, or pit for wild beasts, which being trodden upon by them, causes them to fall into the trap or pit." The word in Suidas appears to be compounded of σκανδαλον a stumbling block, or something that causes a man to trip, and λαθρα private or hidden. Thus, then, the right eye may be considered the darling idol; the right hand, the profitable employment, pursued on sinful principles; these become snares and traps to the soul, by which it falls into the pit of perdition.

Verses 29, 30. Pluck it out—cut it off] We must shut our senses against dangerous objects, to avoid the occasions of sin, and deprive ourselves of all that is most dear and profitable to us, in order to save our souls, when we find that these dear and profitable things, however innocent in themselves, cause us to sin against God.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members] Men often part with some members of the body, at the discretion of a surgeon, that they may preserve the trunk, and die a little later; and yet they will not deprive themselves of a look, a touch, a small pleasure, which endanger the eternal death of the soul. It is not enough to shut the eye, or stop the hand; the one must be plucked out, and the other cut off. Neither is this enough, we must cast them both from us. Not one moment's truce with an evil passion, or a sinful appetite. If you indulge them, they will gain strength, and you shall be ruined. The Rabbins have a saying similar to this: "It is better for thee to be scorched with a little fire in this world, than to be burned with a devouring fire in the world to come."

Verse 31. Whosoever shall put away his wife] The Jewish doctors gave great licence in the matter of divorce. Among them a man might divorce his wife if she displeased him even in the dressing of his victuals!

Rabbi Akiba said, "If any man saw a woman handsomer than his own wife, he might put his wife away; because it is said in the Law, If she find not favour in his eyes." Deut. xxiv. 1.

Josephus, the celebrated Jewish historian, in his life, tells us, with the utmost coolness and indifference, "About this time I put away my wife, who had borne me three children, not being pleased with her manners."

These two cases are sufficient to shew, to what a scandalous and criminal excess this matter was carried among the Jews. However, it was allowed by the school of Shammai, that no man was to put away his wife unless for adultery. The school of Hillel gave much greater licence.

A writing of divorcement] The following is the common form of such a writing. See Maimonides and Lightfoot.

"On the day of the week A. in the month B. in the year C. from the beginning of the world, according to the common computation in the province of D. I, N. the son of N. by whatever name I am called, of the city E. with entire consent of mind, and without any compulsion, have divorced, dismissed, and expelled thee—thee, I say, M. the daughter of M. by whatever name thou art called, of the city E. who was heretofore my wife: but now I have dismissed thee—thee, I say, M. the daughter of M. by whatever name thou art called, of the city E. so as to be free and at thine own disposal, to marry whomsoever thou pleasest, without hinderance from any one, from this day for ever. Thou art therefore free for any man. Let this be thy bill of divorce from me, a writing of separation and expulsion, according to the law of Moses and Israel.

REUBEN, son of Jacob, Witness.
ELIEZAR, son of Gilead, Witness."

God permitted this evil to prevent a greater; and, perhaps, to typify his repudiating the Jews, who were his first spouse.

Verse 32. Saving for the cause of fornication] Λογου πορνειας on account of whoredom. As fornication signifies no more than the unlawful connection of unmarried persons, it cannot be used here with propriety, when speaking of those who are married. I have therefore translated λογου πορνειας on account of whoredom. It does not appear that there is any other case in which Jesus Christ admits of divorce. A real Christian ought rather to beg of God the grace to bear patiently and quietly the imperfections of his wife, than to think of the means of being parted from her. "But divorce was allowed by Moses;" yes, for the hardness of their hearts it was permitted: but what was permitted to an uncircumcised heart among the Jews, should not serve for a rule to a heart in which the love of God has been shed abroad by the Holy Spirit. Those who form a matrimonial connection in the fear and love of God, and under his direction, will never need a divorce. But those who marry as passion or money lead the way, may be justly considered adulterers and adultresses as long as they live.

Verse 33. Thou shalt not forswear thyself] They dishonour the great God, and break this commandment, who use frequent oaths and imprecations, even in reference to things that are true: and those who make vows and promises which they either cannot perform, or do not design to fulfil, are not less criminal. Swearing in civil matters is become so frequent, that the dread and obligation of an oath are utterly lost in it. In certain places, where oaths are frequently administered, people have been known to kiss their thumb or pen, instead of the book, thinking thereby to avoid the sin of perjury; but this is a shocking imposition on their own souls. See the Notes on Deut. iv. 26. vi. 13.

Perform unto the Lord thine oaths] The morality of the Jews on this point was truly execrable: they maintained, that a man might swear with his lips, and annul it in the same moment in his heart. Rab. Akiba is quoted as an example of this kind of swearing. See Schoetgen.

Verse 34. Swear not at all] Much has been said in vindication of the propriety of swearing in civil cases before a magistrate, and much has been said against it. The best way is to have as little to do as possible with oaths. An oath will not bind a knave nor a liar; and an honest man needs none, for his character and conduct swear for him. On this subject the advice of Epictetus is very good: "Swear not at all, if possible; if you cannot avoid, do it as little as you can." Enchir. c. 44. See on Deut. iv. 26. vi. 13.

Verses 34, 35. Neither by heaven, &c.] It was a custom among the Scythians, when they wished to bind themselves in the most solemn manner, to swear by the king's throne; and if the king was at any time sick, they believed it was occasioned by some one's having taken the oath falsely. Herod. l. iv.

Who is there among the traders and people of this world who obey this law? A common swearer is constantly perjuring himself: such a person should never be trusted. When we make any promise contrary to the command of God, taking, as a pledge of our sincerity, either GOD or something belonging to him, we engage that which is not ours, without the Master's consent. God manifests his glory in heaven as upon his throne; he imprints the footsteps of his perfections upon the earth, his footstool; and shews, that his holiness and his grace reign in his temple as the place of his residence. Let it be our constant care to seek and honour God in all his works.

Verse 36. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head] For these plain reasons: 1st. God commands thee not to do it. 2dly. Thou hast nothing which is thy own, and thou shouldst not pledge another's property. 3dly. It never did, and never can, answer any good purpose. And 4thly. being a breach of the law of God, it is the way to everlasting misery.

Verse 37. Let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay] That is, a positive affirmation, or negation, according to your knowledge of the matter concerning which you are called to testify. Do not equivocate; mean what you assert, and adhere to your assertion. Hear what a heathen says on this subject:

Εχθρος γαρ μοι κεινος ομως αιδαο πυλῃσιν,
Ος χ' ετερον μεν κευθει ενι φρεσιν, αλλο δε βαζει.
Hom. Il. ix. 312.

"He whose words agree not with his private thoughts, is as detestable to me as the gates of hell." See on Josh. ii. at the end.

See the subject of swearing particularly considered in the note at the conclusion of Deut. chap. vi.

Whatsoever is more than these] That is, more than a bare affirmation, or negation, according to the requirements of Eternal Truth, cometh of evil; or, is of the wicked one—εκ του πονηρου εστιν, i. e. the Devil, the father of superfluities and lies. One of Selden's MSS. and Gregory Nyssen, a commentator of the fourth century, have εκ του διαβολου εστιν, is of the Devil.

That the Jews were notoriously guilty of common swearing, for which our Lord particularly reprehends them, and warns his disciples against; and that they swore by heaven, by earth, by Jerusalem, by their head, &c. the following extracts, made by Dr. Lightfoot from their own writings, amply testify:

"It was customary and usual among them to swear by the creatures. 'If any swear by heaven, by earth, by the sun, &c. although the mind of the swearer be, under these words, to swear by HIM who created them, yet this is not an oath. Or if any swear by some of the prophets, or by some of the books of the Scripture, although the sense of the swearer be to swear by HIM that sent that prophet, or that gave that book, nevertheless this is not an oath.' MAIMONIDES.

They did not pretend to forbid ALL common swearing, but only what they term MUCH. A Jew might swear, but he must not be too abundant in the practice. Against such permission, our Lord opposes his, Swear NOT AT ALL! He who uses any oath, except what he is solemnly called by the magistrate to make, so far from being a Christian, he does not deserve the reputation, either of decency or common sense. In some of our old elementary books for children, we have this good maxim: "Never swear: for he that swears will lie; and he that lies will steal; and if so, what bad things will he not do!" READING MADE EASY.

Verse 38. An eye for an eye] Our Lord refers here to the law of retaliation mentioned Exod. xxi. 24. (see the note there, and on Levit. xxiv. 20.) which obliged the offender to suffer the same injury he had committed. The Greeks and Romans had the same law. So strictly was it attended to at Athens, that if any man put out the eye of another who had but one, the offender was condemned to lose both his eyes, as the loss of one would not be an equivalent misfortune. It seems that the Jews had made this law (the execution of which belonged to the civil magistrate) a ground for authorizing private resentments, and all the excesses committed by a vindictive spirit. Revenge was often carried to the utmost extremity, and more evil returned than what had been received. This is often the case among those who are called Christians.

Verse 39. Resist not evil] Or, the evil person. So, I am fully persuaded, τῳ πονηρῳ ought to be translated. Our Lord's meaning is, "Do not repel one outrage by another." He that does so, makes himself precisely what the other is, a wicked person.

Turn to him the other also.] That is, rather than avenge thyself, be ready to suffer patiently a repetition of the same injury. But these exhortations belong to those principally who are persecuted for righteousness' sake. Let such leave the judgment of their cause to Him for whose sake they suffer. The Jews always thought, that every outrage should be resented; and thus the spirit of hatred and strife was fostered.

Verse 40. And if any man will sue thee at the law] Every where our blessed Lord shews the utmost disapprobation of such litigations as tended to destroy brotherly kindness and charity. It is evident, he would have his followers to suffer rather the loss of all their property, than to have recourse to such modes of redress at so great a risk. Having the mind averse from contentions, and preferring peace and concord to temporal Verse 41. Shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.] αγγαρευσει. This word is said to be derived from the Persians, among whom the king's messengers, or posts, were called Αγγαροι, or Angari. This definition is given both by Hesychius and Suidas.

The Persian messengers had the royal authority for pressing horses, ships, and even men to assist them in the business on which they were employed. These Angari are now termed Chappars, and serve to carry despatches between the court and the provinces. When a chappar sets out, the master of the horse furnishes him with a single horse, and when that is weary, he dismounts the first man he meets, and takes his horse. There is no pardon for a traveller that refuses to let a chappar have his horse, nor for any other who should deny him the best horse in his stable. See Sir J. Chardin's and Hanway's travels. For pressing post horses, &c. the Persian term is سخرة گرفتن Sukhreh geriften. I find no Persian word exactly of the sound and signification of Αγγαρος; but the Arabic غارة agharet signifies spurring a horse, attacking, plundering, &c. The Greek word itself is preserved among the Rabbins in Hebrew characters, אנגריא angaria, and it has precisely the same meaning: viz. to be compelled by violence, to do any particular service, especially of the public kind, by the king's authority. Lightfoot gives several instances of this in his Horæ Talmudicæ.

We are here exhorted to patience and forgiveness:

First, when we receive in our persons all sorts of insults and affronts, ver. 39.

Secondly, When we are despoiled of our goods, ver. 40.

Thirdly, When our bodies are forced to undergo all kinds of toils, vexations, and torments, ver. 41. The way to improve the injustice of man to our own advantage, is to exercise under it meekness, gentleness, and long suffering, without which disposition of mind, no man can either be happy here or hereafter; for he that avenges himself, must lose the mind of Christ, and thus suffer an injury 10,000 times greater than he can ever receive from man. Revenge, at such an expence, is dear indeed.

Verse 42. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow] To give and lend freely to all who are in need, is a general precept from which we are only excused by our inability to perform it. Men are more or less obliged to it as they are more or less able, as the want is more or less pressing; as they are more or less burthened with common poor, or with necessitous relatives. In all these matters, both prudence and charity must be consulted. That God, who makes use of the beggar's hand to ask our charity, is the same from whom we ourselves beg our daily bread: and dare we refuse HIM! Let us shew at least mildness and compassion, when we can do no more: and if we cannot or will not relieve a poor man, let us never give him an ill word nor an ill look. If we do not relieve him, we have no right to insult him.

To give and to lend, are two duties of charity which Christ joins together, and which he sets on equal footing. A rich man is one of God's stewards: God has given him money for the poor, and he cannot deny it without an act of injustice. But no man, from what is called a principle of charity or generosity, should give that in alms, which belongs to his creditors. Generosity is godlike, but Justice has ever, both in Law and Gospel, the first claim.

A loan is often more beneficial than an absolute gift: first, because it flatters less the vanity of him who lends: secondly, it spares more the shame of him who is in real want; and thirdly, it gives less encouragement to the idleness of him who may not be very honest. However, no advantage should be taken of the necessities of the borrower: he who does so, is at least half a murderer. The lending which our Lord here inculcates, is that which requires no more than the restoration of the principal in a convenient time: otherwise to live upon trust, is the sure way to pay double.

Verse 43. Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy.] Instead of πλησιον neighbour, the Codex Grævii, a MS. of the eleventh century, reads φιλον friend. Thou shalt love thy friend, and hate thine enemy. This was certainly the meaning which the Jews put on it: for neighbour, with them, implied those of the Jewish race, and all others were considered by them as natural enemies. Besides, it is evident that πλησιον among the Hellenistic Jews, meant friend merely: Christ uses it precisely in this sense in Luke x. 36. in answer to the question asked by a certain lawyer, ver. 29. Who of the three was neighbour (πλησιον friend) to him who fell among the thieves? He who shewed him mercy: i. e. he who acted the friendly part. In Hebrew, רע reang signifies friend, which word is translated πλησιον by the LXX. in more than one hundred places. Among the Greeks it was a very comprehensive term, and signified every man, not even an enemy excepted, as Raphelius on this verse has shewn from Polybius. The Jews thought themselves authorized to kill any Jew who apostatized, and though they could not do injury to the Gentiles, in whose country they sojourned, yet they were bound to suffer them to perish, if they saw them in danger of death. Hear their own words: "A Jew sees a Gentile fall into the sea, let him by no means lift him out; for it is written, Thou shalt not rise up against the blood of thy neighbour:—but this is not thy neighbour." Maimon. This shews, that by neighbour they understood a Jew; one who was of the same blood and religion with themselves.

Verse 44. Love your enemies] This is the most sublime piece of morality ever given to man. Has it appeared unreasonable and absurd to some? It has. And why? Because it is natural to man to avenge himself, and plague those who plague him; and he will ever find abundant excuse for his conduct in the repeated evils he receives from others; for men are naturally hostile to each other. Jesus Christ designs to make men happy. Now he is necessarily miserable who hates another. Our Lord prohibits that only, which, from its nature, is opposed to man's happiness. This is therefore one of the most reasonable precepts in the universe. But who can obey it? None but he who has the mind of Christ. But I have it not. Seek it from God; it is that kingdom of heaven which Christ came to establish upon earth. See on chap. iii. 2. This one precept is a sufficient proof of the holiness of the Gospel, and of the truth of the Christian religion. Every false religion flatters man, and accommodates itself to his pride and his passions. None but God could have imposed a yoke so contrary to self-love; and nothing but the supreme eternal love can enable men to practise a precept so insupportable to corrupt nature.

Bless them that curse you] Ευλογειτε, give them good words for their bad words. See the note on Gen. ii. 3.

Do good to them that hate you] Give your enemy every proof that you love him. We must not love in tongue, but in deed and in truth.

Pray for them which despitefully use you] Επηρεαζοντων, from επι against, and Αρης Mars the heathen god of war. Those who are making continual war upon you, and constantly harassing and calumniating you. Pray for them—This is another exquisitely reasonable precept. I cannot change that wicked man's heart; and while it is unchanged he will continue to harass me: God alone can change it: then I must implore him to do that which will at once secure the poor man's salvation, and contribute so much to my own peace.

And persecute you Διωκοντων, those who press hard on and pursue you with hatred and malice, accompanied with repeated acts of enmity.

In this verse our Lord shews us that a man may be our enemy in three different ways.

First, in his heart, by hatred.

Secondly, in his words, by cursing or using direful imprecations (καταρωμενους) against us.

Thirdly, in his actions, by continually harassing and abusing us.

He shews us also how we are to behave to those.

The hatred of the first, we are to meet with love.

The cursings or evil words of the second, we are to meet with good words and blessings.

And the repeated injurious acts of the third, we are to meet with continual prayer to God for the man's salvation.

Verse 45. That ye may be the children of your Father] Instead of υιοι children, some MSS. the latter Persic version, and several of the primitive Fathers, read ομοιοι, that ye may be like to, or resemble your Father who is in heaven. This is certainly our Lord's meaning. As a man's child is called his, because a partaker of his own nature, so a holy person is said to be a child of God, because he is a partaker of the divine nature.

He maketh his sun to rise on the evil] "There is nothing greater than to imitate God in doing good to our enemies. All the creatures of God pronounce the sentence of condemnation on the revengeful: and this sentence is written by the rays of the sun, and with the drops of rain, and indeed by all the natural good things, the use of which God freely gives to his enemies." If God had not loved us while we were his enemies, we could never have become his children: and we shall cease to be such, as soon as we cease to imitate him.

Verse 46. For if ye love them which love you] He who loves only his friends, does nothing for God's sake. He who loves for the sake of pleasure or interest, pays himself. God has no enemy which he hates but sin; we should have no other.

The publicans] That is, tax-gatherers, τελωναι from τελος a tax, and ωνεομαι I buy or farm. A farmer or collector of the taxes or public revenues. Of these there were two classes; the Superior, who were Romans of the equestrian order; and the Inferior, those mentioned in the Gospels, who it appears were mostly Jews.

This class of men was detestable among the Romans, the Greeks, and the Jews, for their intolerable rapacity and avarice. They were abhorred in an especial manner by the Jews, to whom the Roman government was odious: these assisting in collecting the Roman tribute were considered as betrayers of the liberties of their country, and abettors of those who enslaved it. They were something like the tythe farmers in a certain country—a principal cause of the public burthens and discontent. One quotation, of the many produced by Kypke, will amply shew in what detestation they were held among the Greeks.

Theocritus being asked, Which of the wild beasts were the most cruel? answered, Εν μεν τοις ορεσιν, αρκτοι και λεοντες· εν δε ταις πολεσιν, ΤΕΛΩΝΑΙ και συκοφαντται. Bears and lions in the mountains; and TAX-GATHERERS and calumniators, in cities.

Verse 47. And if ye salute your brethren only] Instead of αδελφους brethren, upwards of one hundred MSS. and several of them of great authority and antiquity, have φιλους friends. The Armenian, Slavonic, and Gothic versions, with the latter Syriac, and some of the primitive Fathers, agree in this reading. I scarcely know which to prefer; as brother is more conformable to the Jewish mode of address, it should be retained in the text: the other reading however, tends to confirm that of the Codex Grævii on ver. 43.

On the subject of giving and receiving salutations in Asiatic countries, Mr. Harmer, Observat. vol. ii. p. 327, &c. edit. 1808, has collected much valuable information: the following extract will be sufficient to elucidate our Lord's meaning.

Dr. Doddridge supposes that the salutation our Lord refers to Matt. v. 47. If ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so? means embracing, though it is a different word. I would observe, that it is made use of in the Septuagint to express that action of endearment; and which is made use of by an apocryphal writer, (Ecclus. xxx. 19.) whereas, the word we translate salute, is of a much more general nature: this, I apprehend, arose from his being struck with the thought, that it could never be necessary to caution his disciples, not to restrain the civilities of a common salutation to those of their own religious party. Juvenal when he satirizes the Jews of the apostolic age for their religious opinions, and represents them as unfriendly, and even malevolent to other people; Sat. xiv. and when he mentions their refusing to shew travellers the way, Non monstrare vias, &c. or to point out to them where they might find water to drink when thirsty with journeying, takes no notice of their not saluting those of another nation; yet there is no reason to believe, from these words of CHRIST, that many of them at least would not, and that even a Jewish publican received no salutations from one of his own nation, excepting brother publicans.

"Nor shall we wonder at this, or think it requisite to suppose the word we translate salute (ασπαζομαι) and which certainly, sometimes at least, signifies nothing more than making use of some friendly words upon meeting with people, must here signify something more particular, since we find some of the present inhabitants of the East seem to want this admonition of our Lord. "When the Arabs salute one another," according to Niebuhr, "it is generally in these terms, Salâm, aleikum, Peace be with you; in speaking which words they lay the right hand on the heart. The answer is, Aleikum essalâm, With you be peace. Aged people are inclined to add to these words, And the mercy and blessing of God. The mohammedans of Egypt and Syria never salute a Christian in this manner; they content themselves with saying to them, Good day to you; or Friend how do you do? The Arabs of Yemen, who seldom see any Christians, are not so zealous but that sometimes they will give them the Salâm aleikum."

"Presently after he says: "For a long time I thought the Mohammedan custom of saluting Christians, in a different manner from that made use of to those of their own profession, was an effect of their pride and religious bigotry. I saluted them sometimes with the Salâm aleikum, and I had often only the common answer. At length I observed in Natolia, that the Christians themselves might probably be the cause, that Mohammedans did not make the same return to their civilities that they did to those of their own religion. For the Greek merchants, with whom I travelled in that country, did not seem pleased with my saluting Mohammedans in the Mohammedan manner. And when they were not known to be Christians, by those Turks whom they met with in their journeying, (it being allowed Christian travellers, in those provinces, to wear a white turban, Christians in common being obliged to wear the sash of their turbans, white striped with blue, that banditti might take them at a distance for Turks, and people of courage) they never answered those that addressed them with the compliment of Salám aleikum. One would not, perhaps, suspect that similar customs obtain in our times, among Europeans: but I find that the Roman Catholics of some provinces of Germany, never address the Protestants that live among them with the compliment, JESUS CHRIST be praised; and when such a thing happens by mistake, the Protestants do not return it after the manner in use among Catholics, For ever and ever Amen!

"After this the words of our Lord in the close of the fifth of Matthew, want no farther commentary. The Jews would not address the usual compliment of Peace be to you, to either heathens or publicans: the publicans of the Jewish nation would use it to their countrymen, that were publicans, but not to heathens; though the more rigid Jews would not do it to them, any more than to heathens; our Lord required his disciples to lay aside the moroseness of Jews, and express more extensive benevolence in their salutations. There seems to be nothing of embracing thought of in this case, though that, doubtless, was practised anciently among relations, and intimate friends, as it is among modern Asiatics."

If not to salute, be a heathenish indifference; to hide hatred under outward civilities, is a diabolic treachery. To pretend much love and affection for those for whom we have neither—to use towards them complimentary phrases, to which we affix no meaning, but that they mean nothing, is highly offensive in the sight of that God by whom actions are weighed and words judged.

Do not—the publicans] Τελωναι,—but εθνικοι heathens, is adopted by Griesbach, instead of τελωναι, on the authority of Codd. Vatican. & Bezæ, and several others; together with the Coptic, Syriac later, and Syriac Jerusalem; two Arabic, Persic, Slavonic; all the Itala but one; Vulgate, Saxon, and several of the primitive Fathers.

Verse 48. Be ye therefore perfect—as your Father] God himself is the grand law, sole giver, and only pattern of the perfection which he recommends to his children. The words are very emphatic, εσεσθε ουν υμεις τελειοι, Ye shall be therefore perfect—ye shall be filled with the spirit of that God whose name is Mercy, and whose nature is love. God has many imitators of his power, independence, justice, &c. but few of his love, condescension, and kindness. He calls himself LOVE, to teach us that in this consists that perfection, the attainment of which he has made both our duty and privilege: for these words of our Lord include both a command and a promise.

"Can we be fully saved from sin in this world?" is an important question, to which this text gives a satisfactory answer: "Ye shall be perfect as your Father, who is in heaven, is perfect."—As in his infinite nature there is no sin, nothing but goodness and love; so in your finite nature there shall dwell no sin, for the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, shall make you free from the law of sin and death, Rom. viii. 2. God shall live in, fill, and rule your hearts; and in what He fills and influences, neither Satan nor sin can have any part. If men, slighting their own mercies, cry out, This is impossible. Whom does this arguing reprove?—God, who on this ground, has given a command, the fulfilment of which is impossible. "But who can bring a clean out of an unclean thing?" God Almighty—and however inveterate the disease of sin may be, the grace of the Lord Jesus can fully cure it; and who will say, that he who laid down his life for our souls, will not use his power completely to effect that salvation, which he has died to procure. "But where is the person thus saved?" Wherever he is found who loves God with all his heart, soul, mind and strength; and his neighbour as himself: and for the honour of Christianity and its AUTHOR, may we not hope there are many such in the church of God, not known indeed by any profession of this kind which they make, but by a surer testimony, that of uniformly holy tempers, piety to God, and beneficence to man?

Dr. Lightfoot is not perfectly satisfied with the usual mode of interpreting the 22d verse of this chapter. I subjoin the substance of what he says. Having given a general exposition of the word brother, which the Jews understood as signifying none but an Israelite—ενοχος, which we translate is in danger of, and what he shews the Jews used to signify, is exposed to, merits, or is guilty of; and the word gehenna, hell-fire, which he explains as I have done above, he comes to the three offences, and their sentences.

The FIRST is causeless anger, which he thinks too plain to require explanation; but into the two following he enters in considerable detail:

"The SECOND. Whosoever shall say to his brother, 'Racha,' a nickname, or scornful title usual, which they disdainfully put one upon another, and very commonly; and therefore our Saviour has mentioned this word, the rather because it was of so common use among them. Take these few examples:

"A certain man sought to betake himself to repentance, (and restitution). His wife said to him, 'Rekah, if thou make restitution, even thy girdle about thee is not thy own, &c. Tanchum, fol. 5.'

"Rabbi Jochanan was teaching concerning the building of Jerusalem with saphires and diamonds, &c. One of his scholars laughed him to scorn. But afterwards, being convinced of the truth of the thing, he saith to him, 'Rabbi, do thou expound, for it is fit for thee to expound: as thou saidst, so have I seen it.' He saith to him, 'Rekah, hadst thou not seen, thou wouldest not have believed, &c.'" Midras Tillin, fol. 38, col. 4.

"To what is the thing like? To a king of flesh and blood, who took to wife a king's daughter: he saith to her, 'Wait and fill me a cup;' but she would not: whereupon he was angry, and put her away: she went, and was married to a sordid fellow; and he saith to her, 'Wait, and fill me a cup;' she said unto him, 'Rekah, I am a king's daughter &c.' Idem in Psalm cxxxvii.

"A Gentile saith to an Israelite, 'I have a choice dish for thee to eat of.' He saith, 'What is it?' He answers, 'Swine's flesh.' He saith to him, 'Rekah, even what you kill of clean beasts, is forbidden us, much more this.' Tanchum, fol. 18. col. 4.

"The THIRD offence is to say to a brother, 'Thou fool,' which how to distinguish from Racha, which signifies an empty-fellow, were some difficulty, but that Solomon is a good dictionary here for us, who takes the term continually here for a wicked wretch and reprobate, and in opposition to spiritual wisdom, so that in the first clause, is condemned causeless anger; in the second, scornful taunting and reproaching of a brother; and in the last, calling him a reprobate and wicked, or uncharitably censuring his spiritual and eternal estate. And this last does more especially hit the Scribes and Pharisees, who arrogated to themselves only to be called חכמים chocamim, wise-men, but of all others they had this scornful and uncharitable opinion, "This people, that knoweth not the law, is cursed." John vii. 49.

"And now for the penalties denounced upon these offences, let us look upon them, taking notice of these two traditions of the Jews, which our Saviour seems to face, and to contradict.

"1st. That they accounted the command, Thou shalt not kill, to aim only at actual murder. So that in their collecting the six hundred and thirteen precepts out of the law, they understand that command to mean but this: 'That one should not kill an Israelite,' and accordingly they allotted this only violation of it to judgments. Against this wild gloss and practice, he speaks in the first clause: Ye have heard it said, Thou shalt not kill, and he that killeth or committeth actual murder, is liable to judgment, and ye extend the violation of that command no further; but I say to you, that causeless anger against thy brother is a violation of that command, and even that maketh a man liable to judgment.

"2nd. They allotted that murder only to be judged by the council or Sanhedrin, that was committed by a man in propria persona, let them speak their own sense, &c. Talm. in Sanhedrin, per. 9.

"Any one that kills his neighbour with his hand, as if he strike him with a sword, or with a stone that kills him, or strangle him till he die, or burn him in the fire, seeing that he kills him any how in his own person, lo! such an one must be put to death by the Sanhedrin: but he that hires another to kill his neighbour, or that sends his servants, and they kill him, or that violently thrusts him before a lion, or the like, and the beasts kills him: any one of these is a shedder of blood, and the guilt of shedding of blood is upon him, and he is liable to death by the hand of Heaven, but he is not to be put to death by the Sanhedrin. And whence is the proof that it must be thus? Because it is said, He that sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed. This is he that slays a man himself, and not by the hand of another. Your blood of your lives will I require. This is he that slays himself. At the hand of every beast will I require it. This is he that delivers up his neighbour before a beast to be rent in pieces. At the hand of man, even at the hand of every man's brother, will I require the life of man. This is he that hires others to kill his neighbour: In this interpretation, requiring, is spoken of all the three, behold their judgment is delivered over to Heaven (or God). And all these manslayers and the like, who are not liable to death by the Sanhedrin; if the king of Israel will slay them by the judgment of the kingdom, and the law of nations, he may, &c." Maym. ubi supr. per. 2.

"You may observe in these wretched traditions a twofold killing, and a twofold judgment: a man's killing another in his own person, and with his own hand, and such an one liable to the judgment of the Sanhedrin, to be put to death by them, as a murderer; and a man that killed another by proxy; not with his own hand, but hiring another to kill him, or turning a beast or serpent upon him to kill him. This man is not to be judged and executed by the Sanhedrin, but referred and reserved only to the judgment of God. So that we see plainly from hence, in what sense the word judgment is used in the latter end of the preceding verse, and the first clause of this, namely, not for the judgment of any one of the Sanhedrins, as it is commonly understood, but for the judgment of God. In the former verse, Christ speaks their sense, and in the first clause of this, his own, in application to it. Ye have heard it said, that any man that kills is liable to the judgment of God; but I say unto you, that he that is but angry with his brother without a cause, is liable to the judgment of God. You have heard it said, that he only that commits murder with his own hand, is liable to the council, or Sanhedrin, as a murderer; but I say unto you, that he that but calls his brother Racha, as common a word as ye make it and a thing of nothing, he is liable to be judged by the Sanhedrin.

"Lastly, he that saith to his brother, Thou fool, wicked one, or cast-away, shall be in danger of hell-fire, ενοχος εις γεενναν πυρος. There are two observable things in the words. The first is the change of case from what was before; there it was said τη κρισει—τω συνεδριω, but here, εις γεενναν. It is but an emphatical raising of the sense, to make it the more feeling and to speak home. He that saith to his brother, Raka, shall be in danger of the council; but he that says, Thou fool, shall be in danger of a penalty even to hell-fire. And thus our Saviour equals the sin and penalty in a very just parable. Unjust anger, with God's just anger and judgment; public reproach, with public correction by the council; and censuring for a child of hell, to the fire of hell.

"2nd. It is not said εις πυρ γεενης, To the fire of hell, but εις γεενναν πυρος, To a hell of fire; in which expression he sets the emphasis still higher. And besides the reference to the valley of Hinnom, he seems to refer to that penalty used by the Sanhedrin of burning: the most bitter death that they used to put men to: the manner of which was thus: They set the malefactor in a dunghill up to the knees: and they put a towel about his neck, and one pulled one way, and another the opposite, till, by thus strangling him, they forced him to open his mouth. Then they poured boiling lead into his mouth, which went down into his belly, and so burnt his bowels. Talm. in Sanhedrin per. 7.

"Now, having spoken in the clause before, of being judged by the Sanhedrin, whose most terrible penalty was this burning, he doth in this clause raise the penalty higher; namely, of burning in hell; not with a little scalding lead, but even with a hell of fire." It is possible that our Lord might have reference to such customs as these.

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. That ye do not your alms] Δικαιοσυνην υμων μη ποιειτε, perform not your acts of righteousness—such as alms-giving, fasting, and prayer, mentioned immediately after. Instead of δικαιοσυνην righteousness, or acts of righteousness, the reading in the text, that which has been commonly received, is ελεημοσυνην, alms. But the first reading has been inserted in several editions, and is supported by the Codd. Vatican, and Bezæ, some others, and several versions, all the Itala except one, and the Vulgate. The Latin Fathers have justitiam, a word of the same meaning. Mr. Gregory has amply proved, צדקה tsidekah, righteousness, was a common word for alms among the Jews. Works, 4to. p. 58. 1671. R. D. Kimchi says, that צדקה tsidekah, Isai. lix. 14. means alms-giving: and the phrase נתן צדקה natan tsidekah, is used by the Jews to signify the giving of alms. The following passage from Dr. Lightfoot shews that it was thus commonly used among the Jewish writers:

"It is questioned," says he, "whether Matthew writ Ελεημοσυνην, alms, or Δικαιοσυνην, righteousness. I answer,

"I. That our Saviour certainly said צדקה tsidekah, righteousness, (or, in Syriac, זדקתא zidkatha) I make no doubt at all; but, that that word could not be otherwise understood by the common people than of alms, there is as little doubt to be made. For although the word צדקה tsidekah, according to the idiom of the Old Testament, signifies nothing else than righteousness; yet now, when our Saviour spoke these words, it signified nothing so much as alms.

"II. Christ used also the same word זדקתא zidkatha, righteousness, in the three verses next following, and Matthew used the word ελεημοσυνη, alms: but by what right, I beseech you, should he call it δικαιοσυνην, righteousness, in the first verse, and ελεημοσυνην, alms, in the following; when Christ every where used one and the same word? Matthew might not change in Greek, where our Saviour had not changed in Syriac: therefore we must say that the Lord Jesus used the word צדקה tsidekah, or זדקתא zidkatha, in these four first verses; but that, speaking in the dialect of common people, he was understood by the common people to speak of alms. Now they called alms by the name of righteousness, for the Fathers of the traditions taught, and the common people believed, that alms contributed very much to justification. Hear the Jewish chair in this matter—For one farthing given to a poor man in alms, a man is made partaker of the beatific vision: where it renders these words, Psal. xvii. 15. I shall behold thy face in righteousness, after this manner, I shall behold thy face, BECAUSE of ALMS. Bava Bathra.

"This money goeth for alms, that my sons may live, and that I may obtain the world to come. Bab. Rosh. Hashshanah.

"A man's table now expiates by alms, as heretofore the altar did by sacrifice. Beracoth.

"If you afford alms out of your purse, God will keep you from all damage and harm. Hieros. Peah.

"MONOBAZES the king bestowed his goods liberally upon the poor, and had these words spoken to him by his kinsmen and friends—'Your ancestors increased both their own riches, and those that were left them by their fathers; but you waste both your own and those of your ancestors.' To whom he answered—'My fathers laid up their wealth on earth: I lay up mine in heaven. As it is written, Truth shall flourish out of the earth, but Righteousness shall look down from heaven. My fathers laid up treasures that bear no fruit, but I lay up such as bear fruit. As it is said, It shall be well with the just, for they shall eat the fruit of their own works. My fathers treasured up, when power was in their hands; but I when it is not. As it is said, Justice and judgment is the habitation of his throne. My fathers heaped up for others; I for myself. As it is said, And this shall be to thee for righteousness. They scraped together for this world; I for the world to come. As it is said, Righteousness shall deliver from death: Ibid. these things are also recited in the Babylonian Talmud.

"You see plainly in what sense he understands righteousness, namely, in the sense of alms: and that sense not so much framed in his own imagination, as in that of the whole nation, and which the Royal Catechumen had imbibed from the Pharisees his teachers.

"Behold the justifying and saving virtue of alms from the very work done according to the doctrine of the Pharisaical chair! And hence, the opinion of this efficacy of alms so far prevailed with the deceived people, that they pointed out alms by no other name (confined within one single word) than צדקה tsidekah, righteousness. Perhaps those words of our Saviour are spoken in derision of this doctrine. Yea, give those things which ye have in alms, and behold all things shall be clean to you, Luke xi. 41. With good reason indeed exhorting them to give alms; but yet withal striking at the covetousness of the Pharisees, and confuting their vain opinion of being clean by the washing of their hands from their own opinion of the efficacy of alms. As if he had said, "Ye assert that alms justifies and saves, and therefore ye call it by the name of righteousness; why therefore do ye affect cleanness by the washing of hands; and not rather by the performance of charity." LIGHTFOOT's Works, Vol. II. p. 153.

Before men] Our Lord does not forbid public alms-giving, fasting and prayer, but simply censures those vain and hypocritical persons who do these things publicly, that they may be seen of men, and receive from them the reputation of saints, &c.

Verse 2. Therefore when thou doest thine alms] In the first verse the exhortation is general; Take YE heed. In this verse the address is pointed—and THOU—man—woman—who readest—hearest.

Do not sound a trumpet] It is very likely that this was literally practised among the Pharisees, who seemed to live on the public esteem, and were excessively self-righteous and vain. Having something to distribute by way of alms, it is very probable they caused this to be published by blowing a trumpet or horn, under pretence of collecting the poor; though with no other design than to gratify their own ambition. There is a custom in the East not much unlike this. "The derveeshes carry horns with them which they frequently blow when any thing is given to them, in honour of the donor. It is not impossible that some of the poor Jews who begged alms might be furnished like the Persian derveeshes, who are a sort of religious beggars, and that these hypocrites might be disposed to confine their alms-giving to those that they knew would pay them this honour." HARMER's Observat. vol. i. p. 474.

It must be granted, that in the Jewish writings there is no such practice referred to as that which I have supposed above, viz. blowing a trumpet to gather the poor, or the poor blowing a horn when relieved. Hence some learned men have thought that the word שופר shopher, a trumpet, refers to the hole in the public alms chest, into which the money was dropped which was allotted for the service of the poor. Such holes, because they were wide at one end and grew gradually narrow towards the other, were actually termed שופרות shopheroth, trumpets, by the Rabbins; of this Schoetgen furnishes several examples. An ostentatious man, who wished to attract the notice of those around him, would throw in his money with some force into these trumpet-resembling holes, and thus he might be said שופר, σαλπιζειν, to sound the trumpet. The Jerusalem Gemara, Tract Shekalim, describes these שופרות shopheroth thus—These trumpet holes were crooked, narrow above and wide below, in order to prevent fraud. As our Lord only uses the words, μη σαλπισης, it may be tantamount to our term jingle. Do not make a public ostentatious jingle of that money which you give to public charities. Pride and hypocrisy are the things here reprehended. The Pharisees, no doubt, felt the weight of the reproof.

Works of charity and mercy should be done as much in private as is consistent with the advancement of the glory of God, and the effectual relief of the poor.

In the synagogues and in the streets] That such chests or boxes for receiving the alms of well-disposed people, were placed in the synagogues, we may readily believe; but what were the streets? Schoetgen supposes that courts or avenues in the temple and in the synagogues may be intended—places where the people were accustomed to walk, for air, amusement, &c. for it is not to be supposed that such chests were fixed in the public streets.

They have their reward] That is, the honour and esteem of men which they sought. God is under no obligation to them—they did nothing with an eye to his glory, and from HIM they can expect no recompence. They had their recompence in this life; and could expect none in the world to come.

Verse 3. Let not thy left hand know] In many cases, works of charity must be hidden from even our nearest relatives, who if they knew, would hinder us from doing what God has given us power and inclination to perform. We must go even farther; and conceal them as far as is possible from ourselves, by not thinking of them, or eyeing them with complacency. They are given to GOD, and should be hidden in HIM.

Verse 4. Which seeth in secret] We should ever remember that the eye of the Lord is upon us, and that he sees not only the act, but also every motive that led to it.

Shall reward thee openly.] Will give thee the fullest proofs of his acceptance of thy work of faith, and labour of love, by encreasing that substance which, for his sake, thou sharest with the poor; and will manifest his approbation in thy own heart, by the witness of his spirit.

Verse 5. And when thou prayest] Οταν προσευχη. Προσευχη prayer, is compounded of προς with, and ευχη a vow, because to pray right, a man binds himself to God as by a vow, to live to his glory, if he will grant him his grace, &c. Ευχομαι signifies to pour out prayers or vows, from ευ well, and χεω I pour out; probably alluding to the offerings or libations which were poured out before, or on the altar. A proper idea of prayer is, a pouring out of the soul unto God, as a free-will offering, solemnly and eternally dedicated to him, accompanied with the most earnest desire that it may know, love, and serve him alone. He that comes thus to God will ever be heard and blessed. Prayer is the language of dependence; he who prays not, is endeavouring to live independently of God: this was the first curse, and continues to be the great curse of mankind. In the beginning Satan said, Eat this fruit; ye shall then be as God; i. e. ye shall be independent: the man hearkened to his voice, sin entered into the world, and notwithstanding the full manifestation of the deception, the ruinous system is still pursued; man will, if possible, live independently of God; hence he either prays not at all, or uses the language without the spirit of prayer.

Thou shalt not be as the hypocrites] Υποκριται. From υπο under, and κριτομαι to be judged, thought: properly a stage-player, who acts under a mask, personating a character different from his own; a counterfeit, a dissembler: one who would be thought to be different from what he really is. A person who wishes to be taken for a follower of God, but who has nothing of religion except the outside.

Love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets] The Jewish phylacterical prayers were long, and the canonical hours obliged them to repeat these prayers wherever they happened to be; and the Pharisees, who were full of vain glory, contrived to be overtaken in the streets by the canonical hour, that they might be seen by the people, and applauded for their great and conscientious piety. See Lightfoot. As they had no piety but that which was outward, they endeavoured to let it fully appear, that they might make the most of it among the people. It would not have answered their end to kneel before God, for then they might have been unnoticed by men; and consequently have lost that reward which they had in view: viz. the esteem and applause of the multitude.

Verse 6. But thou, when thou prayest] This is a very impressive and emphatic address. But THOU! whosoever thou art, Jew, Pharisee, Christian—enter into thy closet. Prayer is the most secret intercourse of the soul with God, and as it were the conversation of one heart with another. The world is too prophane and treacherous to be of the secret. We must shut the door against it: endeavour to forget it, with all the affairs which busy and amuse it. Prayer requires retirement, at least of the heart; for this may be fitly termed the closet in the house of God, which house the body of every real Christian is, 1 Cor. iii. 16. To this closet we ought to retire even in public prayer, and in the midst of company.

Reward thee openly.] What goodness is there equal to this of God! to give not only what we ask, and more than we ask, but to reward even prayer itself! How great advantage is it to serve a prince who places prayers in the number of services, and reckons to his subjects' account, even their trust and confidence in begging all things of him!

Verse 7. Use not vain repetitions] Μη βαττολογησητε. Suidas explains this word well; "πολυλογια, much speaking, from one Battus, who made very prolix hymns, in which the same idea frequently recurred." "A frequent repetition of awful and striking words may often be the result of earnestness and fervour. See Dan. ix. 3—20. but great length of prayer, which will of course involve much sameness and idle repetition, naturally creates fatigue and carelessness in the worshipper, and seems to suppose ignorance or inattention in the Deity; a fault against which our Lord more particularly wishes to secure them." See ver. 8. This judicious note is from the late Mr. Gilbert Wakefield, who illustrates it with the following quotations from the Heautontimorumenos of Terence,

Ohe! jam desine Deos, uxor, gratulando OBTUNDERE,
Tuam esse inventam gnatam: nisi illos ex TUO INGENIO judicas, Ut nil credas INTELLIGERE, nisi idem DICTUM SIT CENTIES.

"Pray thee, wife, cease from STUNNING the gods with thanksgivings, because thy child is in safety; unless thou judgest of them from thyself, that they cannot UNDERSTAND a thing, unless they are told of it a HUNDRED TIMES." Heaut. ver. 880.

Prayer requires more of the heart than of the tongue. The eloquence of prayer consists in the fervency of desire, and the simplicity of faith. The abundance of fine thoughts, studied and vehement motions, and the order and politeness of the expressions, are things which compose a mere human harangue, not a humble and christian prayer. Our trust and confidence ought to proceed from that which God is able to do in us, and not from that which we can say to him. It is abominable, says the HEDAYAH, that a person offering up prayers to God, should say, "I beseech thee, by the glory of thy heavens!" or, "by the splendour of thy throne!" for a stile of this nature would lead to suspect that the Almighty derived glory from the heavens; whereas the heavens are created, but God with all his attributes is eternal and inimitable. HEDAYAH, vol. iv. p. 121.

This is the sentiment of a Mohammedan; and yet for this vain repetition, the Mohammedans are peculiarly remarkable; they often use such words as the following:

يا الله يا الله يا الله يا الله يا رب يا رب يا رب يا رب
يا حي و قيوم يا حي و قيوم يا حي و قيوم يا حي و قيوم
يا بديع السموات و الارض يا ذا الجلال و الاكرام —وغيرة

O God, O God, O God, O God!—O Lord, O Lord, O Lord, O Lord!—O living, O immortal, O living, O immortal, O living, O immortal, O living, O immortal!—O Creator of the heavens and the earth!—O thou who art endowed with Majesty and authority, O wonderful, &c. I have extracted the above from a form of prayer used by Tipoo Sahib, which I met with in a book of devotion; in which there were several prayers written with his own hand, and signed with his own name.

Of this vain repetition in civil matters among the Jews, many instances might be given, and not a few examples might be found among Christians. The heathens abounded with them: see several quoted by Lightfoot.—Let the parricide be dragged! We beseech thee, Augustus, let the parricide be dragged! This is the thing we ask, let the parricide be dragged! Hear us, Cæsar; let the false accusers be cast to the lion! Hear us, Cæsar, let the false accusers be condemned to the lion! Hear us, Cæsar, &c. It was a maxim among the Jews, that "he who multiplies prayer, must be heard." This is correct, if it only imply perseverance in supplication; but if it be used to signify the multiplying of words, or even forms of prayer, it will necessarily produce the evil which our Lord reprehends: Be not as the heathen—use not vain repetitions, &c.

As the heathen] The Vatican MS. reads υποκριται, like the hypocrites. Unmeaning words, useless repetitions, and complimentary phrases in prayer, are in general the result of heathenism, hypocrisy, or ignorance.

Verse 8. Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of] Prayer is not designed to inform God, but to give man a sight of his misery; to humble his heart, to excite his desire, to inflame his faith, to animate his hope, to raise his soul from earth to heaven, and to put him in mind that THERE is his Father, his country, and inheritance.

In the preceding verses we may see three faults, which our Lord commands us to avoid in prayer:

1st. HYPOCRISY. Be not as the hypocrites. ver. 5.

2dly. DISSIPATION. Enter into thy closet. ver. 6.

3dly. MUCH SPEAKING, or UNMEANING REPETITION; Be not like the heathens. ver. 7.

Verse 9. After this manner therefore pray ye] Forms of prayer were frequent among the Jews; and every public teacher gave one to his disciples. Some forms were drawn out to a considerable length, and from these abridgments were made: to the latter sort the following prayer properly belongs,

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

10 Thy kingdom come. [a] Thy will be done in earth, [b] as it is in heaven.

and consequently, besides its own very important use, it is a plan for a more extended devotion. What satisfaction is it to learn from God himself, with what words, and in what manner he would have us to pray to him, so as not to pray in vain! A king, who himself draws up the petition which he allows to be presented to himself, has doubtless the fullest determination to grant the request. We do not sufficiently consider the value of this prayer; the respect and attention which it requires, the preference to be given to it, its fulness and perfection, the frequent use we should make of it, and the spirit which we should bring with it. "Lord, teach us how to pray!" is a prayer necessary to prayer: for unless we are divinely instructed in the manner, and influenced by the spirit of true devotion, even the prayer taught us by Jesus Christ may be repeated, without profit to our souls.

Our Father] It was a maxim of the Jews, that a man should not pray alone, but join with the church; by which they particularly meant that he should, whether alone or with the synagogue, use the plural number, as comprehending all the followers of God. Hence, they say, Let none pray the short prayer, i. e. as the gloss expounds it, the prayer in the singular, but in the plural number. See Lightfoot on this place.

This prayer was evidently made in a peculiar manner for the children of God. And hence we are taught to say, not MY Father, but OUR Father. The heart, says one, of a child of God, is a brotherly heart, in respect of all other christians: it asks nothing but in the spirit of unity, fellowship, and christian charity; desiring that for its brethren, which it desires for itself.

The word Father, placed here at the beginning of this prayer, includes two grand ideas, which should serve as a foundation to all our petitions: 1st. That tender and respectful love which we should feel for God, such as that which children feel for their fathers. 2dly. That strong confidence in God's love to us, such as fathers have for their children. Thus all the petitions in this prayer stand in strictest reference to the word father; the first three referring to the love we have for God; and the three last, to that confidence which we have in the love he bears to us.

The relation we stand in to this first and best of beings, dictates to us reverence for his person, zeal for his honour, obedience to his will, submission to his dispensations and chastisements, and resemblance to his nature.

Which art in heaven] The phrase אבינו שבשמים abinu sheboshemayim, our Father who art in heaven, was very common among the ancient Jews; and was used by them precisely in the same sense as it is used here by our Lord.

This phrase in the Scriptures, seems used to express:

1st. His OMNIPRESENCE. The heavens of heavens cannot contain thee. 1 Kings viii. 27. that is, Thou fillest immensity.

2dly. His MAJESTY and DOMINION over his creatures. Art thou not God in heaven, and rulest thou not over all the kingdoms of the heathen? 2 Chron xx. 6.

3dly. His POWER and MIGHT. Art thou not God in heaven, and in thy hand is there not power and might, so that no creature is able to withstand thee! 2 Chron. xx. 6. Our God is in heaven, and hath done whatsoever he pleased. Psal. cxv. 3.

4thly. His OMNISCIENCE. The Lord's throne is in heaven, his eyes behold, his eye-lids try the children of men. Psal. xi. 4. The Lord looketh down from heaven, he beholdeth all the sons of men. Psal. xxxiii. 13—15.

5thly. His infinite PURITY and HOLINESS. Look down from thy holy habitation, &c. Deut. 26. 15. Thou art the high and lofty One, who inhabiteth Eternity, whose name is holy. Isai. lvii. 15.

Hallowed] Αγιασθητω. ἁγιαζω· from α negative, and γη, the earth, a thing separated from the earth, or from earthly purposes and employments. As the word sanctified, or hallowed, in Scripture is frequently used for the consecration of a thing or person to a holy use or office, as the Levites, first-born, Tabernacle, Temple, and their utensils, which were all set apart from every earthly, common, or profane use; and employed wholly in the service of God, so the Divine Majesty may be said to be sanctified by us, in analogy to those things, viz. when we separate him from, and in our conceptions and desires, exalt him above earth, and all things.

Thy name.] That is, GOD himself, with all the Attributes of his Divine Nature—his Power, Wisdom, Justice, Mercy, &c.

We hallow God's name, 1st. With our lips, when all our conversation is holy, and we speak of those things which are meet to minister grace to the hearers.

2dly. In our thoughts, when we suppress every rising evil, and have our tempers regulated by his grace and spirit.

3dly. In our lives, when we begin, continue, and end our works to his glory. If we have an eye to God in all we perform, then every act of our common employment will be an act of religious worship.

4thly. In our families, when we endeavour to bring up our children in the discipline and admonition of the Lord; instructing also our servants in the way of righteousness.

5thly. In a particular calling or business, when we separate the falsity, deception, and lying, commonly practised, from it; buying and selling, as in the sight of the holy and just God.

Verse 10. Thy kingdom come.] The ancient Jews scrupled not to say: He prays not at all, in whose prayers there is no mention of the kingdom of God. Hence, they were accustomed to say, "Let him cause his kingdom to reign, and his redemption to flourish: and let the Messiah speedily come and deliver his people."

The universal sway of the sceptre of Christ:—God has promised that the kingdom of Christ shall be exalted above all kingdoms. Dan. vii. 14—27. That it shall overcome all others, and be at last the universal empire. Isai. ix. 7. Connect this with the explanation given of this phrase, ch. iii. 2.

Thy will be done] This petition is properly added to the preceding, for when the kingdom of righteousness, peace, and joy, in the Holy Spirit, is established in the heart, there is then an ample provision made for the fulfilment of the Divine will.

The will of God, is infinitely good, wise and holy; to have it fulfilled in and among men, is to have infinite goodness, wisdom, and holiness, diffused throughout the universe; and earth made the counterpart of heaven.

As it is in heaven.] The Jews maintained, that they were the angels of God upon earth, as those pure spirits were angels of God in heaven; hence they said, "As the angels sanctify the Divine name in heaven, so the Israelites sanctify the Divine name upon earth." See Schoetgen, Observe, 1st. The salvation of the soul, is the result of two wills conjoined: the will of God, and the will of man. If God will not the salvation of man, he cannot be saved: If man will not the salvation God has prepared for him, he cannot be delivered from his sins. 2dly. This petition certainly points out a deliverance from all sin; for nothing that is unholy can consist with the divine will, and if this be fulfilled in man, surely sin shall be banished from his soul. 3dly. This is further evident from these words, as it is in heaven: i. e. as the angels do it: viz. with all zeal, diligence, love, delight, and perseverance. 4thly. Does not the petition plainly imply, we may live without sinning against God? Surely the holy angels never mingle iniquity with their loving obedience; and as our Lord teaches us to pray, that we do his will here, as they do it in heaven; can it be thought he would put a petition in our mouths the fulfilment of which was impossible? 5thly. This certainly destroys the assertion: "There is no such state of purification to be attained here, in which it may be said, the soul is redeemed from sinful passions and desires," for it is on EARTH, that we are commanded to pray that this will, which is our sanctification, may be done. 6thly. Our souls can never be truly happy, till our WILLS be entirely subjected to, and become one with the will of God. 7thly. How can any person offer this petition to his Maker, who thinks of nothing less than the performance of the will of God, and of nothing more than doing his own?

Some see the mystery of the Trinity in the three preceding petitions. The first being addressed to the Father, as the source of all holiness. The second, to the Son, who establishes the kingdom of God upon earth. The third, to the Holy Spirit, who by his energy works in men to will and to perform.

To offer these three petitions with success at the Throne of God, three graces, essential to our salvation, must be brought into exercise; and, indeed, the petitions themselves necessarily suppose them. FAITH, Our Father—for he that cometh to God, must believe that he is.

HOPE, Thy kingdom come—For this grace has for its object good things to come.

LOVE, Thy will be done—For love is the incentive to, and principle of all obedience to God, and beneficence to man.

Verse 11. Give us this day our daily bread] The word επιουσιον has greatly perplexed critics and commentators. I find upwards of thirty different explanations of it. It is found in no Greek writer before the Evangelists, and Origen says expressly, that it was formed by them, αλλ' εοικε πεπλασθαι υπο των ευαγγελιστων. The interpretation of Theophylact, one of the best of the Greek Fathers, has ever appeared to me to be the best, Αρτος επι τη ουσια και συστασει ημων αυταρκης, Bread, sufficient for our substance or support, i. e. That quantity of food which is necessary to support our health and strength, by being changed into the substance of our bodies. Its composition is of επι and ουσια, proper or sufficient for support. Mr. Wakefield thinks it probable, that the word was originally written επι ουσιαν, which coalesced by degrees, till they became the επιουσιον of the MSS. There is probably an allusion here to the custom of travellers in the East, who were wont to reserve a part of the food given them the preceding evening to serve for their breakfast or dinner the next day. But as this was not sufficient for the whole day, they were therefore obliged to depend on the providence of God for the additional supply. In Luke xv. 12, 13. ουσια signifies, what a person has to live on; and nothing can be more natural than to understand the compound επιουσιος, of that additional supply which the traveller needs to complete the provision necessary for a day's eating, over and above what he had then in his possession. See Harmer.

The word is so very peculiar and expressive, and seems to trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you:

15 But [a] if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.

16 Moreover [b] when ye fast, be not, have been made on purpose by the Evangelist, that more than merely bodily nourishment seems to be intended by it. Indeed, many of the primitive Fathers understood it as comprehending that daily supply of grace which the soul requires to keep it in health and vigour: He who uses the petition would do well to keep both in view. Observe, 1. God is the author and dispenser of all temporal as well as spiritual good. 2. We have merited no kind of good from his hand, and therefore must receive it as a free gift: give us, &c. We must depend on him daily for support; we are not permitted to ask any thing for to morrow: give us to day. 4. That petition of the ancient Jews is excellent: "Lord, the necessities of thy people Israel are many, and their knowledge small, so that they know not how to disclose their necessities: Let it be thy good pleasure to give to every man, what sufficeth for food!" Thus they expressed their dependance, and left it to God to determine what was best and most suitable. We must ask only that which is essential to our support, God having promised neither luxuries nor superfluities.

Verse 12. And forgive us our debts] Sin is represented here under the notion of a debt, and as our sins are many, they are called here debts. God made man that he might live to his glory, and gave him a law to walk by, and if, when he does any thing that tends not to glorify God, he contracts a debt with Divine Justice, how much more is he debtor when he breaks the law by actual transgression. It has been justly observed, "All the attributes of God are reasons of obedience to man; those attributes are infinite: every sin is an act of ingratitude, or rebellion against all these attributes, therefore sin is infinitely sinful."

Forgive us.—Man has nothing to pay: if his debts are not forgiven, they must stand charged against him for ever; as he is absolutely insolvent. Forgiveness, therefore, must come from the free mercy of God in Christ: and how strange is it, we cannot have the old debt cancelled, without (by that very means) contracting a new one, as great as the old! but the credit is transferred from Justice to Mercy. While sinners, we are in debt to infinite Justice; when pardoned, in debt to endless Mercy: and as a continuance in a state of grace, necessarily implies a continual communication of mercy, so the debt goes on increasing ad infinitum. Strange economy in the divine procedure, which by rendering a man an infinite debtor, keeps him eternally dependant on his Creator! How good is God! and what does this state of dependance imply? a union with, and participation of the fountain of eternal goodness and felicity!

As we forgive our debtors.] It was a maxim among the ancient Jews, that no man should lie down in his bed, without forgiving those who had offended him. That man condemns himself to suffer eternal punishment, who makes use of this prayer with revenge and hatred in his heart. He who will not attend to a condition so advantageous to himself, (remitting a hundred pence to his debtor, that his own creditor may remit him 10,000 talents) is a madman, who, to oblige his neighbour to suffer an hour, is himself determined to suffer everlastingly! This condition of forgiving our neighbour, though it cannot possibly merit any thing; yet it is that condition without which God will pardon no man. See ver. 14 and 15.

Verse 13. And lead us not into temptation] That is bring us not into sore trial. Πειρασμον, which may be here rendered sore trial, comes from πειρω, to pierce through, as with a spear or spit, used by some of the best Greek writers. Several of the primitive fathers understood it something in this way; and have therefore added quam ferre non possimus, "which we cannot bear." The word not only implies, violent assaults from Satan, but also sorely afflictive circumstances, none of which we have as yet, grace or fortitude sufficient to bear. Bring us not in, or, lead us not in.—This is a mere Hebraism: God is said to do a thing, which he only permits or suffers to be done.

The process of temptation is often as follows: 1st. A simple evil thought. 2ndly. A strong imagination, or impression made on the imagination, by the thing to which we are tempted. 3dly. Delight in viewing it. 4thly. Consent of the will to perform it. Thus lust is conceived, sin is finished, and death brought forth. Jam. 1. 15. See also on chap. iv. 1. A man may be tempted without entering into the temptation: entering into it, implies giving way, closing in with, and embracing it.

But deliver us from evil] Απο του πονηρου, from the wicked one. Satan is expressly called ὁ πονηρὸς, the wicked one. Matt. xiii. 19 and 38. compare with Mark. iv. 15. Luke viii. 12. This epithet of Satan comes from πονος, labour, sorrow, misery, because of the drudgery which is found in the way of sin, the sorrow that accompanies the commission of it, and the misery which is entailed upon it, and in which it ends.

It is said in the MISHNA, Tit. Beracoth, that Rabbi Judah was wont to pray thus: "Let it be thy good pleasure to deliver us from impudent men, and from impudence: from an evil man, and an evil chance; from an evil affection, an evil companion, and an evil neighbour; from Satan the destroyer, from a hard judgment, and a hard adversary." See Lightfoot.

chains, and loose our bands—snatch, pluck us from the evil, and its calamitous issue.

For thine is the kingdom, &c.] The whole of this Doxology is rejected by Wetstein, Griesbach, and the most eminent critics. The authorities on which it is rejected may be seen in Griesbach and Wetstein, particularly in the second edition of Griesbach's Testament, who is fully of opinion, that it never made a part of the sacred text. It is variously written in several MSS. and omitted by most of the Fathers, both Greek and Latin. As the Doxology is at least very ancient, and was in use among the Jews, as well as all the other petitions of this excellent prayer, it should not, in my opinion, be left out of the text; merely because some MSS. have omitted it, and it has been variously written in others. See various forms of this Doxology taken from the ancient Jewish writers, in Lightfoot and Schoetgen.

By the kingdom, we may understand that mentioned ver. 10. and explained chap. iii. 2.

By power, that energy by which the kingdom is governed and maintained.

By glory, the honour that shall redound to God in consequence of the maintenance of the kingdom of grace, in the salvation of men.

For ever and ever.] Εις τους αιωνας, to the fors evers. Well expressed by our common translation—ever in our ancient use of the word taking in the whole duration of time;—the second ever, the whole of eternity. May thy name have the glory both in this world, and in that which is to come! The original word αιων comes from αει always, and ων being, or existence. This is Aristotle's definition of it. See the note on Gen. xxi. 33. There is no word in any language which more forcibly points out the grand characteristic of eternity—that which always exists. It is often used to signify a limited time, the end of which is not known, but this use of it is only an accommodated one; and it is the grammatical, and proper sense of it, which must be resorted to in any controversy concerning the word. We sometimes use the phrase for evermore: i. e. for ever and more, which signifies the whole of time, and the more or interminable duration beyond it. See on chap. xxv. 46.

Amen] This word is Hebrew, אמן, and signifies faithful or true. Some suppose the word is formed from the initial letters of אדוני מלך נאמן adoni melech neeman, My Lord, the faithful king. The word itself implies a confident resting of the soul in God, with the fullest assurance that all these petitions shall be fulfilled to every one who prays according to the directions given before by our blessed Lord.

The very learned Mr. Gregory has shewn that our Lord collected this prayer out of the Jewish Euchologies, and gives us the whole form as follows;

"Our Father who art in heaven, be gracious unto us! O Lord our God hallowed be thy name, and let the remembrance of Thee be glorified in heaven above, and in the earth here below! Let thy kingdom reign over us now, and for ever! The holy men of old said; remit and forgive unto all men whatsoever they have done against me! And lead us not into the hands of temptation, but deliver us from the evil thing! For thine is the kingdom, and thou shalt reign in glory for ever and for evermore." Gregory's Works, 4to. 1671, p. 162. See this proved at large in the collections of Lightfoot and Schoetgenius.

Verse 14. If ye forgive men] He who shews mercy to men, receives mercy from God. For a king to forgive his subjects a hundred millions of treasons against his person and authority, on this one condition, that they will henceforth live peaceably with him and with each other, is what we shall never see; and yet this is but the shadow of that which Christ promises on his Father's part to all true penitents. A man can have little regard for his salvation, who refuses to have it on such advantageous terms. See Quesnel.

Verse 15. But if ye forgive not] He who does not awake at the sound of so loud a voice, is not asleep, but dead. A vindictive man excludes himself from all hope of eternal life, and himself seals his own damnation.

Trespasses] Παραπτωματα, from παρα and πιπτω, to fall off. What a remarkable difference there is between this word and οφειληματα, debts, in verse 12! Men's sins against us, are only their stumblings, or fallings off from the duties they owe us; but our's are debts to God's justice, which we can never discharge. It can be no great difficulty to forgive those, especially when we consider, that in many respects we have failed as much in certain duties which we owed to others, as they have done in those which they owed us. "But I have given him no provocation." Perhaps thou art angry, and art not a proper judge in the matter: but, however it may be, it is thy interest to forgive, if thou expectest forgiveness from God. On this important subject I will subjoin an extract from Mason's Self-knowledge, page 248. 1755.

"Athenodorus, the philosopher, by reason of his old age, begged leave to retire from the court of Augustus, which the Emperor granted. In his compliments of leave, he said, 'Remember, Cæsar, whenever thou art angry, that thou say or do nothing, before thou hast distinctly repeated to thyself the twenty-four letters of the alphabet.' On which Cæsar caught him by the hand, and said, 'I have need of thy presence still;' and kept him a year longer. This was excellent advice from a heathen; but a Christian may prescribe to himself a wiser rule. When thou art angry, answer not till thou hast repeated the fifth petition of our Lord's prayer—Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors; and our Lord's comment upon it—For if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your trespasses."

PRAYER to God, is considered among the Mohammedans in a very important point of view. It is declared by the Moslimàn doctors, to be the corner-stone of RELIGION, and the pillar of FAITH. It is not, say they, a thing of mere form, but requires that the heart and understanding should accompany it, without which, they pronounce it to be of no avail. They direct prayer to be performed five times in the twenty-four hours. 1. Between day-break and sun-rise; 2. immediately after noon; 3. immediately before sun-set; 4. in the evening before dark; and 5. before the first watch of the night.

They hold the following points to be essentially requisite to the efficacy of prayer: 1. That the person be free from every species of defilement. 2. That all sumptuous and gaudy apparel be laid aside. 3. That the attention accompany the act, and be not suffered to wander to any other object. 4. That the prayer be performed with the face toward the temple of MECCA.—HEDAYAH. Prel. Dis. p. 53, 54.

There are few points here but the follower of Christ may seriously consider, and profitably practise.

Verse 16. When ye fast] A fast is termed by the Greeks νηστις, from νη not, and εσθιειν to eat: hence fast means, a total abstinence from food for a certain time. Abstaining from flesh, and living on fish, vegetables, &c. is no fast, or may be rather considered a burlesque on fasting. Many pretend to take the true definition of a fast from Isaiah lviii. 3. and say that it means, a fast from sin. This is a mistake; there is no such term in the Bible as fasting from sin: the very idea is ridiculous and absurd, as if sin were a part of our daily food. In the fast mentioned by the Prophet, the people were to divide their bread with the hungry, ver. 7. but could they eat their bread, and give it too? No man should save by a fast: he should give all the food he might have eaten, to the poor. He who saves a day's expence by a fast, commits an abomination before the Lord. See more on chap. ix. 15.

As the hypocrites, of a sad countenance] Σκυθρωποι, either from σκυθρος sour, crabbed, and ωψ the countenance: or from Σκυθης a Scythian, a morose, gloomy, austere phiz, like that of a Scythian or Tartar. A hypocrite has always a very difficult part to act: when he wishes to appear as a penitent, not having any godly sorrow at heart, he is obliged to counterfeit it the best way he can, by a gloomy and austere look.

Verse 17. Anoint thine head, and wash thy face] These were forbidden in the Jewish Canon on days of fasting and humiliation: and hypocrites availed themselves of this ordinance, that they might appear to men to fast. Our Lord, therefore, cautions us against this: as if he had said: Affect nothing—dress in thy ordinary manner, and let the whole of thy deportment prove, that thou desirest to recommend thy soul to GOD, and not thy face to men. That factitious mourning, which consists in putting on black clothes, crapes, &c. is utterly inconsistent with the simplicity of the gospel of Christ; and if practised in reference to spiritual matters, is certainly forbidden here: but sin is so common, and so boldly persisted in, that not even a crape is put on, as an evidence of deploring its influence, or of sorrow for having committed it.

Verse 18. Thy Father which seeth in secret] Let us not be afraid that our hearts can be concealed from God; but let us fear lest he perceive them to be more desirous of the praise of men, than they are of that glory which comes from Him.

Openly] Εν τω φανερω. These words are omitted by nine MSS. in uncial letters; and by more than one hundred others, by most of the versions, and by several of the primitive fathers. As it is supported by no adequate authority, Bengel, Wetstein, Griesbach and others, have left it out of the text.

Verse 19. Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth] What blindness is it for a man to lay up that as a treasure which must necessarily perish! A heart designed for God and eternity is terribly degraded by being fixed on those things which are subject to corruption. "But may we not lay up treasure innocently?" Yes. 1st. If you can do it without setting your heart on it, which is almost impossible: and 2dly. If there be neither widows nor orphans, destitute nor distressed persons in the place where you live. "But there is a portion which belongs to my children, shall I distribute that among the poor?" If it belongs to your children, it is not yours, and therefore you have no right to dispose of it. "But I have a certain sum in stock, &c. shall I take that and divide it among the poor?" By no means; for by doing so, you would put it out of your power to do good after the present division—keep your principal, and devote, if you can possibly spare it, the product to the poor, and thus you shall have the continual ability to do good. In the meantime take care not to shut up your bowels of compassion against a brother in distress; if you do, the love of God, cannot dwell in you.

Rust] Or canker, βρωσις, from βρωσκω, I eat, consume. This word cannot be properly applied to rust, but to any thing that consumes or cankers clothes or metals. There is a saying exactly similar to this in the Institutes of MENU, speaking of the presents made to Brahmans, he says, "It is a gem which neither thieves nor foes take away, and which never perishes." Chapter of Government, Institute 83.

Where thieves do not break through] Διορυσσουσι, literally dig through, i. e. the wall, in order to get into the house.

Verse 20. Lay up—treasures in heaven] "The only way to render perishing goods eternal, to secure stately furniture from moths, the richest metals from canker, and precious stones from thieves, is to transmit them to heaven by acts of charity. This is a kind of bill of exchange which cannot fail of acceptance, but through our own fault." Quesnel.

It is certain we have not the smallest portion of temporal good, but what we have received from the unmerited bounty of God; and if we give back to him all we have received, yet still there is no merit that can fairly attach to the act, as the goods were the Lord's; for I am not to suppose that I can purchase any thing from a man by his own property. On this ground the doctrine of human merit is one of the most absurd that ever was published among men, or credited by sinners. Yet he who supposes he can purchase heaven by giving that meat which was left at his own table, and that of his servants; or by giving a garment which he could no longer in decency wear, must have a base ignorant soul, and a very mean opinion of the heaven he hopes for. But shall not such works as these be rewarded? Yes, yes, God will take care to give you all that your cast victuals, refuse, and old clothes are worth. Yet he who, through love to God and man, divides his bread with the hungry, and covers the naked with a garment, shall not lose his reward; a reward, which the mercy of God appoints, but to which, in strict justice, he can lay no claim.

Verse 21. Where your treasure is] If God be the treasure of our souls, our hearts, i. e. our affections and desires will be placed on things above. An earthly minded man proves that his treasure is below; a heavenly minded man shews that his treasure is above.

Verse 22. The light of the body is the eye] That is, the eye is to the body what the sun is to the universe in the day time, or a lamp or candle to a house after night.

If—thine eye be single] Απλους, simple, uncompounded;—i. e. so perfect in its structure as to see objects distinctly and clearly; and not confusedly, or in different places to what they are, as is often the case in certain disorders of the eye: one object appearing two or more—or else in a different situation, and of a different colour to what it really is. This state of the eye is termed, ver. 23. πονηρος evil, i. e. diseased or defective. An evil eye, was a phrase in use among the ancient Jews, to denote an envious, covetous man or disposition; a man who repined at his neighbour's prosperity, loved his own money, and would do nothing in the way of charity for God's sake. Our blessed Lord, however, extends and sublimes this meaning, and uses the sound eye as a metaphor, to point out that simplicity of intention, and purity of affection with which men should pursue the supreme good. We cannot draw more than one straight line between two indivisible points. We aim at happiness, it is found only in one thing, the indivisible and eternal GOD. If the line of simple intention be drawn straight to him, and the soul walk by it, with purity of affection, the whole man shall be light in the Lord; the rays of that excellent glory shall irradiate the mind, and through the whole spirit, shall the Divine nature be transfused. But if a person who enjoyed this heavenly treasure, permit his simplicity of intention to deviate from heavenly to earthly good; and his purity of affection to be contaminated by worldly ambition, secular profits, and animal gratifications; then, the light which was in him becomes darkness, i. e. his spiritual discernment departs, and his union with God is destroyed: all is only a palpable obscure; and like a man who has totally lost his sight, he walks without direction, certainty, or comfort. This state is most forcibly intimated in our Lord's exclamation, How great a darkness! Who can adequately describe the misery and wretchedness of that soul, which has lost its union with the fountain of all shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!

good, and in losing this, has lost the possibility of happiness till the simple eye be once more given, and the straight line once more drawn.

Verse 24. No man can serve two masters] The master of our heart may be fitly termed the love that reigns in it. We serve that only which we love supremely. A man cannot be in perfect indifference betwixt two objects which are incompatible: he is inclined to despise and hate whatever he does not love supremely, when the necessity of a choice presents itself.

He will hate the one, and love the other] The word hate has the same sense here, as it has in many places of Scripture, it merely signifies to love less—so Jacob loved Rachel, but hated Leah; i. e. he loved Leah much less than he loved Rachel. God himself uses it precisely in the same sense, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated; i. e. I have loved the posterity of Esau less than I have loved the posterity of Jacob: which means no more than that God, in the course of his providence, gave the Jews greater earthly privileges than he gave to the Edomites; and chose to make them the progenitors of the Messiah, though they ultimately, through their own obstinacy, derived no more benefit from this privilege than the Edomites did. How strange is it, that with such evidence before their eyes, men will apply this loving and hating to decrees of inclusion and exclusion, in which neither the justice nor mercy of God are honoured!

Ye cannot serve God and mammon.] ממון mamon is used for money in the Targum of Onkelos, Exod. xviii. 21. and in that of Jonathan, Judg. v. 19. 1 Sam. viii. 3. The Syriac word ממונא mamona is used in the same sense, Exod. xxi. 30. Dr. Castel deduces these words from the Hebrew אמן aman, to trust, confide; because men are apt to trust in riches. Mammon may therefore be considered, any thing a man confides in. Augustin observes, "that mammon in the Punic or Carthaginian language, signified gain." Lucrum Punicè mammon dicitur. The word plainly denotes riches, Luke xvi. 9, 11. in which latter verse mention is made not only of the deceitful mammon, (του αδικου) but also of the true, (το αληθινον.) St. Luke's phrase, μαμωνα αδικιας, very exactly answers to the Chaldee ממון דשקר mamon dishekar, which is often used in the Targums. See more in Wetstein and Parkhurst.

Some suppose there was an idol of this name, and Kircher mentions such an one in his Œdip. Egyptiacus. See Castel.

Our blessed Lord shews here the utter impossibility of loving the world, and loving God at the same time; or, in other words, that a man of the world cannot be a truly religious character. He who gives his heart to the world, robs God of it, and in snatching at the shadow of earthly good, loses substantial and eternal blessedness. How dangerous is it, to set our hearts upon riches, seeing it is so easy to make them our god!

Verse 22. Therefore] Δια τουτο, on this account; viz. that ye may not serve mammon, but have unshaken confidence in God, I say unto you:

Take no thought] Be not anxiously careful, μη μεριμνατε; this is the proper meaning of the word. Μεριμνα anxious solicitude, from μεριζειν τον νουν dividing, or distracting the mind. My old MS. Bible renders it, be not busy to your life. Prudent care is never forbidden by our Lord, but only that anxious distracting solicitude, which by dividing the mind, and drawing it different ways, renders it utterly incapable of attending to any solemn or important concern. To be anxiously careful concerning the means of subsistence, is to lose all satisfaction and comfort in the things which God gives, and to act as a mere infidel. On the other hand, to rely so much upon providence as not to use the very powers and faculties with which the Divine Being has endowed us, is to tempt God. If we labour without placing our confidence in our labour, but expect all from the blessing of God, we obey his will, co-operate with his providence, set the springs of it a-going in our behalf, and thus imitate Christ and his followers by a sedate care and an industrious confidence.

In this and the following verses, our Lord lays down several reasons why men should not disquiet themselves about the wants of life, or concerning the future.

The first is, the experience of greater benefits already received. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Can he who gave us our body, and breathed into it the breath of life before we could ask them from him, refuse us that which is necessary to preserve both, and when we ask it in humble confidence?

The clause what ye must eat, is omitted by two MSS. most of the ancient versions, and by many of the primitive Fa-than meat, and the body than raiment?

26 [a] Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?

27 Which of you by taking thought can [b] add one cubit unto his stature?

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27 An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

28 And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin:

29 And yet I say unto you, [c] That even Sothers. Griesbach has left it in the text with a note of doubtfulness. It occurs again in the 31st verse, and there is no variation in any of the MSS. in that place. Instead of Is not the life more than, &c. we should read, of more value; so the word πλειον is used in Num. xxii. 15. and by the best Greek writers; and in the same sense it is used in chap. xxi. 37. See the note there.

Verse 26. Behold the fowls of the air] The second reason why we should not be anxiously concerned about the future, is the example of the smaller animals, which the providence of God feeds without their own labour; though he be not their father. We never knew an earthly father take care of his fowls, and neglect his children; and shall we fear this from our heavenly Father? God forbid! That man is utterly unworthy to have God for his father, who depends less upon his goodness, wisdom, and power, than upon a crop of corn, which may be spoiled either in the field or in the barn. If our great Creator have made us capable of knowing, loving, and enjoying himself eternally, what may we not expect from him, after so great a gift?

They sow not, neither do they reap] There is a saying among the Rabbins almost similar to this—"Hast thou ever seen a beast or a fowl that had a workshop? yet they are fed without labour and without anxiety. They were created for the service of man, and man was created that he might serve his Creator. Man also would have been supported without labour and anxiety, had he not corrupted his ways. Hast thou ever seen a lion carrying burthens, a stag gathering summer fruits, a fox selling merchandize, or a wolf selling oil? that they might thus gain their support: and yet they are fed without care or labour. Arguing therefore from the less to the greater, if they which were created that they might serve me, are nourished without labour and anxiety, how much more I, who have been created that I might serve my Maker. What therefore is the cause, why I should be obliged to labour in order to get my daily bread? Answer, SIN." This is a curious and important extract, and is highly worthy of the Reader's attention. See Schoetgen.

Verse 27. Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?] The third reason against these carking cares is the unprofitableness of human solicitude, unless God vouchsafe to bless it. What can our uneasiness do but render us still more unworthy of the divine care? The passage from distrust to apostacy is very short and easy: and a man is not far from murmuring against Providence, who is dissatisfied with its conduct. We should depend as fully upon God for the preservation of his gifts, as for the gifts themselves.

Cubit unto his stature?] I think ηλικιαν should be rendered age here, and so our Translators have rendered the word in John ix. 21. αυτος ηλικιαν εχει, he is of age. A very learned writer observes, that no difficulty can arise from applying πηχυν a cubit, a measure of extension, to time, and the age of man, as place and time are both quantities, and capable of increase and diminution: and as no fixed material standard can be employed in the mensuration of the fleeting particles of time; it was natural and necessary in the construction of language, to apply parallel terms to the discrimination of time and place. Accordingly, we find the same words indifferently used to denote time and place in every known tongue. Lord, let me know the MEASURE of my days! Thou hast made my days HAND-BREADTHS, Psal. xxxix. 56. Many examples might be adduced from the Greek and Roman writers. Besides, it is evident, that the phrase of adding one cubit, is proverbial, denoting something minute; and is therefore applicable to the smallest possible portion of time: but in a literal acceptation, the addition of a cubit to the stature would be a great and extraordinary accession of height. See Wakefield.

Verse 28. And why take ye thought for raiment?] Or, why are ye anxiously careful about raiment? The fourth reason against such inquietudes, is the example of inanimate creatures: The herbs and flowers of the field have their being, nourishment, exquisite flavours, and beautiful hues from God himself. They are not only without anxious care, but also without care or thought of every kind. Your being, its excellence, and usefulness, do not depend on your anxious concern: they spring as truly from the beneficence and continual superintendance of God as the flowers of the field do: and were you brought into such a situation, as to be as utterly incapable of contributing to your own preservation and support, as the lilies of the field are to theirs, your heavenly Father could augment your substance, and preserve your being, when for his glory, and your own advantage.

Consider] Diligently consider this, καταμαθετε, lay it earnestly to heart, and let your confidence be unshaken in the God of infinite bounty and love.

lomon in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these.

30 Wherefore, [a] if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, [b] O ye of little faith?

31 Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?

c See 1 Kings 3. 13. Ps. 37. 25. Mark 10. 30. Luke 12. 31. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

Verse 29. Solomon in all his glory] Some suppose, that as the robes of state worn by the eastern kings, were usually white, as were those of the nobles among the Jews; that therefore the lily was chosen for the comparison.

Verse 30. If God so clothe the grass of the field] Christ confounds both the luxury of the rich in their superfluities, and the distrust of the poor as to the necessaries of life. Let man, who is made for God and eternity, learn from a flower of the field how low the care of Providence stoops. All our inquietudes and distrusts proceed from lack of faith: that supplies all wants. The poor are not really such, but because they are destitute of faith.

To-morrow is cast into the oven] The inhabitants of the East, to this day, make use of dry straw, withered herbs and stubble to heat their ovens. Some have translated the original word καμινον, a still; and intimate, that our Lord alludes to the distillation of herbs for medicinal purposes: but this is certainly contrary to the scope of our Lord's argument, which runs thus: If God covers, with so much glory, things of no farther value than to serve the meanest uses; will he not take care of his servants who are so precious in his sight, and designed for such important services in the world? See Harmer's Observations.

Verse 31. What shall we eat, or, What shall we drink?] These three enquiries engross the whole attention of those who are living without God in the world. The belly and back of a worldling are his compound god; and these he worships in the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eye, and in the pride of life.

Verse 32. For after all these things do the Gentiles seek] The fifth reason against solicitude about the future, is that to concern ourselves about these wants with anxiety, as if there was no such thing as a providence in the world; with great affection towards earthly enjoyments, as if we expected no other; and without praying to God or consulting his will, as if we could do any thing without him. This is to imitate the worst kind of heathens, who live without hope, and without God in the world.

Seek] Επιζητει from επι, intensive, and ζητεω I seek, to seek intensely, earnestly, again and again. The true characteristic of the worldly man: his soul is never satisfied—give! give! is the ceaseless language of his earth-born heart.

Your heavenly Father knoweth, &c.] The sixth reason against this anxiety about the future, is, because God, our heavenly Father, is infinite in wisdom, and knows all our wants. It is the property of a wise and tender Father to provide necessaries, and not superfluities, for his children. Not to expect the former, is an offence to his goodness; to expect the latter, is injurious to his wisdom.

Verse 33. But seek ye first the kingdom of God] See on Mat. iii. 7.

His righteousness] That holiness of heart and purity of life which God requires of those who profess to be subjects of that spiritual kingdom mentioned above. See on chap. v. 20.

The seventh reason against these worldly cares and fears is, because the business of our salvation ought to engross us entirely: hither, all our desires, cares, and inquiries ought to tend. Grace is the way to glory—holiness the way to happiness. If men be not righteous, there is no heaven to be had; if they be, they shall have heaven and earth too; for godliness has the promise of both lives. 1 Tim. vi. 3.

All these things shall be added unto you.] The very blunt note of old Mr. Trapp, on this passage, is worthy of serious attention. All things shall be added. "They shall be cast in as an overplus, or as small advantages to the main bargain; as paper and packthread are given where we buy spice and fruit, or an inch of measure to an ell of cloth." This was a very common saying among the Jews: "Seek that, to which other things are necessarily connected." "A king said to his particular friend, 'Ask what thou wilt, and I will give it unto thee.' He thought within himself, 'If I ask to be made a general I shall readily obtain it. I will ask something to which all these things shall be added:' he therefore said, 'Give me thy daughter to wife.'—This he did, knowing that all the dignities of the kingdom should be added unto this gift." See in Schoetgen.

To this verse, probably, belong the following words, quoted often by Clement, Origen and Eusebius, as the words of Christ: αιτειτε τα μεγαλα, και τα μικρα υμιν προστεθησεται· και αιτειτε τα επουρανια, και τα επιγεια προστεθησεται υμιν, "Ask great things, and little things shall be added unto you; ask heavenly things, and earthly things shall be added unto you."

and his righteousness; [a] and all these things shall be added unto you.

34 Take, therefore, no thought for the [b] morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. [c] Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

[a] Mark 10. 30. Luke 12. 31. Rom. 14. 17.

[b] Lev. 22. 30. Prov. 27. 1.——[c] Job 14. 1. Luke 12. 20.

Verse 34. Take, therefore, no thought] That is, Be not therefore anxiously careful.

The eighth and last reason, against this preposterous conduct, is, that carking care is not only useless in itself, but renders us miserable before hand. The future, falls under the cognizance of God alone: we encroach, therefore, upon his rights, when we would fain foresee all that may happen to us, and secure ourselves from it by our cares. How much good is omitted, how many evils caused, how many duties neglected, how many innocent persons deserted, how many good works destroyed, how many truths suppressed, and how many acts of injustice authorized by those timorous forecasts, of what may happen; and those faithless apprehensions concerning the future! Let us do now what God requires of us, and trust the consequences to him. The future time which God would have us foresee and provide for, is that of judgment and eternity: and it is about this alone that we are careless!

Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.] Αρκετον τη ημερᾳ η κακια αυτης, Sufficient for each day is its own calamity. Each day has its peculiar trials;—we should meet them with confidence in God. As we should live but a day at a time, so we should take care to suffer no more evils in one day than are necessarily attached to it. He who neglects the present for the future, is acting opposite to the order of God, his own interest, and to every dictate of sound wisdom. Let us live for eternity, and we shall secure all that is valuable in time.

There are many valuable reflexions in the Abbé Quesnel's work, on this chapter; and from it several of the preceding have been derived.

CHAPTER VII.

Our Lord warns men against rash judgment and uncharitable censures, 1—5. Shews that holy things must not be prophaned, 6; gives encouragement to fervent persevering prayer, 7—11. Shews how men should deal with each other, 12. Exhorts the people to enter in at the strait gate, 13, 14; to beware of false teachers, who are to be known by their fruits, 15—20. Shews that no man shall be saved by his mere profession of Christianity, however specious, 22, 23. The parable of the wise man who built his house upon a rock, 24, 25. Of the foolish man who built his house without a foundation, on the sand, 26, 27. Christ concludes his sermon, and the people are astonished at his doctrine, 28, 29.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. Judge not that ye be not judged.] These exhortations are pointed against rash, harsh, and uncharitable judgments, the thinking evil, where no evil seems, and speaking of it accordingly. The Jews were highly criminal here, and yet had very excellent maxims against it, as may be seen in Schoetgen. This is one of the most important exhortations in the whole of this excellent sermon. By a secret and criminal disposition of nature, man endeavours to elevate himself above others, and to do it more effectually, depresses them. His jealous and envious heart wishes that there may be no good quality found but in himself, that he alone may be esteemed. Such is the state of every unconverted man; and it is from this criminal disposition, that evil surmises, rash judgments, precipitate decisions, and all other unjust procedures against our neighbour, flow.

Verse 2. For with what judgment] He who is severe on others, will naturally excite their severity against himself. The censures and calumnies which we have suffered, are probably the just reward of those which we have dealt out to others.

3 [a] And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

4 Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

5 Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

Verse 3. And why beholdest thou the mote] Καρφος might be translated the splinter: for splinter bears some analogy to beam, but mote does not. I should prefer this word (which has been adopted by some learned men) on the authority of Hesychius, who is a host in such matters; Καρφος, κεραια ξυλου λεπτη, Karphos is a thin piece of wood, a splinter. It often happens, that the faults which we consider as of the first enormity in others, are, to our own iniquities, as a chip is when compared to a large beam. On one side, self love blinds us to ourselves; and on the other, envy and malice give us piercing eyes in respect of others. When we shall have as much zeal to correct ourselves, as we have inclination to reprove and correct others, we shall know our own defects better than now we know those of our neighbour. There is a caution very similar to this of our Lord given by a heathen:

Cum tua prævideas oculis mala lippus inunctis;
Cur in amicorum vitiis tam cernis acutum,
Quam aut aquila, aut serpens Epidaurius?
HOR. Sat. lib. 1. sat. 3. l. 25—27.

"When you can so readily overlook your own wickedness, why are you more clear-sighted than the eagle, or serpent of Epidaurus, in spying out the failings of your friends?" But the saying was very common among the Jews, as may be seen in Lightfoot.

Verse 4. Or how wilt thou say] That man is utterly unfit to shew the way of life to others, who is himself walking in the way of death.

Verse 5. Thou hypocrite] A hypocrite, who professes to be what he is not, (viz. a true Christian) is obliged, for the support of the character he has assumed, to imitate all the dispositions and actions of a Christian; consequently he must reprove sin, and endeavour to shew an uncommon affection for the glory of God. Our Lord unmasks this vile pretender to saintship, and shews him that his hidden hypocrisy, covered with the garb of external sanctity, is more abominable in the sight of God, than the openly professed and practised iniquity of the profligate.

In after times, the Jews made a very bad use of this saying; "I wonder," said Rabbi Zarphon, "whether there be any in this age that will suffer reproof? If one say to another, Cast out the mote out of thine eye, he is immediately ready to answer, Cast out the beam that is in thine own eye." This proverbial mode of speech the Gloss interprets thus: "Cast out קסים kisim, the mote, that is, the little sin, that is in thy hand: to which he answered, Cast out the great sin that is in thine. So they could not reprove, because all were sinners." See Lightfoot.

Verse 6. Give not that which is holy] Το αγιον, the holy or sacred thing; i. e. any thing, especially of the sacrificial kind, which had been consecrated to God. The members of this sentence should be transposed thus:

Give not that which is holy unto the dogs,
Lest they turn again and rend you:
Neither cast ye your pearls before swine,
Lest they trample them under their feet.

The propriety of this transposition is self-evident. There are many such transpositions as these, both in sacred and profane writers. The following is very remarkable:

"I am black but comely;
"As the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon."
That is,
"I am black as the tents of Kedar,
"Comely as the curtains of Solomon."

See many proofs of this sort of writing in Mr. WAKEFIELD'S Commentary.

As a general meaning of this passage, we may just say, "The sacrament of the Lord's supper, and other holy ordinances which are only instituted for the genuine followers of Christ, are not to be dispensed to those who are continually returning like the snarling ill-natured dog to their easily predominant sins of rash judgment, barking at and tearing the characters of others by evil speaking, back-biting and slandering; nor to him, who, like the swine, is frequently returning to wallow in the mud of sensual gratifications and impurities."

Verse 7. Ask—seek—knock] These three words include the ideas of, want, loss, and earnestness. Ask: turn beggar at the door of Mercy: thou art destitute of all spiritual good, and it is God alone who can give it to thee; and thou hast no claim but what his mercy has given thee on itself.

Knock: Be in earnest—be importunate: Eternity is at hand! and if thou die in thy sins, where God is thou shalt never come.

Ask with confidence and humility.

Seek with care and application.

Knock with earnestness and perseverance.

Verse 8. For every one that asketh receiveth] Prayer is always heard after one manner or other. No soul can pray in vain that prays as directed above. The truth and faithfulness of the Lord Jesus are pledged for it.—Ye SHALL receive—ye SHALL find—it SHALL be opened. These words are as strongly binding on the side of God, as thou shalt do no murder is on the side of man. Bring Christ's word, and Christ's sacrifice with thee, and not one of Heaven's blessings can be denied thee. See on Luke xi. 9.

Verse 9. Or what man is there—whom if his son] Men are exhorted to come unto God, with the persuasion that he is a most gracious and compassionate Parent, who possesses all heavenly and earthly good; knows what is necessary for each of his creatures, and is infinitely ready to communicate that which they need most.

Will he give him a stone?] Will he not readily give him bread if he have it? This was a proverb in other countries; a benefit grudgingly given by an avaricious man, is called by Seneca, panem lapidosum, stony bread. Hence that saying in Plautus: Altera manu fert lapidem, panem ostentat altera.—in one hand he brings a stone, and stretches out bread in the other.

Verse 11. If ye then, being evil] Πονηροι οντες, who are radically and diabolically depraved, yet feel yourselves led by natural affection, to give those things to your children which are necessary to support their lives: how much more will your Father, who is in heaven, whose nature is infinite goodness, mercy, and grace, give good things—his grace and Spirit, (πνευμα αγιον, the Holy Ghost, Luke xi. 13.) to them who ask him? What a picture is here given of the goodness of God! Reader, ask thy soul, could this heavenly Father reprobate to unconditional eternal damnation, any creature he has made? He who can believe that he has, may believe any thing: but still GOD IS LOVE.

Verse 12. Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men] This is a most sublime precept, and highly worthy of the grandeur and beneficence of the just God who gave it. The general meaning of it is this: "Guided by justice and mercy, do unto all men as you would have them to do to you, were your circumstances and theirs reversed." Yet, this saying may be misunderstood; "If the prisoner should ask the judge, 'whether he would be content to be hanged, were he in his case,' he would answer, 'No.' Then, says the prisoner, do as you would be done to:—neither of them must do as private men; but the judge must do by him, as they have publicly agreed; that is, both judge and prisoner have consented to a law, that if either of them steal, he shall be hanged."—Selden. None but he whose heart is filled with love to God and all mankind, can keep this precept, either in its spirit or letter. Self-love will feel itself sadly cramped when brought within the limits of this precept—but God hath spoken it: it is the spirit and design of the law and the prophets; the sum of all that is laid down in the Sacred Writings, relative to men's conduct towards each other. It seems as if God had written it upon the hearts of all men, for sayings of this kind may be found among all nations, Jewish, Christian, and Heathen. See many examples in Wetstein's notes.

Verse 13. Enter ye in at the strait gate] Our Saviour seems to allude here to the distinction between the public and private ways mentioned by the Jewish lawyers. The public roads were allowed to be sixteen cubits broad, the private ways only four. The words in the original are very emphatic: Enter in (to the kingdom of heaven) through THIS strait gate, δια της στενης πυλης, i. e. of doing to every one as you would he should do unto you; for this alone seems to be the strait gate which our Lord alludes to.

For wide is the gate] And very broad, ευρυχωρος, from ευρυς, broad, and χωρος, a place, a spacious roomy place; that leadeth forward απαγουσα into THAT destruction εις την απωλειαν, meaning eternal misery, intimating, that it is much more congenial to the revengeful, covetous heart of fallen man, to take every advantage of another, and to enrich himself at his expence, rather than to walk according to the rule laid down before, by our blessed Lord, and that acting contrary to it is the way to everlasting misery. With those who say it means repentance, and forsaking sin, I can have no controversy. That is certainly a gate and a strait one too, through which every sinner must turn to God, in order to find salvation. But the doing to every one as we would they should do unto us, is a gate extremely strait, and very difficult, to every unregenerate mind.

Verse 14. Because strait is the gate] Instead of οτι because, I should prefer τι how, which reading is supported by a great majority of the best MSS. versions and fathers. How strait is that gate! This mode of expression more forcibly points out the difficulty of the way to the kingdom. How strange is it that men should be unwilling to give up their worldly interests to secure their everlasting salvation! and yet no interest need be abandoned, but that which is produced by injustice and unkindness. Reason, as well as God, says, such people should be excluded from a place of blessedness. He who shews no mercy (and much more he who shews no justice) shall have judgment without mercy. Jam. ii. 13.

Few there be that find it.] The strait gate, στενη πυλη, signifies literally what we call a wicket, i. e. a little door in a large gate. Gate, among the Jews, signifies, metaphorically, the entrance, introduction, or means of acquiring any thing. So they talk of the gate of repentance, the gate of prayers, and the gate of tears. When God, say they, shut the gate of paradise against Adam, He opened to him the gate of repentance. The way to the kingdom of God is made sufficiently manifest—the completest assistance is promised in the way, and the greatest encouragement to persevere to the end, is held out in the everlasting gospel. But men are so wedded to their own passions, and so determined to follow the imaginations of their own hearts, that still it may be said: There are few who find the way to heaven; fewer yet who abide any time in it; fewer still who walk in it; and fewest of all who persevere unto the end. Nothing renders this way either narrow or difficult to any person, but Sin. Let all the world leave their sins, and all the world may walk abreast in this good way.

Verse 15. Beware of false prophets] By false prophets, we are to understand teachers of erroneous doctrines, who come professing a commission from God, but whose aim is not to bring the heavenly treasure to the people, but rather to rob them of their earthly good. Teachers who preach for hire, having no motive to enter into the ministry but to get a living as it is ominously called by some, however they may bear the garb and appearance of the innocent useful sheep, the true pastors commissioned by the Lord Jesus; or to whatever name, class, or party they may belong, are, in the sight of the heart-searching God, no other than ravenous wolves, whose design is to feed themselves with the fat, and clothe themselves with the fleece, and thus ruin, instead of save, the flock.

Verse 16. Ye shall know them by their fruits.] Fruits, in the Scripture and Jewish phraseology, are taken for works of any kind. "A man's works," says one, "are the tongue of his heart, and tell honestly whether he is inwardly corrupt or pure." By these works you may distinguish (επιγνωσεσθε) these ravenous wolves from true pastors. The judgment formed of a man by his general conduct is a safe one: if the judgment be not favourable to the person, that is his fault, as you have your opinion of him from his works, i. e. the confession of his own heart.

Verse 17. So every good tree] As the thorn can only produce thorns, not grapes: and the thistle not figs, but prickles; so an unregenerate heart will produce fruits of degeneracy. As we perfectly know that a good tree will not produce bad fruit, and the bad tree will not, cannot produce good fruit; so we know, that the profession of godliness, while the life is ungodly, is imposture, hypocrisy, and deceit. A man cannot be a saint and a sinner at the same time. Let us remember, that as the good tree means a good heart, and the good fruit, a holy life, and that every heart is naturally vicious; so there is none but God who can pluck up the vicious tree, create a good heart, plant, cultivate, water, and make it continually fruitful in righteousness and true holiness.

to God and man is the root of the good tree; and from this principle all its fruit is found. To teach, as some have done, that a state of salvation may be consistent with the greatest crimes, (such as murder and adultery in David) or that the righteous necessarily sin in all their best works; is really to make the good tree bring forth bad fruit, and to give the lie to the Author of Eternal Truth.

Verse 19. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit] What a terrible sentence is this against Christless pastors, and Christless hearers! Every tree that produceth not good fruit, εκκοπτεται, is to be now cut down, the act of excision is now taking place: the curse of the Lord is even now on the head and the heart of every false teacher, and impenitent hearer.

Verse 20. Wherefore by their fruits, &c.] This truth is often repeated, because our eternal interests depend so much upon it. Not to have good fruit, is to have evil: there can be no innocent sterility in the invisible tree of the heart. He that brings forth no fruit, and he that brings forth bad fruit, are both only fit for the fire.

Verse 21. Not every one] Ου πας, a Hebraism, say some, for no person. It is a Græcism and a Latinism too: ου παντων θεων, not ALL of the gods, i. e. not ANY of the gods. HOM. Odyss. Z. 240. So TERENCE: Sine omni periclo, without ALL danger, i. e. without ANY danger. And JUVENAL: Sine omni labe, without ALL imperfection, i. e. without ANY. See more in Mr. Wakefield. The sense of this verse seems to be this: No person, by merely acknowledging my authority, believing in the divinity of my nature, professing faith in the perfection of my righteousness, and infinite merit of my atonement, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven—shall have any part with God in Glory; but he who doeth the will of my Father—he who gets the bad tree rooted up, the good tree planted, and continues to bring forth fruit to the glory and praise of God. There is a good saying among the Rabbins on this subject. "A man should be as vigorous as a panther, as swift as an eagle, as fleet as a stag, and as strong as a lion, to do the will of his Creator."

Verse 22. Many will say to me in that day] Εκεινη τη ημερα, in that very day, viz. the day of judgment—have we not prophesied, taught, publicly preached, in thy name; acknowledging thee to be the only Saviour, and proclaiming thee as such to others: cast out dæmons, impure spirits, who had taken possession of the bodies of men; done many miracles, being assisted by supernatural agency to invert even the course of nature, and thus prove the truth of the doctrine we preached?

Verse 23. Will I profess] Ομολογησω, I will fully and plainly tell them, I never knew you—I never approved of you: for so the word is used in many places, both in the Old and New Testaments. You held the truth in unrighteousness, while you preached my pure and holy doctrine: and for the sake of my own truth, and through my love to the souls of men, I blessed your preaching; but yourselves I could never esteem, because ye were destitute of the spirit of my Gospel, unholy in your hearts, and unrighteous in your conduct. Alas! alas! how many preachers are there who appear prophets in their pulpits; how many writers, and other evangelical workmen, the miracles of whose labour, learning, and doctrine, we admire, who are nothing, and worse than nothing, before God; because they perform not his will, but their own? What an awful consideration, that a man of eminent gifts, whose talents are a source of public utility, should be only as a way-mark or finger-post in the way to eternal bliss, pointing out the road to others, without walking in it himself!

Depart from me] What a terrible word! What a dreadful separation! Depart from ME! from the very Jesus whom you have proclaimed, in union with whom alone eternal life is to be found. For, united to Christ, all is heaven; separated from him, all is hell.

Verse 24. Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine] That is, the excellent doctrines laid down before in this and the two preceding chapters. There are several parables or similitudes like to this in the Rabbins. I shall quote but the two following:

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

25 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock.

26 And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand:

27 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it.

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

28 And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, [a] the people were astonished at his doctrine:

29 [b] For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes.

a Ch. 13. 54. Mark 1. 22. & 6. 2. Luke 4. 32.

b John 7. 46.

Rabbi Eleazar said, "The man whose knowledge exceeds his works, to whom is he like? He is like a tree which had many branches, and only a few roots; and when the stormy winds came, it was plucked up and eradicated. But he whose good works are greater than his knowledge, to what is he like? He is like a tree which had few branches, and many roots; so that all the winds of heaven could not move it from its place." Pirke Aboth.

Elisha, the son of Abuja, said, "The man who studies much in the law, and maintains good works, is like to a man who built a house, laying stones at the foundation, and building brick upon them; and though many waters come against it, they cannot move it from its place. But the man who studies much in the law, and does not maintain good works, is like to a man who, in building his house, put brick at the foundation, and laid stones upon them, so that even gentle waters shall overthrow that house." Aboth Rab. Nath.

Probably our Lord had this or some parable in his eye: but how amazingly improved in passing through his hands! In our Lord's parable there is dignity, majesty, and point, which we seek for in vain in the Jewish archetype.

I will liken him unto a wise man] To a prudent man—ανδρι φρονιμῳ, to a prudent man, man of sense and understanding, who, forseeing the evil, hideth himself, who proposes to himself the best end, and makes use of the proper means to accomplish it. True wisdom consists in getting the building of our salvation completed: to this end, we must build on the Rock, CHRIST JESUS, and make the building firm, by keeping close to the maxims of his Gospel, and having our tempers and lives conformed to its word and spirit; and when, in order to this, we lean on nothing but the grace of Christ, we then build upon a solid Rock.

Verse 25. And the rain descended—floods came—winds blew] In Judea, and in all countries in the neighbourhood of the tropics, the rain sometimes falls in great torrents, producing rivers, which sweep away the soil from the rocky hills; and the houses, which are builded of brick only dried in the sun, of which there are whole villages in the East, literally melt away before those rains, and the land-floods occasioned by them. There are three general kinds of trials to which the followers of God are exposed; and to which, some think, our Lord alludes here: first, Those of temporal afflictions, coming in the course of divine providence: these may be likened to the torrents of rain. Secondly, those which come from the passions of men, and which may be likened to the impetuous rivers. Thirdly, those which come from Satan and his angels, and which, like tempestuous whirlwinds, threaten to carry every thing before them. He alone, whose soul is built on the Rock of Ages, stands all these shocks; and not only stands in, but profits by them.

Verse 26. And every one that heareth—and doeth them not] Was there ever a stricter system of morality delivered by God to man, than in this sermon? He who reads or hears it, and does not look to God to conform his soul and life to it, and notwithstanding is hoping to enter into the kingdom of heaven, is like the fool who built his house on the sand.—When the rain, the rivers and the winds come, his building must fall, and his soul be crushed into the nethermost pit by its ruins. Talking about Christ, his righteousness, merits and atonement, while the person is not conformed to his word and spirit, is no other than solemn self-deception.

Let it be observed, that it is not the man who hears or believes these sayings of Christ, whose building shall stand when the earth and its works are burnt up; but the man who DOES them.

Many suppose that the law of Moses is abolished, merely because it is too strict and impossible to be observed; and that the gospel was brought in to liberate us from its obligations; but let all such know, that in the whole of the old covenant nothing can be found so exceedingly strict and holy as this sermon, which Christ lays down as the rule by which we are to walk. "Then, the fulfilling of these precepts is the purchase of glory." No, it is the WAY only to that glory which has already been purchased by the blood of the Lamb. To him that believes, all things are possible.

Verse 28. The people were astonished] Οι οχλοι, the multitudes; for vast crowds attended the ministry of this most popular and faithful of all preachers. They were astonished at his doctrine. They heard the law defined in such a manner as they had never thought of before; and this sacred system of morality urged home on their consciences with such clearness and authority, as they had never felt under the teaching of their Scribes and Pharisees. Here is the grand difference between the teaching of Scribes and Pharisees, the self-created or Men-made ministers, and those whom GOD sends. The first may preach what is called very good and very sound doctrine; but it comes with no authority from God to the souls of the people: therefore, the unholy is unholy still: because preaching can only be effectual to the conversion of men, when the unction of the Holy Spirit is in it; and as these are not sent by the Lord, therefore they shall not profit the people at all. Jer. xxiii. 32.

Verse 29. Having authority] They felt a commanding power and authority in his word, his doctrine. His statements were perspicuous; his exhortations persuasive, his doctrine sound and rational, and his arguments irresistible. These they never felt in the trifling teachings of their most celebrated doctors, who consumed their own time and that of their disciples and hearers, with frivolous cases of conscience, ridiculous distinctions, and puerile splittings of controversial hairs—questions not calculated to minister grace to the hearers.

Several excellent MSS. and almost all the ancient versions read, και οι Φαρισαιοι, and the Pharisees. He taught them as one having authority, like the most eminent and distinguished teacher, and not as the Scribes—and Pharisees, who had no part of that unction, which he in its plenitude possessed. Thus ends a sermon, the most strict, pure, holy, profound and sublime, ever delivered to man; and yet so amazingly simple, is the whole, that almost a child may apprehend it! Lord! write all these thy sayings upon our hearts, we beseech thee! Amen.

Great multitudes follow Christ, 1. He heals a leper, 2—4. Heals the Centurion's servant, 5—13. Heals Peter's wife's mother, 14, 15. and several other diseased persons, 16, 17. Departs from that place, 18. Two persons offer to be his disciples, 19—22. He and his disciples are overtaken with a tempest, which he miraculously stills, 23—27. He cures Dæmoniacs, and the Dæmons which were cast out enter into a herd of swine, which, rushing into the sea, perish, 28—32. The swine-herds announce the miracle to the Gergesenes, who request Christ to depart from their country, 33, 34.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. From the mountain] That mountain on which he had delivered the preceding inimitable sermon.

Great multitudes followed him.] Having been deeply impressed with the glorious doctrines which they had just heard.

Verse 2. And behold there came a leper] The leprosy λεπρα, from λεπις a scale, was an inveterate cutaneous disease, appearing in dry, thin, white scurfy scales or scabs, either on the whole body, or on some part of it, usually attended with violent itching, and often with great pain. The eastern leprosy was a distemper of the most loathsome kind, highly contagious, so as to infect garments, (Lev. xiii. 47, &c.) and houses, (Lev. xiv. 34, &c.) and was deemed incurable by any human means. Among the Jews, GOD alone was applied to for its removal; and the cure was ever attributed to his sovereign power.

The various symptoms of this dreadful disorder, which was a striking emblem of sin, may be seen in Lev. xiii. and xiv. where also may be read the legal ordinances concerning it; which, as on the one hand, they set forth how odious sin is to God, so on the other, they represent the cleansing of our pollutions by the sacrifice and resurrection of Christ, by the sprinkling and application of his blood, and by the sanctifying and healing influences of the Holy Spirit.

The Greek name λεπρα, seems to have been given to this distemper, on account of the thin, white SCALES (λεπιδες), with which the bodies of the leprous were sometimes so covered, as to give them the appearance of snow, Exod. iv. 6. Num. xii. 10. 2 Kings v. 27.

Herodotus, lib. 1. mentions this disorder as existing, in his time, among the Persians. He calls it λευκην, the white scab; and says, that those who were affected with it, were prohibited from mingling with the other citizens; and so dreadful was this malady esteemed among them, that they considered it a punishment on the person, from their great god the Sun, for some evil committed against him. Dr. Mead mentions a remarkable case of this kind which came under his own observation. "A country man whose whole body was so miserably seized with it that his skin was shining as covered with flakes of snow; and as the furfuraceous or bran like scales were daily rubbed off, the flesh appeared quick or raw underneath." See the Doctor's Medica Sacra, chap. ii. It was probably on accouut of its tendency to produce this disorder in that warm climate, that God forbad the use of swine's flesh to the Jews. The use of this bad aliment, in union with ardent spirits, is in all likelihood, the grand cause of the scurvy, which is so common in the British nations, and which would probably assume the form and virulence of a leprosy, were our climate as hot as that of Judea. See the notes on Exod. iv. 6. and on Levit. xiii. and xiv.

Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.] As this leper may be considered as a fit emblem of the corruption of man by sin; so may his cure, of the redemption of the soul by Christ. A sinner truly penitent, seeks God with a respectful faith; approaches him in the spirit of adoration, humbles himself under his mighty hand, acknowledging the greatness of his fall, and the vileness of his sin; his prayer like that of the leper, should be humble, plain, and full of confidence in that God who can do all things, and of dependance upon his will or mercy from which all good must be derived. It is peculiar to God that he need only will what he intends to perform. His power is his will. The ability of God to do what is necessary to be done, and his willingness to make his creatures happy, should be deeply considered by all those who approach him in prayer. The leper had no doubt of the former, but he was far from being equally satisfied in respect of the latter.

Verse 3. Jesus put forth his hand—I will; be thou clean.] The most sovereign authority is assumed in this speech of our blessed Lord—I WILL, there is here no supplication of any power superior to his own: and the event proved to the fullest conviction, and by the clearest demonstration, that his authority was absolute, and his power unlimited. Be thou cleansed, καθαρισθητι; a single word is enough.

And immediately his leprosy was cleansed.] What an astonishing sight! A man whose whole body was covered over with the most loathsome disease, cleansed from it in a moment of time! Was it possible for any soul to resist the evidence of this fact? This action of Christ is a representation of that invisible hand, which makes itself felt by the most insensible heart: of that internal word which makes itself heard by the most deaf; and of that supreme will which works every thing according to its own counsel.

Verse 4. Jesus saith—See thou tell no man] Had our Lord at this early period, fully manifested himself as the Messiah, the people, in all likelihood, would have proclaimed him King; this, however refused by him, must have excited the hatred of the Jewish rulers, and the jealousy of the Roman government; and speaking after the manner of men, his farther preachings and miracles must have been impeded. This alone seems to be the reason why he said to the leper; see thou tell no man.

Shew thyself to the priest] This was, to conform to the law instituted in this case, Lev. xiv. 1, &c.

Offer the gift] This gift was two living clean birds, some cedar wood, with scarlet, and hyssop, Lev. xiv. 4. which were to be brought for his cleansing; and when clean, two he lambs, one ewe lamb, three tenth deals of flour, and one log of oil, ver. 10. but if the person was poor, then he was to bring one lamb, one tenth deal of flour, one log of oil, and two turtle doves, or young pigeons, ver. 21, 22. See the notes on Lev. xiv.

Now all this was to be done for a testimony to them; to prove that this leper, who was doubtless well known in the land, had been throughly cleansed; and thus, in this private way, to give full proof to the priesthood, that Jesus was the true Messiah. The Jewish Rabbins allowed, that curing the lepers should be a characteristic of the Messiah; (see Bishop Chandler's Vindication) therefore the obstinacy of the priests, &c. in rejecting Christ, was utterly inexcusable.

Verse 5. Capernaum] See chap. iv. 13.

A centurion] Εκατονταρχος. A Roman military officer who had the command of one hundred men.

Verse 6. Lord] Rather Sir, for so the word κυριε should always be translated when a Roman is the speaker.

Sick of the Palsy] Or paralytic. See chap. iv. 24. This centurion did not act as many masters do when their servants are afflicted, have them immediately removed to an infirmary, often to a work house; or sent home to friends or relatives, who probably either care nothing for them, or are unable to afford them any of the comforts of life. In case of a contagious disorder, it may be necessary to remove an infected person to such places as are best calculated to cure the distemper, and prevent the spread of the contagion. But in all common cases, the servant should be considered as a child, and receive the same friendly attention. If by a hasty, unkind, and unnecessary removal, the servant die, are not the master and mistress murderers before God?

Verse 7. I will come and heal him.] Εγω ελθων θεραπευσω αυτον, I am coming, and will heal him. This saying is worthy of observation. Jesus did not positively say, I will come and heal him; this could not have been strictly true, because our Lord healed him without going to the house, and the issue shews that the words ought to be taken in the most literal sense: thus understood, they contained a promise which it seems none of them distinctly comprehended. Foreseeing the exercise of the centurion's faith, he promises that while he is coming, ere he arrives at the house, he will heal him, and this was literally done, verse 13. There is much beauty in this passage.

Verse 8. But speak the word only] Or instead of ειπε λογον, read, ειπε λογω, Speak by word or command. This reading is supported by the most extensive evidence from MSS. versions and fathers. See here the pattern of that living faith and genuine humility which ought always to accompany the prayer of a sinner: Jesus can will away the palsy, and speak away the most grievous torments. The first degree of humility is to acknowledge the necessity of God's mercy, and our own inability to help ourselves: the second, to confess the freeness of his grace, and our own utter unworthiness. Ignorance, unbelief, and presumption will ever retard our spiritual cure.

Verse 9. For I am a man under authority] That is, under the authority of others. This verse has given considerable embarrassment to commentators and critics. I believe the paraphrase given above to be the true meaning of the evangelist. To make this matter more plain, let it be observed, that the Roman foot was divided into three grand parts, Hastati, Principes, and Triarii. Each of these grand divisions was composed of thirty manipuli or companies; and every manipulus made two centuries or companies of one hundred men. Every manipulus had two centurions, but these were very far from being equal in rank and honour, though possessing the very same office. The Triarii and Principes were esteemed the most honourable, and had their centurions elected first: and these first elected centurions, took precedency of the centurions of the Hastati who were elected last. The centurion in the text was probably one of this last order, he was under the authority of either the Principes or Triarii, and had none under him but the hundred men whom he commanded, and who appear to have been in a state of the most loving subjection to him. The argument of the centurion seems to run thus. If I who am a person subject to the control of others, yet have some so completely subject to myself, that I can say to one, Come, and he cometh, to another, Go, and he goeth, and to my slave (τω δουλω μου) do this, and he doeth it; how much more then canst thou accomplish whatsoever thou willest, being under no control, and having all things under thy command. He makes a proper use of his authority, who by it raises his mind to the contemplation of the sovereign power of God, taking occasion from it to humble himself before him who has all power in heaven and earth; and to expect all good from him.

There are two beautiful passages in Arrian that tend much to illustrate this speech of the centurion. Καταταγεις Αγαμεμνων, λεγει μοι, πορευου προς τον Αχιλλεα, και αποσπασον την Βρισηιδα, πορευομαι. Ερχου, ερχομαι. "He who personates Agamemnon, says to me, Go to Achilles, and bring hither Briseis: I go. He says, Come hither: I come." Dissert. l. i. c. 25, p. 97.

Οταν ο Θεος ειπῃ τοις φυτοις ανθειν, ανθει. Οταν ειπῃ βλαστανειν, βλαστανει. Οταν εκφερειν τον καρπον, εκφερει. Οταν πεπαινειν, πεπαινει. Οταν παλιν αποβαλλειν, και φυλλορροειν, και αυτα εις αυτα συνειλουμενα εφ' ησυχιας μενειν, και αναπαυεσθαι, μενει και αναπαυεται. "When God commands the plants to blossom, they bear blossoms. When he commands them to bear seed, they bear seed. When he commands them to bring forth fruit, they put forth their fruits. When he commands them to ripen, they grow ripe. When he commands them to fade, and shed their leaves, and to remain inactive, involved in themselves, they thus remain, and are inactive." Cap. 14. p. 62. See Raphelius.

This mode of speech fully marks supreme and uncontrolled power, and that power put forth by a sovereign will to effect any purpose of justice or mercy. And God said, Let there be light, and there was light, is a similar expression.

Verse 10. I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.] That is, I have not found so great an instance of confidence and faith in my power, even among the Jews, as this Roman, a Gentile, has shewn himself to possess.

From Luke vii. 5. where it is said of this centurion, "he loved our nation, and has built us a synagogue;" we may infer, that this man was like the centurion mentioned Acts x. 1. A devout Gentile, a proselyte of the gate, one who believed in the God of Israel, without conforming to the Jewish ritual, or receiving circumcision. Though the military life is one of the most improper nurses for the christian religion, yet in all nations there have been found several instances of genuine humility, and faith in God, even in soldiers; and perhaps never more in the British military, than at present. A. D. 1812.

Verse 11. Many shall come from the east and west] Men of every description, of all countries, and of all professions; and shall sit down, that is, to meat, for this is the proper meaning of ανακλιθησονται, intimating the recumbent posture used by the Easterns at their meals. The Rabbins represent the blessedness of the kingdom of God under the notion of a banquet. See several proofs of this in Schoetgenius. This was spoken to soften the unreasonable prejudices of the Jews, which they entertained against the Gentiles, and to prepare them to receive their brethren of mankind into religious fellowship with themselves, under the Christian dispensation.

With Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob] In the closest communion with the most eminent followers of God. But if we desire to inherit the promises, we must be followers of them who through faith and patience enjoy them. Let us therefore imitate Abraham in his faith, Isaac in his obedience unto death, and Jacob in his hope and expectation of good things to come, amidst all the evils of this life, if we desire to reign with them.

Verse 12. Shall be cast out into outer darkness] As the enjoyment of that salvation which Jesus Christ calls the kingdom of heaven, is here represented under the notion of a nuptial festival, at which the guests sat down in a reclining posture, with the master of the feast; so the state of those who were excluded from the banquet is represented as deep darkness; because the nuptial solemnities took place at night. Hence at those suppers, the house of reception was filled with lights called δαδες, λαμπαδες, λυχνια, φανοι, Torches, lamps, candles and lanthorns, by Athenæus and Plutarch: so they who were admitted to the banquet, had the benefit of the light; but they who were shut out, were in darkness, called here outer darkness, i. e. the darkness on the outside of the house, in which the guests were; which must appear more abundantly gloomy, when compared with the profusion of light within the guest-chamber. And because they who were shut out, were not only exposed to shame, but also to hunger and cold; therefore it is added, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. As these feasts are often alluded to by the Evangelists, I would observe once for all: that they who were invited to them, entered by a gate designed to receive them; whence Christ, by whom we enter into the marriage feast, compares himself to a gate, John x. 1, 2, 7, 9. This gate at the time the guests were to come, was made narrow, the wicket only being left open, and the porter standing there, that they who were not bidden to the marriage might not rush into it. Hence Christ exhorts the Jews, to enter in at the strait gate, ch. vii. 13, &c. When all that were invited were once come, the door was presently shut, and was not to be opened to any who came too late, and stood knocking without: so after the wise virgins had entered with the bridegroom, the gate was shut, and was not opened to the foolish virgins, who stood knocking without, chap. xxv. 11. And in this sense we are to understand the words of Christ, Luke xiii. 24, 25. Many shall seek to enter in, but shall not be able. Why? because the master of the house hath risen up and shut to the door, they would not come unto him when they might, and now the day of probation is ended, and they must be judged according to the deeds done in the body. See Whitby on the place. How many of those who are called christians, suffer the kingdom, the graces, and the salvation which they had in their hands, to be lost; while West-India negroes, American Indians, Hindoo Polytheists, and atheistic Hottentots obtain salvation! An eternity of darkness, fears and pains, for comparatively a moment of sensual gratification, how terrible the thought! What outer darkness, or, το σκοτος το εξωτερον, that darkness, that which is the outermost, may refer to, in eternal damnation, is hard to say: what it alludes to I have already mentioned: but as the words βρυγμος των οδοντων, gnashing or CHATTERING of teeth, convey the idea, not only of extreme anguish, but of extreme cold; some have imagined that the punishment of the damned consisted in sudden transitions from extreme heat, to extreme cold; the extremes of both, I have found to produce exactly the same sensation.

MILTON happily describes this in the following inimitable verses, which a man can scarcely read, even at Midsummer, without shivering.

Beyond this flood a frozen continent
Lies dark and wild, beat with perpetual storms
Of whirlwind and dire hail———— ————the parching air
Burns frore, and cold performs the effect of fire.
Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions all the damn'd
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce,
From beds of raging fire, to starve in Ice,
————and there to pine
Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round
Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire.
Parad. Lost, book ii. line 586.

There is a passage in the Vulgate, Job. xxiv. 19. that might have helped Milton to this idea. Ad nimium calorem transeat ab aquis nivium. "Let him pass to excessive heat, from waters of snow." This reading which is found only in this form, in the Vulgate, is vastly expressive. Every body knows that snow-water is colder than snow itself. Another of our Poets has given us a most terrible description of perdition, on the same ground.

The once pamper'd spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice;
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
This pendant world; or to be worse than worst
Of those, that lawless and incertain thoughts
Imagine——

Similar to this is that dreadful description of the torments of the wicked given in the Institutes of Menu; "The wicked shall have a sensation of agony in Tamisra, or utter darkness, and in other seats of horror; in Asipatravana, or the sword-leaved forest, and in different places of binding fast, and of rending: multifarious tortures await them: they shall be mangled by ravens and owls, and shall swallow cakes boiling hot; and shall walk over inflamed sands, and shall feel the pangs of being baked like the vessels of a Potter: they shall assume the forms of beasts continually miserable, and suffer alternate afflictions from extremities of cold and heat; surrounded with terrors of various kinds. They shall have old age without resource; diseases attended with anguish; pangs of innumerable sorts, and lastly, unconquerable death."

Institutes of MENU, ch. xii. Inst. 75—80.

In the Zend Avesta, the place of wicked spirits is termed "The places of darkness, the germs of the thickest darkness." An uncommonly significant expression: Darkness has its birth there: there are its seeds and buds, there it vegetates everlastingly, and its eternal fruit is darkness!

See Zend Avesta, vol. i. Vendidad sadi, Fargard. xviii. p. 412.

And is this, or any thing as bad as this, HELL? Yes, and worse than the worst of all that has already been mentioned. Hear Christ himself. There their worm dieth not, and the fire is NOT QUENCHED! Great God! save the Reader from this damnation!

Verse 13. As thou hast believed, so be it done] Let the mercy thou requestest, be equal to the faith thou hast brought to receive it by. ACCORDING to thy faith be it done unto thee, is a general measure of God's dealings with mankind. To get an increase of faith, is to get an increase of every grace which constitutes the mind that was in Jesus; and prepares fully, for the enjoyment of the kingdom of God. God is the same in the present time which he was in ancient days; and miracles of healing may be wrought on our own bodies and souls, and on those of others by the instrumentality of our faith. But alas! where is faith to be found!

And his servant was healed in the selfsame hour] Εν τη ωρᾳ εκεινη, in that very hour. Faith is never exercised in the power and goodness of God till it is needed; and when it is exercised, God works the miracle of healing. Christ never says, believe now for a salvation which thou now needest, and I will give it to thee in some future time. That salvation which is expected through works or sufferings, must of necessity be future, as there must be time to work or suffer in: but the salvation which is by faith, must be for the present moment, for this simple reason, IT IS BY FAITH that God may be manifested and honoured; and not by works or by sufferings, lest any man should boast. To say, that though it is of faith, yet it may, and must in many cases, be delayed, (though the person is coming in the most genuine humility, deepest contrition, and with the liveliest faith in the blood of the Lamb) is to say that there is still something necessary to be done, either on the part of the person, or on the part of God, in order to procure it; neither of which positions has any truth in it.

Verse 14. Peter's house] That Peter lived at Capernaum, and that Christ lodged with him, is fully evident from this verse compared with chap. xvii. 24.

Peter's—wife's mother] Learn hence, says Theophylact, that marriage is no hinderance to virtue, since the chief of the Apostles had his wife. Marriage is one of the first of divine Institutions, and is a positive command of God. He says, the state of celibacy is not GOOD, Gen. ii. 18. Those who pretend to say that the single state is more holy than the other, slander their Maker, and say in effect, "we are too holy to keep the commandments of God."

Verse 15. He touched her hand] Can any thing on this side the unlimited power of God, effect such a cure with only a touch? If the Scriptures had not spoken of the divinity of Christ, these proofs of his power must have demonstrated it to the common sense of every man, whose creed had not previously blinded him.

Ministered unto them.] Αυτοις them, is the reading of most of the printed editions, but αυτω, to him, has the utmost evidence in its support from MSS. Versions and Fathers. Serving Christ in his ordinances and in his members is the best proof we can give to others of our being soundly restored to spiritual health.

Verse 16. When the even was come] The Jews kept their sabbath from evening to evening, according to the law, Lev. xxiii. 32. From evening to evening shall ye celebrate your sabbath. And the Rabbins say, The sabbath doth not enter but when the sun is set. Hence it was that the sick were not brought out to our Lord till after sun-set, because then the sabbath was ended.

Many that were possessed with devils] Dr. Lightfoot gives two sound reasons why Judea, in our Lord's time, abounded with Dæmoniacs. First, Because they were then advanced to the very height of impiety; see what Josephus, their own historian, says of them: There was not (said he) a nation under heaven more wicked than they were. See on Rom. i. 1. Secondly, Because they were then strongly addicted to Magic, and so, as it were, invited evil spirits to be familiar with them. It seems strange to find men at this distance of time questioning the truth of that, which neither Scribes nor Pharisees then doubted; nor did they ever object against the pretensions of Christ and his apostles to cast them out. And, if the whole business of Dæmonism had been only a vulgar error (as wise men now tell us) what a fine opportunity had the wise men then to unmask the whole matter, and thus pour contempt on the pretensions of our blessed Lord and his followers, who held it to be one proof of their divine mission, That Dæmons were subject to them?

And healed all that were sick] Not a soul did the Lord Jesus ever reject, who came to him soliciting his aid. Need any sinner despair who comes to him, conscious of his spiritual malady, to be healed by his merciful hand?

Verse 17. Himself took our infirmities] The quotation is taken from Isa. liii. 4. where the verb נשא nasa signifies to bear sin, so as to make atonement for it. And the Rabbins understand this place to speak of the sufferings of the Messiah, for the sins of Israel; and say that all the diseases, all the griefs, and all the punishments due to Israel shall be borne by him. See Synopsis Sohar. Christ fulfils the prophecies in all respects, and is himself the completion and truth of them, as being the lamb and victim of God, which bears and takes away the sin of the world. The text in Isaiah refers properly to the taking away of sin; and this in the Evangelist, to the removal of corporeal afflictions: but as the diseases of the body are the emblems of the sin of the soul, Matthew referring to the prediction of the prophet, considered the miraculous healing of the body, as an emblem of the soul's salvation by Christ Jesus.

Verse 18. Unto the other side.] Viz. of the Lake of Genesareth, whence he proceeded to the country of the Gergesenes, ver. 28.

Verse 19. A certain scribe] Though εις γραμματευς, ONE scribe, may be considered as a Hebraism; yet it is probable that the literal construction of it was intended, to shew that few of this class came to the Lord Jesus for instruction or salvation.

Master] Rather teacher, διδασκαλε, from διδασκω, I teach, which itself seems to be derived from δεικω, I shew, and means the person who shews or points out a particular way or science.

I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.] A man who is not illuminated by the Spirit of God, thinks himself capable of any thing: he alone who is divinely taught, knows he can do nothing but through Christ strengthening him. Every teacher among the Jews had disciples, and some especially that followed or accompanied them wherever they went, that they might have some person at hand with whom they might converse concerning the divine law.

Verse 20. The foxes have holes, &c.] Reader! art thou a poor man? and dost thou fear God? Then, what comfort must thou derive from the thought, that thou so nearly resemblest the Lord Jesus! But how unlike is the rich man, who is the votary of pleasure and slave of sin, to this heavenly pattern!

Son of man] A Hebrew phrase, expressive of humiliation and debasement; and on that account, applied emphatically to himself, by the meek and lowly Jesus. Besides, it seems here to be used to point out the incarnation of the Son of God, according to the predictions of the prophets, Psal. viii. 5. Dan. vii. 13. And as our Lord was now shewing forth his eternal Divinity in the miracles he wrought; he seems studious to prove to them the certainty of his incarnation, because on this depended the atonement for sin. Indeed our Lord seems more intent on giving the proofs of his humanity, than of his divinity, the latter being necessarily manifested by the miracles which he was continually working.

Verse 21. Another of his disciples] This does not mean any of the twelve, but one of those who were constant hearers of our Lord's preaching; the name of disciple being common to all those who professed to believe in him, John vi. 66. Bury my father: probably his father was old, and apparently near death, but it was a maxim among the Jews, that if a man had any duty to perform to the dead, he was, for that time, free from the observance of any other precept or duty. The children of Adam are always in extremes; some will rush into the ministry of the gospel without a call, others will delay long after they are called; the middle way is the only safe one: not to move a finger in the work till the call be given, and not to delay a moment after.

Verse 22. Let the dead bury their dead.] It was usual for the Jews to consider a man as dead who had departed from the precepts of the Law; and on this ground, every transgressor was reputed a dead man. Our Lord's saying being in common use, had nothing difficult in it to a Jew. Natural death is the separation of the body and soul; spiritual death, the separation of God and the soul: men who live in sin are dead to God. Leave the spiritually dead to bury their natural dead. All the common offices of Life may be performed by any person; to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom of God is granted but to a few, and to these only by an especial call; these should immediately abandon worldly concerns and employments, and give themselves wholly up to the work of the ministry.

Verse 24. Arose a great tempest in the sea] Probably excited by Satan, the prince of the power of the air, who, having got the author and all the preachers of the gospel together in a small vessel, thought by drowning it to defeat the purposes of God, and thus to prevent the salvation of a ruined world. What a noble opportunity must this have appeared to the enemy of the human race!

Verse 25. And his disciples] THE disciples. In the common printed editions, as well as in our translation, it is HIS disciples, but αυτου, his, is omitted by the very best MSS. and by Bengel, Wetstein, and Griesbach. This is a matter of very small importance, and need not be noticed, only every translator and commentator should aim to the uttermost of his knowledge and power, to give every particle of the language of the inspired penman that can be expressed, and to insert no one word which he has reason to believe did not come by the inspiration of God.

Lord, save us: we perish.] One advantage of trials is to make us know our weakness, so as to oblige us to have recourse to God by faith in Christ. It is by faith alone that we may be said to approach him; by love we are united to him, and by prayer we awake him. All good perishes in us without Christ: without his grace, there is not so much as one moment in which we are not in danger of utter ruin. How proper then is this short prayer for us, and how familiar should it be to us! Taken in the extensive christian sense it is exceedingly expressive; it comprehends all the power of our Lord's might, all the merit of his atonement, and all the depth of our misery and danger. See Quesnel.

Verse 26. Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?] Faith is ever bold—incredulity, always timid. When faith fails in temptation, there is the utmost danger of shipwreck. Lord, increase our faith! is a necessary prayer for all who desire to be saved.

Then he arose and rebuked the winds, &c.] As the agitation of the sea was only the effect of the wind, it was necessary to remove the cause of the disturbance, that the effect might cease. Joshua did not say to the earth, earth, stand thou still, because the earth is not the cause of its own motion: but sun, stand thou still, שמש דום shemesh dom, Sun be silent, or restrain thy influence, which is a proper cause of the revolutions of all the planets. When the solar influence was by the miraculous power of God suspended, the standing still of the earth was a necessary consequence. Both Christ and Joshua spoke with the strictest philosophical precision. See the notes on Josh. x. 12—14.

There was a great calm.] One word of Christ can change the face of nature, one word of his can restore calm and peace to the most troubled and disconsolate soul. Prayer and faith, if sincere, shall be heard though they may be weak. 1. That our imperfections may not hinder us from praying to God. 2. That we may be persuaded it is not our merits which make our prayers effectual. 3. That we may offer them up with great humility: and 4. That we may be fully united to Christ, without which union there is no salvation.

There was at first a great agitation, then a great calm. Thus God ever proportions the comfort to the affliction.

Verse 27. The men marvelled] Every part of the creation (man excepted) hears and obeys the Creator's voice. Sinners have an ear for the world, the devil and the flesh: till this ear is shut, God's voice is not discerned: for when it is shut to its enemies, it is open to its friends.

What manner of man is this] Ποταπος εστιν ουτος, How great is this person! Here was God fully manifest, but it was in the flesh,—there were the hidings of his power.

Verse 28. The country of the Gergesenes] This word is variously written in the MSS. and Versions; Gergasenes, Gerasenes Gadarenes, Gergesions, and Gersedonians. The three first are supported by the greater authorities. They might have all been names of the same place or district; but if we depend on what Origen says, the people mentioned here could not have been the inhabitants of Gerasa, which, says he, is a city of Arabia, ουτε θαλασσαν, ουτε λιμνην πλησιον εχουτα, which has neither sea nor lake nigh to it. "Gadara was, according to Josephus, the metropolis of Perea, or the region beyond Jordan: both the city and villages belonging to it, lay in the country of the Gergasenes; whence Christ going into the country of the Gadarenes, Mark v. 1. is said to go into the region of the Gergasenes, Matt. viii. 28." WHITBY.

Two possessed with devils] Persons possessed by evil dæmons. Mark and Luke mention only one dæmoniac, probably the fiercer of the two.

Coming out of the tombs] It is pretty evident that cupolas were generally builded over the graves among the Jews, and that these dæmoniacs had their dwellings under such: the evil spirits which were in them, delighting more in these abodes of desolation and ruin, as being more congenial to their fierce and diabolic nature, and therefore would drive the possessed into them.

Verse 29. What have we to do with thee] The literal translation of τι ημιν και σοι; is, What is it to us and to thee? which perhaps might be understood to imply their disclaiming any design to interfere with the work of Christ, and that he should not therefore meddle with them: for it appears they exceedingly dreaded his power.

What have we to do with thee, is a Jewish phrase, which often occurs in the Old Testament, signifying an abrupt refusal of some request, or a wish not to be troubled with the company or importunity of others. Jehu said to the messenger who was sent by Joram to meet him; What hast thou to do with peace? David said, What have I to do with you, ye

Jesus, thou Son of God] Griesbach omits the word Jesus, on the authority of several MSS. of the greatest antiquity and respectability; besides some Versions, and several of the Fathers. I heartily concur with these MSS. &c. for this simple reason, among others, that the word Jesus, i. e. Saviour, was of too ominous an import to the Satanic interest, to be used freely in such a case, by any of his disciples or subalterns.

Art thou come hither to torment us, before the time?] From this it appears that a greater degree of punishment awaited these dæmons than they at that time endured; and that they knew there was a time determined by the divine judge, when they should be sent into greater torments.

Verse 30. A herd of many swine] These were in all probability Jewish property, and kept and used in express violation of the law of God; and therefore their destruction, in the next verse, was no more than a proper manifestation of the justice of God.

Verse 31. Suffer us to go away] Επιτρεψον ημιν απελθειν; this is the common reading, but αποστειλον ημας, send us away, appears more genuine. This latter reading, Griesbach, has adopted on the authority of three ancient MSS. the Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, Syriac, all the Arabic, Saxon, most of the Itala and the Vulgate. Send us away seems to express more fully the absolute power Jesus Christ had over them,—permission alone was not sufficient; the very power by which they were to go away, must come from Christ himself! How vain was the boast of Satan, ch. iv. 9. when we find he could not possess the body of one of the vilest animals that God has made, without immediate authority from the Most High! Since a dæmon cannot enter even into a swine without being sent by God himself; how little is the power or malice of any of them to be dreaded by those who have God for their portion and protector!

Verse 32. They went into the herd of swine] Instead of την αγελην των χοιρων the herd of swine, Griesbach reads τους χοιρους the swine, on the authority of many MSS. and Versions.

The whole herd of swine] Των χοιρων, of swine, is omitted by many MSS. and versions. See Griesbach, and see on Luke viii. 26, &c.

Ran violently down a steep place, &c.] The prayer of these dæmons is heard and answered! Strange! but let it be noted, that God only hears dæmons and certain sinners when their prayer is the echo of his own justice. Here is an emblem of the final impenitence and ruin into which the swinish sinners, the habitually impure, more commonly fall than other sinners. Christ permits the dæmons to do that in the swine, which he did not permit them to do in the possessed, on purpose to shew us what rage they would exercise on us if left to their liberty and malice. Many are the divine favours which we do not consider, or know only in general. "But the owners of the swine lost their property." Yes, and learn from this, of how small value temporal riches are in the estimation of God. He suffers them to be lost, sometimes to disengage us from them through mercy; sometimes out of justice to punish us for having acquired or preserved them either by covetousness or injustice.

Verse 33. And they that kept them fled] Terrified at what had happened to the swine.

Verse 34. The whole city came out] Probably with the intention to destroy Jesus for having destroyed their swine; but having seen him, they were awed by his presence, and only besought him to depart from their borders. Many rather chuse to lose Jesus Christ than those temporal goods by which they gratify their passions, at the expence of their souls. They love even their swine better than their salvation.

Certain doctors in both sciences, divinity and physic, gravely tell us, that these dæmoniacs were only common madmen, and that the disease was supposed, by the superstitious Jews, to be occasioned by dæmons. But with due deference to great characters, may not a plain man be permitted to ask by what figure of speech can it be said that "two diseases besought,— went out—filled a herd of swine—rushed down a precipice, &c." What silly trifling is this! Some people's creeds will neither permit God nor the devil to work; and in several respects, hardly to exist. For he who denies Divine inspiration, will scarcely acknowledge diabolic influence. See the note on ver. 16, and on Luke vii. 21.

NOTES ON CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. He came into his own city.] Viz. Capernaum, where he seems to have had his common residence at the house of Peter. See chap. iv. 13. and viii. 13. This verse properly belongs to the preceding chapter.

Verse 2. Sick of the palsy] See chap. iv. 24.

Lying on a bed] Κλινης, a couch or sopha, such as they reclined on at meals.

Seeing their faith] The faith of the paralytic person, and the faith of those who brought him; see on Mark ii. 4.

Be of good cheer] Θαρσει τεκνον, Son, take courage! Probably he began to despond, and Christ spoke thus to support his faith.

Thy sins be forgiven thee.] Moral evil has been the cause of all the natural evil in the world. Christ goes to the source of the malady, which is sin; and to that as the procuring cause we should refer in all our afflictions. 'Tis probable that this paralytic person had, in the earnest desires of his heart, entreated the cure of his soul, leaving his body to the care of others, as the first miracle of healing is wrought on his soul. In a state of helplessness, when we seek above all things to please God, by giving him our hearts; he often inspires others with the care of our temporal necessities. It may be necessary to be observed, that it was a maxim among the Jews, that no diseased person could be healed, till all his sins were blotted out. See Nedarim, fol. 41. Hence our Lord first forgives the sins, and then heals the body of the paralytic person. This appears to have been founded on Psal. ciii. 3. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, and healeth all thy diseases Here pardon precedes health. See also Psal. xli. 3, 4. It may be observed also, that most people are more in earnest about their souls when in sickness than in health; and therefore are more earnest in prayer for salvation.

Verse 3. This man blasphemeth.] Βλασφημεω comes either from βλαπτειν την φημην to hurt or blast the reputation or credit of another: or from βαλλειν ταις φημαις to smite with reports. Whenever it is used in reference to GOD, it simply signifies, to speak impiously of his nature, or attributes, or works. Injurious speaking is its proper translation when referred to man.

The Scribes were the literati of that time; and their learning, because not used in dependance on God, rendered them proud, envious and obstinate. Unsanctified knowledge has still the same effect: that light serves only to blind and lead men out of the way, which is not joined with uprightness of heart. The most sacred truths often become an occasion of delusion, where men are under the government of their evil passions.

Verse 4. Jesus knowing (ιδων seeing) their thoughts] In telling them what the thoughts of their hearts were, (for they had expressed nothing publicly) he gave them the fullest proof of his power to forgive sins; because God only can forgive sins; and God only can search and know the heart. Jesus pronounced the man's sins forgiven—and gave the Scribes the fullest proof of his power to do so, by telling them what, in the secret of their souls, they thought on the subject.

God sounds the secrets of all hearts—no sin escapes his notice; how senseless then is a sinner to think he sins securely when unseen by men. Let us take heed to our hearts, as well as to our conduct, for God searches out, and condemns all that does not spring from, and leads not to himself.

Verse 5. For whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and walk?] Both are equally easy and equally difficult: for both require unlimited power to produce them. And every thing is equally easy to that power which is unlimited. A universe can be as easily produced by a single act of the Divine Will, as the smallest elementary part of matter.

The common punctuation of the above passage almost destroys the sense; the comma should be placed after easier, and to say, made the first part of the question.

Verse 6. But that ye may know, &c.] External miracles are the proofs of internal ones. Three miracles are wrought in this case.—(I mean, by miracle, something produced or known that no power is capable of but that which is omnipotent; and no knowledge adequate to, but that which is omniscient.) The miracles are these: 1st. The remission of the poor man's sins. 2d. The discernment of the secret thoughts of the Scribes. 3d. The restoring of the paralytic, in an instant, to perfect soundness.—Thus, one miracle becomes the proof and establishment of another. Never was a clearer proof of omnipotent energy and mercy, brought under the senses of man. Here is an absolutely perfect miracle wrought; and here are absolute incontestible proofs that the miracle was wrought: and the conclusion is the fullest demonstration of the divinity of the ever-blessed Jesus.

Arise, take up thy bed] Being enabled to obey this command, was the public proof that the man was made whole. Such a circumstance should not pass without improvement. A man gives proof of his conversion from sin to God, who imitates this paralytic person. He who does not rise, and stand upright, but either continues grovelling on the earth, or falls back as soon as he is got up, is not yet cured of his spiritual palsy. When we see a penitent enabled to rejoice in hope of God's glory, and to walk in the way of his commandments; he affords us all the proof which we can reasonably require, that his conversion is real: the proof sufficient to satisfy himself, is the witness of the Holy Spirit in his own heart; but this is a matter of which those who are without, cannot judge: they must form their opinion from his conduct, and judge of the tree by its fruits.

Verse 8. When the multitudes saw it, they marvelled] Instead of εθαυμασαν wondered, the Codex Vatic. and Cod. Bezæ, with several others MSS. and Versions have εφοβηθησαν feared. In the Gothic, and one copy of the Itala, both readings are conjoined thus: And the multitudes seeing it, wondered and feared, and glorified God. Wondered at the miracle: feared, to offend against such power, and goodness, and glorified God for the works of mercy which he had wrought.

That which to the doctors of the law, the worldly-wise and prudent, is a matter of scandal, is to the humble, an occasion of glorifying the Most High. Divine things make a deeper impression on the hearts of the simple multitude than on those of the doctors, which, puffed up with a sense of their own wisdom, refuse to receive the truth, as it is in Jesus. The conversion of one rebellious soul is a greater miracle, and more to be admired, than all that can be wrought on inanimate creatures. He who sees a sinner converted from the error of his way, sees a miracle wrought by eternal power and goodness. May such miracles be multiplied!

Verse 9. Named Matthew] Generally supposed to be the same who wrote this history of our blessed Lord.

The receipt of custom] The custom-house, τελωνιον—the place where the taxes levied by the Romans, of the Jews, were collected.

Follow me] That is, become my disciple.

And he arose, and followed him.] How blessed it is to be obedient to the first call of Christ—how much happiness and glory are lost by delays, though conversion at last may have taken place.

Verse 10. Sat at meat in the house] Viz. of Matthew, who, it appears from Luke v. 29. made a great feast on the occasion, thus testifying his gratitude for the honour done him; and that his friends and acquaintances might profit by the teaching of his new master, he invites them to the entertainment that was honoured by the presence of Christ. His companions, it appears, were not of the most creditable kind. They were tax-gatherers (see chap. 45.) and sinners, αμαρτωλοι, a word which I believe in general signifies heathens, throughout the gospels, and in several other parts of the New Testament. See, among others, chap. xi. 19. xxvi. 45. Mark ii. 15—17. xiv. 41. Luke v. 30—32. vi. 32—34. vii. 34, 37, 39. xv. 1, 2, 7, 10. xix. 7. xxiv. 7. John ix. 16, 24, 25, 31. Rom. v. 8. Gal. ii. 15. Heb. vii. 26. 1 Pet. iv. 18. in most, if not all of which places, it evidently refers to the character or state of a Gentile or Heathen. See also the notes on these passages.

Verse 11. When the Pharisees saw it] He who, like a Pharisee, never felt himself indebted to infinite mercy for his own salvation, is rarely solicitous about the salvation of others. The grace of Christ alone inspires the soul with true benevolence. The self-righteous Pharisees considered it equal to legal defilement, to sit in company with tax-gatherers and heathens. It is certain that those who fear God should not associate, through choice, with the workers of iniquity; and should only be found with them when transacting their secular business requires it, or when they have the prospect of doing good to their souls.

Verse 12. They that be whole need not a physician] A common proverb, which none could either misunderstand or misapply. Of it, the reader may make the following use:

1. Jesus Christ represents himself here as the sovereign Physician of souls. 2. That all stand in need of his healing power. 3. That men must acknowledge their spiritual maladies, and the need they have of his mercy, in order to be healed by him. 4. That it is the most inveterate and dangerous disease the soul can be afflicted with, to imagine itself whole, when the sting of death, which is sin, has pierced it through, in every part.

Verse 13. I will have mercy and not sacrifice] Quoted from 1 Sam. xv. 22. These are remarkable words. We may understand them as implying, 1st. That God prefers an act of mercy shewn to the necessitous, to any act of religious worship to which the person might be called at that time.—Both are good; but the former is the greater good, and should be done in preference to the other. 2dly. That the whole sacrificial system was intended only to point out the infinite mercy of God to fallen man, in his redemption by the blood of the new covenant. And 3dly. That we should not rest in the sacrifices, but look for the mercy and salvation prefigured by them. This saying was nervously translated by our ancestors, Ic pylle mildheortnesse næs onræddnesse, I will mildheartedness, and not sacrifice.

Go ye and learn] צא ולמד tse velimmed, a form of speech in frequent use among the Rabbins, when they referred to any fact or example in the Sacred Writings. Nothing tends more to humble pretenders to devotion, than to shew them that they understand neither Scripture nor religion, when, relying on external performances, they neglect love to God and man, which is the very soul and substance of true religion. True holiness has ever consisted in faith working by love.

I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners] Most of the common editions add, εις μετανοιαν, unto repentance; but this is omitted in the Codex Vatic. and Bezæ, sixteen others, both the Syriac, both the Persic, Ethiop. Armen. Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, all the Itala except three, the Vulgate, Clemens Roman. Origen, Basil, Jerom, Augustin, Ambrose and Barnabas. The omission is approved by Mill and Bengel.—Griesbach leaves it out of the text.

Verse 14. Thy disciples fast not?] Probably meaning that they did not fast so frequently as the others did, or for the same purposes, which is very likely, for the Pharisees had many superstitious fasts. They fasted in order to have lucky dreams—to obtain the interpretation of a dream, or to avert the evil import of a dream. They also fasted often, in order to obtain the things they wished for. The tract, Taanith, is full of these fasts, and of the wonders performed thus by the Jewish doctors.

Verse 15. Can the children of the bride-chamber] Νυμφωνος. Or, νυμφιου, bride-groom, as the Cod. Bezæ and several Versions have it. These persons were the companions of the bride-groom, who accompanied him to the house of his father-in-law when he went to bring the bride to his own home. The marriage-feast, among the Jews, lasted seven days; but the new married woman was considered to be a bride for thirty days. Marriage feasts were times of extraordinary festivity, and even of riot, among several people of the East.

When the bride-groom shall be taken from them, &c.] There was only one annual fast observed in the primitive church, called by our ancestors, lencten-fæsten, the spring fast; and by us, LENT: by the Greeks τεσσερακοστη, and by the Latins, Quadrigessima. This fast is pretended to be kept by many in the present day, in commemoration of our Lord's forty days fast in the wilderness; but it does not appear that, in the purest ages of the primitive church, genuine Christians ever pretended that their quadrigessimal fast was kept for the above purpose. Their fast was kept merely to commemorate the time during which Jesus Christ lay under the power of death; which was about FORTY HOURS: and it was in this sense they understood the words of this text: the days will come, &c. with them, the bride-groom meant Christ; the time in which he was taken away, his crucifixion, death, and the time he lay in the grave. Suppose him dying about 12 o'clock on what is called Friday, and that he rose about four on the morning of his own day (St. John says, Early, while it was yet dark, chap. xx. 1) the interim makes forty hours, which was the true primitive Lent, or quadrigessimal fast. It is true that many in the primitive church were not agreed on this subject, as Socrates in his Church History, book v. chap. 22, says, "Some thought they should fast one day; others two; others more."—Different churches also were divided concerning the length of the time; some keeping it three, others five, and others seven weeks: and the historian himself is puzzled to know why they all agreed in calling these fasts, differing so much in their duration, by the name of Quadrigessima, or forty days fast: the plain obvious reason appears to me to have been simply this: They put DAYS in the place of HOURS; and this absurdity continues in some Christian churches to the present day. For more on fasting, see chap. vi. 16.

Verse 16. No man putteth a piece of new cloth] Ουδεις δε επιβαλλει επιβλημα ρακους αγναφου επι ιματιω παλαιω. No man putteth a patch of unscoured cloth upon an old garment. This is the most literal translation I can give of this verse, to convey its meaning to those who cannot consult the original. Ρακος αγναφον is that cloth which has not been scoured, or which has not passed under the hand of the fuller, who is called γναφευς in Greek: and επιβλημα signifies a piece put on, or what we commonly term a patch.

It—taketh from the garment] Instead of closing up the rent, it makes a larger, by tearing away with it the whole breadth of the cloth, over which it was laid; αιρει γαρ το πληρωμα αυτου—it taketh its fulness or whole breadth from the garment; this I am persuaded is the meaning of the original, well expressed by the Latin, or Itala of the C. BEZÆ, Tollit enim plenitudo ejus de vestimento. "It takes away its fulness from the garment."

Verse 17. New wine into old bottles] It is still the custom, in the eastern countries, to make their bottles of goat-skins; if these happened to be old, and new wine were put into them, the violence of the fermentation must necessarily burst them, and therefore newly made bottles were employed for the purpose of putting that wine in, which had not yet gone through its state of fermentation. The Institutes of Christ, and those of the Pharisees, could never be brought to accord: an attempt to combine the two systems, would be as absurd as it would be destructive. The old covenant made way for the new, which was its completion and its end: but with that old covenant, the new cannot be incorporated.

Christian prudence requires that the weak, and newly converted, should be managed with care and tenderness. To impose such duties and mortifications as are not absolutely necessary to salvation, before God has properly prepared the heart by his grace for them, is a conduct as absurd and ruinous as putting a piece of raw unscoured cloth on an old garment; it is, in a word, requiring the person to do the work of a man, while as yet he is but a little child. Preachers of the gospel, and especially those who are instruments in God's hand, of many conversions, have need of much heavenly wisdom, that they may know to watch over, guide, and advise those who are brought to a sense of their sin and danger. How many auspicious beginnings have been ruined by men's proceeding too hastily, endeavouring to make their own designs take place, and to have the honour of that success themselves, which is due only to God.

Verse 18. A certain ruler] There were two officers in the synagogue, חזן הכנסת chazan ha-ceneseth, the bishop or overseer of the congregation; and ראש הכנסת rosh ha-ceneseth, the head or ruler of the congregation. The Chazan takes the book of the Law, and gives it to Rosh or ruler; and he appoints who shall read the different sections, &c. Jairus, who is the person intended here, was in this latter sense, the ruler or governor of one of the synagogues, probably at Capernaum. See Mark v. 22. Luke viii. 41.

My daughter is even now dead] Or, my daughter was just now dying; αρτι ετελευτησεν, or, is by this time dead: i. e. as Mr. Wakefield properly observes, She was so ill when I left home, that she must be dead by this time. This turn of the expression reconciles the account given here, with that in Mark and Luke. Michaelis conjectures, that in the Hebrew original, the words must have stood thus, עתה מתה átah matah; which, without the points, may signify either She is dead, or She is dying.

To be successful in our applications to God by prayer, four things are requisite, and this ruler teaches us what they are.

First, A man should place himself in the presence of God—he came unto him.

Secondly, He should humble himself sincerely before God—he fell down before him—at his feet. Mark v. 22.

Thirdly. He should lay open his wants with a holy earnestness—he besought him greatly. Mark v. 23.

Fourthly, He should have unbounded confidence in the power and goodness of Christ that his request shall be granted—put thy hand upon her, and she shall live. He who comes in this way, to God for salvation, is sure to be heard. Imposition of hands was a rite anciently used by the servants of God, through which, heavenly influences were conveyed to the bodies and souls of men. This rite is still used in certain Churches; but as there is no Holy Ghost communicated by it, some suppose it may be as well omitted. But why is this? Is it not because there is an unfaithfulness in the person who lays on hands, or an unfitness in him on whom they are laid? Let the rite be restored to its primitive simplicity, and God will own it as he formerly did. But however this may be, where is the man or number of men who have authority to abrogate a rite of God's own appointment? In the appointment of men to the sacred ministry it should never be omitted: even in these degenerate days, it may still serve as a sign of the necessity of the gifts and graces of that Holy Spirit, without which no man can fulfil the work of the ministry, or be the instrument of saving the souls of them that hear him. When the inventions of men are put in the place of the ordinances of God, the true Church of Christ is in great danger.

Verse 19. Jesus arose, and followed him] Our blessed Lord could have acted as well at a distance, as present; but he goes to the place, to teach his ministers not to spare either their steps or their pains when the salvation of a soul is in question. Let them not think it sufficient to pray for the sick in their closets; but let them go to their bed-sides, that they may instruct and comfort them. He can have little unction in private, who does not also give himself up to public duties.

Verse 20. A woman which was diseased with an issue of blood] Γυνη αιμορρουσα. Mulier sanguinis profluvio laborans. Significatur hoc loco, fluxus muliebris, in SANIS, menstruus; in HAC, perpetuus. It would be easy to explain the nature and properties of the disease here mentioned; but when it is said, that prudence forbids it, the intimation itself may be thought sufficiently explanatory of the disorder in question. There are some remarkable circumstances relative to this case, mentioned by St. Mark, chap. v. 25, &c. which shall be properly noticed in the notes on that place.

modesty forbad her to make any public acknowledgment of it: and therefore she endeavoured to transact the whole business in private. Besides, the touch of such a person, was reputed unclean. By faith in Christ Jesus, little things are often rendered efficacious to our salvation. What more simple than a morsel of bread, and a few drops of wine, in the Lord's Supper! and yet, they who receive them by faith in the sacrifice they represent, are made partakers of the blessings purchased by the crucified body, and spilt blood of the Lord Jesus!

Verse 22. Daughter, be of good comfort] Θαρσει θυγατερ, take courage, daughter. See on ver. 2. The reason of this kind speech was, Jesus finding that virtue had proceeded from him, made inquiry who had touched him. The woman finding that she could not be hid, came fearing and trembling (Mark v. 33.) and confessed the truth: to dispel these fears and to comfort her mind, Jesus said, Daughter, take courage.

Thy faith hath made thee whole.] Η πιστις σου σεσωκε σε, This thy faith hath saved thee; i. e. thy faith in my power, has interested that power in thy behalf, so that thou art saved from thy disorder, and from all its consequences. See on Luke viii. 46.

Verse 23. Saw the minstrels and the people making a noise] Αυλητας pipers; Anglo-saxon hpiꝩclepar, the whistlers; Gothic þaurngans þaurngandans the horn blowers blowing with their horns. Nearly the same as the pipublasara, pipe blowers, of the Islandic, for among all those nations funeral lamentations, accompanied with such rude instruments, were made at the death of relatives. That pipes were in use among the Jews, in times of calamity or death, is evident from Jer. xlviii. 36. And among the Greeks and Romans, as well as among the Jews, persons were hired on purpose to follow the funeral procession with lamentations. See Jer. ix. 17—21. Amos v. 16. Even the poorest among the Jews were required to have two pipers, and one mourning woman. At these funeral solemnities it was usual with them to drink considerably; even ten cups of wine each, where it could be got. See Lightfoot. This custom is observed among the native Irish to this day, in what is called their CAOINAN. The body of the deceased dressed in grave-clothes, and ornamented with flowers, is placed on some eminent place; the relations and caoiners range themselves in two divisions, one at the head, and the other at the feet of the corpse. Anciently, where the deceased was a great personage, the bards and croteries prepared the caoinan. The chief bard of the head chorus, began by singing the first stanza in a low doleful tone; which was softly accompanied by the harp. At the conclusion, the foot semichorus began the lamentation or ULLALOO, from the final note of the preceding stanza, in which they were answered by the head semichorus; then both united in one general chorus.

The chorus of the first stanza being ended, the chief bard of the foot semichorus sung the second stanza, the strain of which was taken from the concluding note of the preceding chorus, which ended, the head semichorus began the GOL, or lamentation, in which they were answered by that of the foot, and then, as before, both united in the general full chorus. Thus alternately were the song and chorusses performed during the night. I have seen a number of women, sometimes fourteen, twenty-four, or more, accompany the deceased from his late house to the grave-yard, divided into two parties on each side the corpse, singing the ULLALOO alternately, all the way. That drinking, in what is called the wake, or watching with the body of the deceased, is practised, and often carried to a shameless excess, needs little proof. This kind of intemperance proceeded to such great lengths among the Jews; that the Sanhedrin were obliged to make a decree, to restrain the drinking to ten cups each. I mention these things more particularly, because I have often observed that the customs of the aboriginal Irish bear a very striking resemblance to those of the ancient Jews; and other Asiatic nations. The application of these observations I leave to others.

It was a custom with the Greeks to make a great noise with brazen vessels; and the Romans made a general outcry, called conclamatio, hoping either to stop the soul which was now taking its flight, or to awaken the person, if only in a state of torpor. This they did for eight days together, calling the person incessantly by his name; at the expiration of which term the phrase, conclamatum est—all is over—there is no hope—was used. See the words used in this sense by Terence, EUN. I. 347. In all probability this was the (θορυβουμενον) the making a violent outcry, mentioned here by the Evangelist. How often, on the death of relatives, do men incumber and perplex themselves with vain, worldly and tumultuous ceremonies, instead of making profitable reflections on death!

is not dead so as to continue under the power of death; but shall be raised from it as a person is from natural sleep.

They laughed him to scorn.] Κατεγελων αυτου, they ridiculed him; from κατα intensive, and γελαω I laugh—they grinned a ghastly smile, expressive of the contempt they felt for his person and knowledge. People of the world generally laugh at those truths which they neither comprehend nor love, and deride those who publish them; but a faithful minister of God (copying the example of Christ) keeps on his way, and does the work of his Lord and Master.

Verse 25. He—took her by the hand, and the maid arose.] The fountain of life thus communicating its vital energy to the dead body. Where death has already taken place, no power but that of the great God can restore to life; in such a case, vain is the help of man. So the soul that is dead in trespasses and sins, that is, sentenced to death because of transgression; and is thus dead in law, can only be restored to spiritual life by the mighty power of the Lord Jesus; because HE alone has made the atonement, and HE alone can pardon transgression. If the spiritually dead person be utterly unconcerned about the state and fate of his soul, let a converted relative either bring him to Christ by leading him to hear the unadulterated Gospel of the kingdom; or bring Christ to him by fervent, faithful, and persevering prayer.

Verse 26. And the fame hereof went abroad] In this business Jesus himself scarcely appears, but the work effected by his sovereign power, is fully manifested; to teach us that it is the business of a successful preacher of the gospel to conceal himself as much as possible, that God alone may have the glory of his own grace. This is a proper miracle, and a full exemplification of the unlimited power of Christ.

Verse 27. Son of David] This was the same as if they had called him Messiah. Two things here are worthy of remark: 1st. That it was a generally received opinion at this time in Judea, that the Messiah should be son of David. (John vii. 47.) 2dly. That Jesus Christ was generally and incontestably acknowledged as coming from this stock. Matt. xii. 23.

Have mercy on us.] That man has already a measure of heavenly light, who knows that he has no merit; that his cry should be a cry for mercy; that he must be fervent, and that in praying he must follow Jesus Christ as the true Messiah, the son of David expected from heaven.

Verse 28. When he was come into the house] That is, the house of Peter, at Capernaum, where he ordinarily lodged.

Believe ye that I am able to do this?] Without faith Jesus does nothing to men's souls now, no more than he did to their bodies in the days of his flesh.

They said unto him, Yea, Lord.] In our blindness we should have, 1st. A lively faith in the almighty grace of Christ. 2dly. A fervent incessant cry for the communication of this grace. 3dly. A proper view of his incarnation, because it is through his union with our nature, and by his sufferings and death, we are to expect salvation.

Verse 29. According to your faith] See on chap. viii. 13.

Verse 30. Straitly charged them] He charged them severely, ενεβριμησατο, from εν, and βριμαομαι to roar or storm with anger; he charged them on pain of his displeasure, not to make it as yet public. See the reasons, chap. viii. 4.

Verse 31. But they—spread abroad his fame] They should have held their peace; for to obey is better than sacrifice. 1 Sam. xv. 22. but man must always be wiser than God. However, it may be profitable to remark, 1st. That honour pursues those who fly from it. 2dly. He who is thoroughly sensible of God's mercy, cannot long contain his acknowledgments. 3dly, That God in general requires that what a man has received for his own salvation, shall become subservient to that of others— Let your light so shine, &c. God chuses to help man by man, that all may be firmly knit together in brotherly love.

blind, others dumb, &c. It was the interest of Satan to hide his influences under the appearance of natural disorders. A man who does not acknowledge his sin to God, who prays not for salvation, who returns no praises for the mercies he is continually receiving, may well be said to be possessed with a dumb dæmon.

Verse 33. And when the devil was cast out, the dumb spake] The very miracle which was now wrought, was to be the demonstrative proof of the Messiah's being manifested in the flesh. See Isai. xxxv. 5, 6.

It was never so seen in Israel.] The greatest of the prophets has never been able to do such miracles as these. This was the remark of the people: and thus we find, that the poor and the simple were more ready to acknowledge the hand of God, than the rich and the learned. Many miracles had been wrought in the course of this one day, and this excited their surprise.

Verse 34. He casteth out devils through the prince of the devils.] This verse is wanting in both the Greek and Latin of the C. Bezæ, in an other copy of the Itala, and in Hilary and Juvencus. But see on chap. xii. 24.

It is a consummate piece of malice to attribute the works of God to the devil. Envy cannot suffer the approbation which is given to the excellencies of others. Those whose hearts are possessed by this vice, speak the very language of the devil. Calumny is but a little distance from envy. Though all persons may not have as much envy as the Pharisees; yet they should fear having some degree of it, as all have the principle from which it proceeds, viz. sin.

Verse 35. Jesus went about all the cities and villages] Of Galilee. See on chap. iv. 23, 24. A real minister of Jesus Christ, after his example, is neither detained in one place by a comfortable provision made by some; nor discouraged from pursuing his work by the calumny and persecution of others. It is proper to remark, that wherever Christ comes, the proofs of his presence evidently appear: he works none but salutary and beneficial miracles, because his ministry is a ministry of salvation.

Among the people.] Εν τω λαω. This clause is omitted by about fifty MSS. several of them of the first antiquity and authority; by the Complutensian, and by Bengel; by both the Syriac, both the Arabic, both the Persic; the Ethiopic, Gothic, Saxon, and all the Itala, except four. Griesbach has left it out of the text.

Verse 36. Moved with compassion] Εσπλαγχνισθη, from σπλαγχνον, a bowel. The Jews esteemed the bowels to be the seat of sympathy and the tender passions, and so applied the organ to the sense.

Σπλαγχνιζομαι signifies, says Mintert, "to be moved with pity from the very inmost bowels. It is an emphatic word, signifying a vehement affection of commiseration, by which the bowels, and especially the heart, is moved." Both this verb and the noun seem to be derived from σπαω, to draw; the whole intestinal canal, in the peristaltic motion of the bowels, being drawn, affected, and agitated with the sight of a distressed or miserable object. Pity increases this motion of the bowels, and produces considerable pain: hence σπλαγχνιζομαι, to have the bowels moved, signifies to feel pity or compassion, at seeing the miseries of others.

They fainted] Instead of εκλελυμενοι, fainted, all the best MSS. Versions, and Fathers, read εσκυλμενοι, grieved, and melancholy. Kypke says σκυλλειν properly signifies, to pluck off the hair, as persons do in extreme sorrow or distress. The margin says, They were tired and lay down.

And were scattered abroad] Ερριμμενοι, thrown down, or, all along. They were utterly neglected as to the interests of their souls, and rejected by the proud and disdainful Pharisees. This people (οχλος, this mob) that knoweth not the Law, is accursed, John vii. 49. Thus, those execrable men spoke of the souls that God had made, and of whom they should have been the instructors.

Those teachers in name, have left their successors behind them; but as in the days of Christ, so now, God has in his mercy rescued the flock out of the hands of those who only fed upon their flesh, and clothed themselves with their wool. The days in which a man was obliged to give his property to what was called THE Church, for the salvation of his soul, Christ being left out of the question, are, thank God, nearly over and gone. Jesus is the true Shepherd, without him there is nothing but fainting, fatigue, vexation, and dispersion. O that we may be led out and in by him, and find pasture!

Verse 37. The harvest] The souls who are ready to receive the truth are very numerous; but the labourers are few. There are multitudes of Scribes, Pharisees, and Priests, of reverend and right reverend men; but there are few that work. Jesus wishes for labourers not gentlemen, who are either idle drones, or slaves to pleasure and sin, and nati consumere fruges—"Born to consume the produce of the soil."

It was customary with the Jews to call their Rabbins and students reapers; and their work of instruction, the harvest. So in Idra Rabba, s. 2. "The days are few; the creditor is urgent; the crier calls out incessantly; and the reapers are few." And in Pirkey Aboth: "The day is short, the work great, the workmen idle, the reward abundant, and the master of the household is urgent." In all worldly concerns, if there be the prospect of much gain, most men are willing enough to labour; but if it be to save their own souls, or the souls of others, what indolence, backwardness, and carelessness! while their adversary, the Devil, is going about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour; and a careless soul, and especially a careless minister, is his especial prey.

The place of the harvest is the whole earth: it signifies little where a man works, provided it be by the appointment, in the Spirit, and with the blessing of God.

Verse 38. That he will send forth labourers] Οπως εκβαλλη εργατας, that he would thrust forth labourers. Those who are fittest for the work, are generally most backward to the employment. The man who is forward to become a preacher, knows little of God, of human nature, or of his own heart. It is God's province to thrust out such preachers as shall labour; and it is our duty to entreat him to do so. A minister of Christ is represented as a day labourer: he comes into the harvest, not to become lord of it, not to live on the labour of others, but to work, and to labour his day. Though the work may be very severe, yet, to use a familiar expression, there is good wages in the harvest-home; and the day, though hot, is but a short one. How earnestly should the flock of Christ pray to the good Shepherd to send them pastors after his own heart, who will feed them with knowledge; and who shall be the means of spreading the knowledge of his truth, and the savour of his grace over the face of the whole earth.

The subject of fasting, already slightly noticed in the preceding notes, should be farther considered.

In all countries, and under all religions, fasting has not only been considered a duty, but also of extraordinary virtue to procure blessings, and to avert evils. Hence it has often been practised with extraordinary rigour, and abused to the most superstitious purposes. There are twelve kinds of fasts among the Hindoos:

1. The person neither eats nor drinks for a day and night. This fast is indispensable, and occurs twenty-nine times in the year.

2. The person fasts during the day, and eats at night.

3. The person eats nothing but fruits, and drinks milk or water.

4. He eats once during the day and night.

5. Eats one particular kind of food during the day and night, but as often as he pleases.

6. Called Chanderaym, which is, to eat on the first day only one mouthful; two on the second; and thus continue increasing one mouthful every day for a month, and then decreasing a mouthful every day, till he leaves off where he began.

7. The person neither eats nor drinks for twelve days.

8. Lasts twelve days: the first three days he eats a little once in the day; the next three, he eats only once in the night; the next three, he eats nothing, unless it be brought to him; and during the last three days, he neither eats nor drinks.

9. Lasts fifteen days. For three days and three nights, he eats only one handful at night; the next three days and nights, he eats one handful, if it be brought him, if not, he takes nothing. Then he eats nothing for three days and three nights. The next three days and nights he takes only a handful of warm water each day. The next three days and nights he takes a handful of warm milk each day.

10. For three days and nights he neither eats nor drinks. He lights a fire, and sits at a door where there enters a hot wind, which he draws in with his breath.

11. Lasts fifteen days. Three days and three nights he eats nothing but leaves; three days and three nights, nothing but the Indian fig; three days and three nights, nothing but the seed of the lotus; three days and three nights, nothing but peepul leaves; three days and three nights, the expressed juice of a particular kind of grass called doobah.

12. Lasts a week. First day he eats milk; second, milkcurds: third, ghee, i. e. clarified butter; fourth, cow's urine; fifth, cow's dung; sixth, water; seventh, nothing.

During every kind of fast, the person sleeps on the ground, plays at no game, has no connection with women, neither shaves nor anoints himself, and bestows alms each day.—AYEEN AKBERY, vol. iii. p. 247—250. How much more simple and effectual is the way of salvation taught in the BIBLE! but because it is true, it is not credited by fallen man.

FASTING is considered by the Mohammedans as an essential part of piety. Their orthodox divines term it the gate of religion. With them, it is of two kinds, voluntary, and incumbent; and is distinguished by the Moslimàn doctors into three degrees: 1. The refraining from every kind of nourishment or carnal indulgence. 2. The restraining the various members from every thing which might excite sinful or corrupt desires. 3. The abstracting the mind wholly from worldly cares, and fixing it exclusively upon God. Their great annual fast is kept on the month Ramzan, or Ramadhan, beginning at the first new moon, and continuing until the appearance of the next; during which, it is required to abstain from every kind of nourishment from day-break till after sun-set of each day. From this observance none are excused but the sick, the aged, and children. This is properly the Mohammedan Lent. See HEDAYAH, prel. Dis. p. LV. LVI.

It is worthy of remark, that these children of the Bridegroom, the disciples, did not mourn, were exposed to no persecution while the Bridegroom, the Lord Jesus, was with them: but after he had been taken from them, by death and his ascension, they did fast and mourn; they were exposed to all manner of hardships, persecutions, and even death itself in some of its worst forms.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

Verse 1. Twelve disciples] Our Lord seems to have had the twelve Patriarchs, heads of the congregation of Israel, in view, in his choosing twelve disciples. That he had the plan of the ancient Jewish church in his eye, is sufficiently evident from chap. xix. 28. and from Luke x. i. xxii. 30. John xvii. 1. and Rev. xxi. 12—14.

He gave them power against unclean spirits] The word κατα, against, which our translators have supplied in Italic, is found in many MSS. of good note, and in the principal Versions. Here we find the first call to the Christian ministry, and the end proposed by the commission given. To call persons to the ministry, belongs only to Him who can give them power to cast out unclean spirits. He whose ministry is not accompanied with healing to diseased souls, was never called of God. But let it be observed, that though the spiritual gifts requisite for the ministry must be supplied by God himself; yet this does not preclude the importance of human learning. No man can have his mind too well cultivated, to whom a dispensation of the Gospel is committed. The influence of the Spirit of God was no more designed to render human learning useless; than that learning should be considered as superseding the necessity of divine inspiration.

Verse 2. Apostles] This is the first place where the word is used. Αποστολος, an apostle, comes from αποστελλω, I send a message. The word was anciently used to signify a person commissioned by a king to negociate any affair between him and any other power or people. Hence αποστολοι and κηρυκες, apostles and heralds, are of the same import in Herodotus.—See the Remarks at the end of chap. iii.

It is worthy of notice, that those who were Christ's apostles were first his disciples; to intimate, that men must be first taught of God, before they be sent of God. Jesus Christ never made an apostle of any man, who was not first his scholar, or disciple. These twelve apostles were chosen, 1. That they might be with our Lord to see and witness his miracles, and hear his doctrine. 2. That they might bear testimony of the former, and preach his truth to mankind.

The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; &c.] We are not to suppose that the word πρωτος, first, refers to any kind of dignity, as some have imagined; it merely signifies the first in order—the person first mentioned. A pious man remarks: "God here unites by grace those who were before united by nature." Though nature cannot be deemed a step towards grace, yet it is not to be considered as always a hinderance to it. Happy the brothers who are joint envoys of heaven, and the parents who have two or more children employed as ambassadors for God!

Verse 3. Bartholomew] Many are of opinion that this was Nathanael, mentioned John i. 46. whose name was probably Nathanael Bar Talmai, Nathanael, the son of Talmai: here, his own name is repressed, and he is called Bar Talmai, or Bartholomew, from his father.

Matthew the publican] The writer of this history. See the Preface.

James the son of Alpheus] This person was also called Cleopas, or Clopas, Luke xxiv. 18. John xix. 25. He had married Mary, sister to the blessed Virgin, John xix. 25.

Verse 4. Simon] He was third son of Alpheus, and brother of James and Jude, or Judas, Matt. xiii. 55.

The Canaanite] This word is not put here to signify a particular people, as it is elsewhere used in the Sacred Writings; but it is formed from the Hebrew קנא kana, which signifies zealous, literally translated by Luke, chap. vi. 15. ζηλωτης, zelotes, or the zealous, probably from his great fervency in preaching the Gospel of his Master. But see Luke vi. 15.

Judas Iscariot] Probably from the Hebrew איש קריות ish kerioth, a man of Kerioth, which was a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 25. where it is likely this man was born.

As אשכרא iscara, signifies the quinsy, or strangulation, and Judas hanged himself after he had betrayed our Lord, Dr. Lightfoot seems inclined to believe that he had his name from this circumstance, and that it was not given him till after his death.

Who also betrayed him] Rather, even he who betrayed him, or, delivered him up; for so, I think, ο και παραδους αυτον, should be translated. The common translation, who ALSO betrayed him, is very exceptionable, as it seems to imply, he was betrayed by some others as well as by Judas.

Verse 5. These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded] To be properly qualified for a minister of Christ, a man must be, 1. filled with the Spirit of holiness; 2. called to this particular work; 3. instructed in its nature, &c. and 4. commissioned to go forth, and testify the Gospel of the grace of God. These are four different gifts which a man must receive from God by Christ Jesus. To these let him add all the human qualifications he can possibly attain; as in his arduous work he will require every gift and every grace.

Go not into the way of the Gentiles] Our Lord only intended that the first offers of salvation should be made to the Jewish people; and that the heathen should not be noticed in this first mission, that no stumbling-block might be cast in the way of the Jews.

Into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not] The Samaritans had afterwards the Gospel preached to them by Christ himself, John iv. 4, &c. for the reason assigned above. Such as God seems at first to pass by, are often those for whom he has designed his greatest benefits, (witness the Samaritans, and the Gentiles in general) but he has his own proper time to discover and reveal them.

The history of the Samaritans is sufficiently known from the Old Testament. Properly speaking, the inhabitants of the city of Samaria should be termed Samaritans; but this epithet belongs chiefly to the people sent into that part of the promised land by Salmanezer, King of Assyria, in the year of the world 3283, when he carried the Israelites that dwelt there captives beyond the Euphrates, and sent a mixed people, principally Cuthites, to dwell in their place. These were altogether heathens at first; but they afterwards incorporated the worship of the true God with that of their idols. See the whole account, 2 Kings xvii. 5, &c. From this time they feared Jehovah, and served other gods till after the Babylonish captivity. From Alexander the Great, Sanballat, their governor, obtained permission to build a temple upon Mount Gerizim, which the Jews conceiving to be in opposition to their temple at Jerusalem, hated them with a perfect hatred, and would have no fellowship with them. The Samaritans acknowledge the divine authority of the Law of Moses, and carefully preserve it in their own characters, which are probably the genuine ancient Hebrew; the character which is now called Hebrew being that of the Chaldeans. The Samaritan Pentateuch is printed in the London Polygott; and is an undeniable record. A poor remnant of this people is found still at Naplouse, the ancient Shechem: but they exist in a state of very great poverty and distress; and probably will soon become extinct.

Verse 6. But go rather to the lost sheep, &c.] The Jewish Church was the ancient fold of God; but the sheep had wandered from their Shepherd, and were lost. Our blessed Lord sends these under-shepherds to seek, find, and bring them back to the Shepherd and Overseer of their souls.

Verse 7. And as ye go, preach] πορευομενοι δε κηρυσσετε, and as you proceed, proclaim like heralds—make this proclamation wherever ye go, and while ye are journeying. Preach and travel; and as ye travel, preach—proclaim salvation to all you meet. Wherever the ministers of Christ go, they find lost ruined souls; and wherever they find them, they should proclaim Jesus, and his power to save. For an explanation of the word proclaim, or preach, see on chap. iii. 1.

From this commission we learn what the grand subject of apostolic preaching was—THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN IS AT HAND! This was the great message. "They preached," says Quesnel, to establish the faith: the kingdom, to animate the hope; of heaven, to inspire the love of heavenly things, and the contempt of earthly; which is at hand, that men may prepare for it without delay."

Verse 8. Raise the dead] This is wanting in the MSS. marked EKLMS of Griesbach, and in those marked BHV of Mathaï, and in upwards of one hundred others. It is also wanting in the Syriac, (Vienna edition) latter Persic, Sahidic, Armenian, Slavonic, and in one copy of the Itala; also in Athanasius, Basil, and Chrysostom. There is no evidence that the disciples raised any dead person previously to the resurrection of Christ. The words should certainly be omitted, unless we could suppose that the authority now given respected not only their present mission, but comprehended also their future conduct. But that our blessed Lord did not give this power to his disciples at this time, is, I think, pretty evident from verse 1. and from Luke ix. 6, 10. x. 19, 20. where, if any such power had been given, or exercised, it would doubtless have been mentioned. Wetstein has rejected it, and so did Griesbach in his first edition; but in the second (1796) he has left it in the text, with a note of doubtfulness.

Freely ye have received, freely give.] A rule very necessary, and of great extent. A minister, or labourer in the Gospel vineyard, though worthy of his comfortable support while in the work, should never preach for hire, or make a secular traffic of a spiritual work. What a scandal is it for a man to traffic with gifts, which he pretends at least to have received from the Holy Ghost, of which he is not the master, but the dispenser. He who preaches to get a living, or to make a fortune, is guilty of the most infamous sacrilege.

Verse 9. Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass, in your purses] Εις τας ζωνας υμων, in your GIRDLES. It is supposed that the people of the East carry their money in a fold of their girdles. This is scarcely correct: they carry it in a purse in their bosom, under their girdles. This I have often observed.

In a thousand instances an apostolic preacher, who goes to the wilderness to seek the lost sheep, will be exposed to hunger and cold, and other inconveniences—he must therefore resign himself to God, depending on his providence for the necessaries of life. If God have sent him, he is bound to support him, and will do it: anxiety therefore, in him, is a double crime, as it insinuates a bad opinion of the master who has employed him. Every missionary should make himself master of this subject.

Have no money in your purse, is a command, obedience to which was secured by the narrow circumstances of most of the primitive, genuine preachers of the gospel. Whole herds of friars mendicants have professed the same principle, and abandoned themselves to voluntary poverty; but if the money be in the heart it is a worse evil. In the former case it may be a temptation to sin; in the latter it must be ruinous.

Verse 10. Nor scrip for your journey] To carry provisions. This was called תורמיל tormil, by the Rabbins; it was a leathern pouch hung about their necks, in which they put their victuals. This was, properly, the shepherd's bag.

Neither two coats, &c.] Nothing to encumber you.

This reading is of great importance, as it reconciles this place with Luke ix. 3. and removes the seeming contradiction from Mark vi. 8. as if he had said, "Ye shall take nothing to defend yourselves with, because ye are the servants of the Lord, and are to be supported by his bounty, and defended by his power. In a word, be like men in haste, and eager to begin the important work of the ministry. The sheep are lost, ruined:—Satan is devouring them:—give all diligence to pluck them out of the jaws of the destroyer."

The workman is worthy of his meat.] της τροφης αυτου, of his maintenance. How contrary to Christ is it for a man to have vast revenues as a minister of the gospel, who ministers no gospel, and who spends the revenues of the church to its disgrace and ruin?

Verse 11. Into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter] In the commencement of Christianity, Christ and his preachers were all Itinerant.

Enquire who in it is worthy] That is, of a good character; for a preacher of the gospel should be careful of his reputation, and lodge only with those who are of a regular life.

There abide till ye go thence.] Go not about from house to house, Luke x. 7. Acting contrary to this precept has often brought great disgrace on the gospel of God. Stay in your own lodging as much as possible, that you may have time for prayer and study. Seldom frequent the tables of the rich and great; if you do, it will unavoidably prove a snare to you. The unction of God will perish from your mind, and your preaching be only a dry barren repetition of old things; the bread of God in your hands will be like the dry, mouldy, Gibeonitish crusts, mentioned Josh. ix. 5. He who knows the value of time, and will redeem it from useless chit-chat, and trifling visits, will find enough for all the purposes of his own salvation, the cultivation of his mind, and the work of the ministry. He, to whom time is not precious, and who lives not by rule, never finds time sufficient for any thing;—is always embarrassed—always in a hurry, and never capable of bringing one good purpose to proper effect

Verse 12. Salute it] Λεγοντες, ειρηνη εν τω οικω τουτω, saying, "Peace be to this house." This clause, which, as explanatory of the word ασπασασθε, is necessary to the connexion in which it now stands, is added, by the MSS. D and L. and forty-three others, the Armenian, Ethiopic, Slavonic, Saxon, Vulgate, all the copies of the old Itala, Theophylact and Hilary. The clause is also found in several modern versions. The modern Greek, has λεγοντες· ειρηνη εις το σκηπτι τουτο. The Italian, by Matthew, of Erberg, and of Diodati, renders it thus: Pace sia a questa casa. Peace be to this house.

It is found also in Wickliff, and in my old MS. Sepinge, pees be to this hous. Some suppose it is an addition taken from Luke, but there is nearly as much reason to believe he took it from Matthew.

Peace, שלום, among the Hebrews, had a very extensive meaning:—it comprehended all blessings, spiritual and temporal. Hence that saying of the Rabbins, גדול שלום שכל הברכות כלולות בו Gadal shalom, shecol haberacoth culoloth bo. Great is PEACE, for all other blessings are comprehended in it. To wish peace to a family, in the name and by the authority of Christ, was in effect a positive promise on the Lord's side, of all the good implied in the wish. This was paying largely even beforehand. Whoever receives the messengers of God into his house, confers the highest honour upon himself, and not upon the Preacher, whose honour is from God, and who comes with the blessings of life eternal to that man and his family who receives him.

Verse 13. If that house be worthy] If that family be proper for a preacher to lodge in, and the master be ready to embrace the message of salvation.

Your peace] The blessings you have prayed for, shall come upon the family: God will prosper them in their bodies, souls and substance.

But if it be not worthy] As above explained.

Let your peace] The blessings prayed for, return to you. προς υμας επιστραφητω, it shall turn back upon yourselves. They shall get nothing, and you shall have an increase.

The trials, disappointments, insults, and wants of the followers of Christ become in the hand of the all-wise God subservient to their best interests: hence, nothing can happen to them without their deriving profit from it, unless it be their own fault.

which was represented by the prophets as a polluted land, Amos vii. 7. when compared with the land of Israel, which was considered as a holy land, Ezek. xlv. 1. therefore to shake the dust of any city of Israel from off one's clothes or feet, was an emblematical action, signifying a renunciation of all farther connexion with them, and placing them on a level with the cities of the Heathen. See Amos ix. 7.

Verse 15. In the day of judgment] Or, punishment,—κρισεως. Perhaps not meaning the day of general judgment, nor the day of the destruction of the Jewish state by the Romans; but a day in which God should send punishment on that particular city, or on that person, for their crimes. So the day of judgment of Sodom and Gomorrah, was the time in which the Lord destroyed them by fire and brimstone, from the Lord out of heaven.

If men are thus treated for not receiving the preachers of the gospel, what will it be to despise the gospel itself—to decry it—to preach the contrary—to hinder the preaching of it—to abuse those who do preach it in its purity—or to render it fruitless by calumnies and lies? Their punishment, our Lord intimates, shall be greater than that inflicted on the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah!

Verse 16. Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves] He who is called to preach the gospel, is called to embrace a state of constant labour, and frequent suffering. He who gets ease and pleasure in consequence of embracing the ministerial office, neither preaches the gospel, nor is sent of God. If he did the work of an Evangelist, wicked men and dæmons would both oppose him.

Wise (φρονιμοι prudent) as serpents, and harmless as doves.] This is a proverbial saying: so in Shir hashirim Rabba, fol. 16. "The holy blessed God said to the Israelites, Ye shall be towards me, as upright as the doves; but towards the Gentiles, as cunning as serpents."

There is a beauty in this saying which is seldom observed. The serpent is represented as prudent to excess, being full of cunning; Gen. iii. 1. 2 Cor. xi. 3. and the dove is simple, even to stupidity; Hos. vii. 11. but Jesus Christ corrects here the cunning of the serpent, by the simplicity of the dove; and the too great simplicity of the dove, by the cunning of the serpent. For a fine illustration of this Text, see the account of the Boiga:

"This species is remarkably beautiful, combining the richest colours of the finest gems, with the splendour of burnished gold, mingled with dark brown shades, which contrast and heighten its brilliant ornaments. The whole under surface of the head and body is of a silver white, separated from the changing blue of the back by a golden chain on each side, the whole length of the body. This fine blue and silver, ornamented with gold, by no means give a full idea of the beautiful embroidery of the Boiga. We must take in all the reflected tints of silver colour, golden yellow, red, blue, green, and black mingled, and changing in the most extraordinary and beautiful manner possible; so that, when about to change its skin, it seems studded with a mixt assemblage of diamonds, emeralds, topazes, saphirs, and rubies, under a thin transparent veil of bluish chrystal. Thus, in the rich and torrid plains of India, where the most splendid gems abound, Nature seems to have chosen to re-unite them all, together with the noble metals, to adorn the brilliant robe of the Boiga. This is one of the most slender of serpents in proportion to its length. The specimens in the royal collection, which exceed three feet in length, are hardly a few lines in diameter. The tail is almost as long as the body, and at the end is like a needle for fineness; yet it is sometimes flattened above, below, and on the two sides, rendering it in some measure square. From the delicacy of its form, its movements are necessarily extremely agile; so that, doubling itself up several times, it can spring to a considerable distance, with great swiftness. It can twine and twist itself, most readily, and nimbly, around trees or other such bodies; climbing, or descending, or suspending itself, with the utmost facility. The Boiga feeds on small birds, which it swallows very easily, notwithstanding the small diameter of its body, in consequence of the great distensibility of its jaws, throat and stomach, common to it with other serpents. It conceals itself under the foliage of trees, on purpose to surprise the small birds; and is said to attract them by a peculiar kind of whistling, to which the term of song has been applied: but we must consider this as an exaggeration; as its long divided tongue, and the conformation of its other organs of sound, are only adapted for producing a hiss, or species of simple whistle, instead of forming a melodious assemblage of tones. Yet, if Nature has not reckoned the Boiga among the songsters of the woods, it seems to possess a more perfect instinct than other serpents, joined to more agile movements, and more magnificent ornament. In the isle of Borneo, the children play with the Boiga, without the smallest dread. They carry it in their hands, as innocent as themselves, and twist it about their necks, arms, and bodies, in a thousand directions. This circumstance brings to recollection, that fine emblem of Candour and Confidence, imagined by the genius of the ancients: A child smiling on a snake, which holds him fast, in his convolutions. But in that beautiful allegory, the snake is supposed to conceal a deadly poison; while the Boiga returns caress for caress, to the Indian children who fondle it, and seems pleased to be twisted about their delicate hands. As the appearance of such nimble and innocent animals in the forests must be extremely beautiful, displaying their splendid colours, and gliding swiftly from branch to branch, without possessing the smallest noxious quality; we might regret that this species should require a degree of heat greatly superior to that of our regions, and that it can only subsist near the Tropics in Asia, Africa, and America. It has usually a hundred and sixty-six large plates, and a hundred and twenty-eight pairs of small plates, but is subject to considerable variation.

"According to this representation, the Boiga is not merely to be praised for its beauty, but may be said to fulfil the old maxim of combining the wisdom of the serpent with the harmlessness of the dove." Cepede's Hist. of oviparous Quadrupeds and Serpents.

Verse 17. But beware of men:] Or, be on your guard against men, των ανθρωπων THESE men; i. e. your countrymen; those from whom you might have reasonably expected comfort and support; and especially those in power, who will abuse that power to oppress you.

Councils] Συνεδρια, sanhedrins, and synagogues. See on chap. v. 22. "By synagogues we may understand here, not the places of public worship, but assemblies where three magistrates, chosen out of the principal members of the synagogue, presided to adjust differences among the people: these had power, in certain cases, to condemn to the scourge, but not to death. See Acts xxii. 19. 2 Cor. xi. 24. compared with Luke xii. 11." See Lightfoot.

Verse 18. Ye shall be brought before governors, &c.] "This affords a striking proof of the prescience of Christ. Who could have thought, at that time, that these despised and illiterate men could excite so much attention, and be called upon to apologize for the profession of their faith, before the tribunals of the most illustrious personages of the earth?"—Wakefield.

By governors and kings we may understand, the Roman proconsuls, governors of provinces, and the kings who were tributary to the Roman government, and the emperors themselves, before whom many of the primitive Christians were brought.

For a testimony against them and the Gentiles.] That is, to render testimony, both to Jews and Gentiles, of the truth and power of my Gospel.

Verse 19. Take no thought how or what ye shall speak] Μη μεριμνησητε—Be not anxiously careful, because such anxiety argues distrust in God, and infallibly produces a confused mind. In such a state, no person is fit to proclaim or vindicate the truth. This promise, It shall be given you, &c. banishes all distrust and inquietude on dangerous occasions; but without encouraging sloth and negligence, and without dispensing with the obligation we are under to prepare ourselves by the meditation of sacred truths, by the study of the Holy Scriptures, and by prayer.

It shall be given you in that same hour what] This clause is wanting in the MSS. D and L, and several others, some Versions, and several of the Fathers; but it is found in Mark xiii. 11. without any various reading; and in substance in Luke xi. 13.

Verse 20. For it is—the Spirit of your Father, &c.] This was an extraordinary promise, and was literally fulfilled to those first preachers of the Gospel: and to them it was essentially necessary; because the New Testament dispensation was to be fully opened by their extraordinary inspiration. In a certain measure, it may be truly said, that the Holy Spirit animates the true disciples of Christ, and enables them to speak. The head speaks in his members, by his Spirit: and it is the province of the Spirit of God to speak for God.—Neither surprise, defect of talents, nor even ignorance itself, could hurt the cause of God, in the primitive times, when the hearts and minds of those divine men were influenced by the Holy Spirit.

Your Father] This is added to excite and increase their confidence in God.

Verse 21. And the brother shall deliver up the brother, &c.] What an astonishing enmity is there in the soul of man against God and goodness! That men should think they did God service, in putting to death those who differ from them in their political or religious creed, is a thing that cannot be accounted for, but on the principle of an indiscribable depravity.

PAR. LOST, b. ii. l. 496.

Verse 22. Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake] Because ye are attached to me, and saved from the corruption that is in the world: therefore the world will hate you. "The laws of Christ condemn a vicious world, and gall it to revenge."

He that endureth to the end, shall be saved.] He who holds fast faith and a good conscience to the end, till the punishment threatened against this wicked people be poured out, he shall be saved, preserved from the destruction that shall fall upon the workers of iniquity. This verse is commonly understood to refer to the destruction of Jerusalem. It is also true that they who do not hold fast faith and a good conscience till death, have no room to hope for an admission into the kingdom of God.

Verse 23. But when they persecute you] It is prudence and humility (when charity or righteousness obliges us not to the contrary) to avoid persecution. To deprive those who are disposed to do evil, of the opportunities of doing it; to convey the grace which they despise to others; to accomplish God's designs of justice on the former, and of mercy on the latter, are consequences of the flight of a persecuted preacher. This flight is a precept to those who are highly necessary to the church of Christ, and advice to those who might imprudently draw upon themselves persecution, and of indulgence for those who are weak. But this flight is highly criminal in those mercenary preachers, who, through love to their flesh and their property, abandon the flock of Christ to the wolf. See Quesnel.

In this city, flee ye into another] There is a remarkable repetition of this clause found in the MSS. DL. and eight others; the Armenian, Saxon, all the Itala except three; Athan. Theodor. Tertul. August. Ambr. Hilar. and Juvencus. Bengel, in his gnomon, approves of this reading. On the above authorities, Griesbach has inserted it in the text. It probably made a portion of this gospel as written by Matthew.

Ye shall not have gone over (ended or finished, margin) the cities, &c.] Whe word τελεσητε here is generally understood as implying to go over or through, intimating that there should not be time for the disciples to travel over the cities of Judea before the destruction predicted by Christ should take place. But this is very far from being the truth, as there were not less than 40 years after this was spoken, before Jerusalem was destroyed, τελειων και μανθανοντων are used by the Septuagint, 1 Chr. xxv. 8. for those who teach and those who learn. And τοις τελειοις is used by the Apostle 1 Cor. ii. 6. for those who are perfectly instructed in the things of God. Ovid has used the Latin perficio, which answers to the Greek τελειοω in exactly the same sense Phillyrides puerum citharâ perfecit Achillem.

"Chiron TAUGHT the young Achilles to play on the harp." For these reasons some contend that the passage should be translated, ye shall not have INSTRUCTED, i e. preached the gospel in the cities of Israel, till the Son of Man be come. The Greek divines call baptism τελειωτις or initiation. See Leigh. Crit. sacr. Edit. Amst. p. 326, 328.

Dr. Lightfoot supposes the meaning to be, "ye shall not have travelled over the cities of Israel preaching the gospel before the Son of Man is revealed by his resurrection, Rom. i. 4. compare Act. iii. 19, 20. and v. 26. To you first God raising up his son, sent him to bless you, &c. The Epoch of the Messiah is dated from the resurrection of Christ." After all, the place may be understood literally; for τελειν τας πολεις, to finish the cities, is only a concise mode of speech for τελειν οδον διὰ τας πολεις, to complete the journey through the cities. To finish the survey, to preach in every one:—till the Son of Man be come, may refer either to the out-pouring of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, or to the subversion of the Jewish state. See Rosenmuller.

Verse 24. The disciple is not above his master] Or in plainer terms, A scholar is not above his teacher. The saying itself requires no comment, its truth and reasonableness are self-evident, but the spirit and design of it should be carefully attended to. Jesus is the great teacher, we profess to be his scholars. He who keeps the above saying in his heart, will never complain of what he suffers. How many irregular thoughts and affections is this maxim capable of restraining! A man is not a scholar of Christ unless he learn his doctrine; and he does not learn it as he ought, unless he put it in practice.

Verse 25. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master] Can any man who pretends to be a scholar or disciple of Jesus Christ, expect to be treated well by the world? Will not the world love its own, and them only? Why then so much impatience under sufferings, such an excessive sense of injuries, such delicacy; can you expect any thing from the world better than you receive? If you want the honour that comes from it, abandon Jesus Christ, and it will again receive you into its bosom. But you will, no doubt, count the cost before you do this. Take the converse, abandon the love of the world, &c. and God will receive you.

Beelzebub] This name is variously written in the MSS. Beelzeboul, Beelzeboun, and Beelzebud, but there is a vast majority in favour of the reading Beelzebul, which should, by all means, be inserted in the text instead of Beelzebub. See the reasons below, and see the Margin.

It is supposed that this idol was the same with בעל זבוב Baal zebub the God fly, worshipped at Ekron, 2 Kings i. 2, &c. who had his name changed afterwards by the Jews to בעל זבול Baal zebul the dung God, a title expressive of the utmost contempt. It seems probable that the worship of this vile idol continued even to the time of our Lord; and the title, being applied by the Jews to our blessed Lord, affords the strongest proof of the inveteracy of their malice.

Dr. Lightfoot has some useful observations on this subject, which I shall take the liberty to subjoin.

"For the searching out the sense of this horrid blasphemy, these things are worthy observing.

"I. Among the Jews it was held, in a manner, for a matter of religion, to reproach idols, and to give them odious names. R. Akibah saith idolatry pollutes, as it is said, Thou shalt cast away the (idol) as something that is abominable, and thou shalt say to it, Get thee hence. (Esai xxx. 22.) R. Lazar saith, thou shalt say to it, Get thee hence; that which they call the face of God, let them call the face of a dog. That which they call עין כוס ein cos, the FOUNTAIN OF A CUP, let them call עין קוץ ein kuts, the FOUNTAIN OF TOIL (or of flails.) That which they call גדייה gediyah FORTUNE, let them call גלייא geliya a STINK, &c. That town which sometimes was called Bethel, was afterwards called Bethaven. See also the Tract Schabbath.

"II. Among the ignominious names bestowed upon idols, the general and common one was זבול Zebul, DUNG, or a DUNGHILL. "Even to them that have stretched out their hands בזבול bezebul, in a dunghill (that is, in an idol temple, or in idolatry) there is hope. Thou canst not bring them (into the church) because they have stretched forth their hands, bezebul, in a dunghill. But yet you cannot reject them, because they have repented." And a little after, He that sees them dunging, בזבלין, (that is, sacrificing) to an idol, let him say, cursed be he that sacrifices to a strange God. Let them therefore, who dare, form this word in Matthew into Beelzebub. I am so far from doubting that the Pharisees pronounced the word BEELZEBUL, and that Matthew so wrote it, that I doubt not but the sense fails, if it be writ otherwise.

"III. Very many names of evil spirits, or devils, occur in the Talmud, which it is needless here to mention. Among all the devils, they esteemed that devil the worst, the foulest, as it were, the prince of the rest, who ruled over the idols, and by whom oracles and miracles were given forth among the Heathens and Idolaters. And they were of this opinion, for this reason, because they held idolatry above all other things, chiefly wicked and abominable, and to be the prince and head of evil. This Dæmon they called בעל זבול Baal-zebul, not so much by a proper name, as by one more general and common; as much as to say, the Lord of idolatry: the worst devil, and the worst thing: and they called him the prince of devils, because idolatry is the prince (or chief) of wickedness."

persecuted followers of Christ. Fear them not, for they can make you suffer nothing worse than they have made Christ suffer, and under all trials he has promised the most ample support.

For there is nothing covered, &c.] God sees every thing: this is consolation to the upright, and dismay to the wicked, and he will bring into judgment every work, and every secret thing whether good or bad. Eccl. xii. 14.

Verse 27. What I tell you in darkness] A man ought to preach that only, which he has learned from God's spirit, and his testimonies; but let him not pretend to bring forth any thing new or mysterious. There is nothing that concerns our salvation that is newer than the new covenant; and in that there is, properly speaking, no mysteries: what was secret before, is now made manifest in the Gospel of the everblessed God. See Ephes. iii. 1—12.

What ye hear in the ear] The doctor who explained the law in Hebrew, had an interpreter always by him, in whose ears he softly whispered what he said; this interpreter spoke aloud what had been thus whispered to him. Lightfoot has clearly proved this in his Horæ Talmudicæ, and to this custom our Lord here evidently alludes. The spirit of our Lord's direction appears to be this: whatever I speak to you is for the benefit of mankind,—keep nothing from them, declare explicitly the whole counsel of God, preach ye (κηρυξατε, proclaim) on the house-tops. The houses in Judea were flat-roofed, with a ballustrade round about, which were used for the purpose of taking the air, prayer, meditation, and it seems, from this place, for announcing things in the most public manner. As there are no bells among the Turks, a crier proclaims all times of public worship from the house-tops. Whoever will give himself the trouble to consult the following scriptures will find a variety of uses to which these house-tops were assigned. Deut. xxii. 8. Josh. ii. 6. Jud. ix. 51. Neh. viii. 16. 2 Sam. xi. 2. 2 Kings xxiii. 12. Isa. xv. 3. Jer. xxxii. 29. and Acts x. 9.

Lightfoot thinks that this may be an allusion to that custom, when the minister of the Synagogue, on the sabbath eve, sounded with a trumpet six times, upon the roof of a very high house, that from thence all might have notice of the coming in of the sabbath. The first blast signified they should leave off their work in the field; the second that they should cease from their's in the city; the third that they should light the sabbath candle, &c.

Verse 28. Fear not them which kill the body] Των αποκτεινοντων. Those who slay with acts of cruelty, alluding probably to the cruelties which persecutors should exercise on his followers in their martyrdom.—But are not able to kill the soul. Hence we find that the body and the soul are distinct principles, for the body may be slain and the soul escape; and secondly, that the soul is immaterial, for the murderers of the body are not able μη δυναμενων, have it not in their power to injure it.

Fear him] It is not Hell-fire we are to fear, but it is God; without the stroke of whose justice, Hell itself would be no punishment; and whose frown would render Heaven itself insupportable. What strange blindness is it to expose our souls to endless ruin, which should enjoy God eternally; and to save and pamper the body, by which we enjoy nothing but the creatures, and them only for a moment!

Verse 29. Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?] Ασσαριου. A Roman As was one tenth of a DENARIUS, which was about sevenpence half-penny, and one tenth of sevenpence-halfpenny makes just three farthings.

The word ἀσσαριον, which we translate farthing, is found among the Rabbins in the word עיסר aisar, which, according to Maimonides, is equal to four grains of silver; but is used among them to express a thing of the lowest, or almost no value. Our Lord seems to have borrowed the expression, one of them shall not fall on the ground, &c. from his own countrymen. In Bereshith Rabba, sect. 79. fol. 77. it is said, In the time in which the Jews were compelled to apostatize, Rab. Simeon, Ben. Jochai, and Eliezer his son, hid themselves in a cave, and lived upon dry husks. After thirteen years they came out, and sitting at the mouth of the cave, they observed a fowler stretching his nets to catch birds; and as often as the Bath Kol said דימוס dimos, escape! the bird escaped: but when it said ספקולא spicula, a dart, the bird was taken. Then the Rabbin said, Even a bird is not taken without Heaven, i. e. without the will of God, how much less the life of man! The doctrine intended to be inculcated, is this: The providence of God extends to the minutest things; every thing is continually under the government and care of God, and nothing occurs without his will or permission: if then he regards sparrows, how much more man, and how much more still the soul that trusts in him.

Fall on the ground] Instead of επι την γην, Origen, Clement, Chrysostom, Juvencus, and six MSS. of Mathai, read εις την παγιδα, into a snare. Bengel conjectures that it might have been written at first, επι την παγην; that the first syllable πα being lost out of the word, γην the earth, instead of παγην snare, became the common reading.

Without your Father.] Without the will of your Father: της βουλης, the will or counsel is added here by Origen, Coptic, all the Arabic, latter Persic, Gothic, all the Itala, except two; Tert. Iren. Cypr. Novatian, and other Latin fathers. If the evidence be considered as insufficient to entitle it to admission into the text, let it stand there as a supplementary Italic word, necessary to make the meaning of the place evident.

All things are ordered by the counsel of God. This is a great consolation to those who are tried and afflicted. The belief of an all-wise, all-directing Providence, is a powerful support under the most grievous accidents of life. Nothing escapes his merciful regards, not even the smallest things, of which he may be said to be only the creator and preserver; how much less those of whom he is the father, saviour, and endless felicity? See on Luke xii. 7.

Verse 30. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered.] Nothing is more astonishing than the care and concern of God for his followers. The least circumstances of their life are regulated, not merely by that general providence which extends to all things; but by a particular providence, which fits and directs all things to the design of their salvation, causing them all to co-operate for their present and eternal good. Rom. v.

Verse 31. Fear ye not—ye are of more value] None can estimate the value of a soul, for which Christ has given his blood and life! Have confidence in his goodness, for he who so dearly purchased thee, will miraculously preserve and save thee. Did the poet intend to contradict Christ when he said,

"He sees with equal eyes, as God of all,
"A HERO perish, or a SPARROW fall?"

How cold and meagre is this shallow deistical saying! That is, a sparrow is of as much worth in the sight of God, who regards (if we may believe the poet) things only in general, as an immortal soul, purchased by the sacrifice of Christ!

Verse 32. Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men] That is, whosoever shall acknowledge me to be the Messiah, and have his heart and life regulated by my spirit and doctrine. It is not merely sufficient to have the heart right before God, there must be a firm, manly, and public profession of Christ before men. "I am no hypocrite," says one; neither should you. "I will keep my religion to myself," i. e. you will not confess Christ before men; then he will renounce you before God.

We confess or own Christ when we own his doctrine, his ministers, his servants, and when no fear hinders us from supporting and assisting them in times of necessity.

Verse 33. Whosoever shall deny me] Whosoever prefers his worldly interest to his duty to God, sets a greater value on earthly than on heavenly things; and prefers the friendship of men to the approbation of GOD.

Let it be remembered, that to be renounced by Christ, is to have him neither for a mediator nor Saviour. To appear before the tribunal of God without having Christ for our advocate, and, on the contrary, to have him there as our judge, and a witness against us,—how can a man think of this and not die with horror!

Verse 34. Think not that I am come to send peace, &c.] The meaning of this difficult passage will be plain, when we consider the import of the word peace, and the expectation of the Jews. I have already had occasion to remark (ver. 12.) that the word שלום shalom, rendered by the Greeks ειρηνη, was used among the Hebrews to express all possible blessings temporal and spiritual; but especially the former. The expectation of the Jews was, that when the Messiah should come, all temporal prosperity should be accumulated on the land of Judea; therefore την γην, in this verse, should not be translated the earth, but this land. The import of our Lord's teaching here, is this, Do not imagine, as the Jews in general vainly do, that I am come to send forth (βαλλειν) by forcing out the Roman power, that temporal prosperity which they long for; I am not come for this purpose, but to send forth (βαλλειν) the Roman sword, to cut off a disobedient and rebellious nation, the cup of whose iniquity is already full, and whose crimes cry aloud for speedy vengeance. See also on Luke xii. 49. From the time they rejected the Messiah, they were a prey to the most cruel and destructive factions; they employed their time in butchering one another, till the Roman sword was unsheathed against them, and desolated the land.

Verse 35. I am come to set a man at variance] The spirit of Christ can have no union with the spirit of the world. Even a father, while unconverted, will oppose a godly child. Thus the spirit that is in those who sin against God, is opposed to that spirit which is in the followers of the Most High. It is the spirits then that are in opposition, and not the persons.

Verse 36. A man's foes shall be they of his own household.] Our Lord refers here to their own traditions. So Sota, fol. 49. "A little before the coming of the Messiah, the son shall insult the father, the daughter rebel against her mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; and each man shall have his own household for his enemies." Again, in Sanhedrin, fol. 97. it is said, "In the age in which the Messiah shall come, the young men shall turn the elders into ridicule; the elders shall rise up against the youth, the daughter against her mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; and the men of that age shall be excessively impudent; nor shall the son reverence his father." These are most remarkable sayings, and by them our Lord shews them that he was the Messiah, for all these things literally took place shortly after their final rejection of Christ. See the terrible account, given by Josephus, relative to the desolations of those times. Through the just judgment of God, they who rejected the Lord that bought them, became abandoned to every species of iniquity; they rejected the salvation of God, and fell into the condemnation of the devil.

Father Quesnel's note on this place is worthy of deep attention. "The father (says he) is the enemy of his son when, through a bad education, an irregular love, and a cruel indulgence, he leaves him to take a wrong bias, instructs him not in his duty, and fills his mind with ambitious views. The son is the father's enemy when he is the occasion of his doing injustice, in order to heap up an estate for him, and to make his fortune. The mother is the daughter's enemy when she instructs her to please the world, breeds her up in excess and vanity, and suffers any thing scandalous or unseemly in her dress. The daughter is the mother's enemy when she becomes her idol, when she engages her to comply with her own irregular inclinations, and to permit her to frequent balls and plays. The master is the enemy of his servant, and the servant that of his master, when the one takes no care of the other's salvation, and the latter is subservient to his master's passions."

Verse 37. He that loveth father or mother more than me] He whom we love the most, is he whom we study most to please, and whose will and interests we prefer in all cases. If, in order to please a father or mother who are opposed to vital godliness, we abandon God's ordinances and followers, we are unworthy of any thing but Hell.

Verse 38. He that taketh not his cross] i. e. He who is not ready, after my example, to suffer death in the cause of my religion, is not worthy of me, does not deserve to be called my disciple.

This alludes to the custom of causing the criminal to bear his own cross to the place of execution, so Plutarch, Εκαστος των κακουργων εκφερει τον αυτου σταυρον. Each of the malefactors carries on, his own cross. See John xix. 17.

Verse 39. He that findeth his life, &c.] i. e. He, who for the sake of his temporal interest, abandons his spiritual concerns, shall lose his soul; and he who, in order to avoid martyrdom, abjures the pure religion of Christ, shall lose his soul, and perhaps his life too. He that findeth his life shall lose it, was literally fulfilled in Archbishop Cranmer. He confessed Christ against the devil, and his eldest son, the Pope. He was ordered to be burnt; to save his life he recanted, and was, notwithstanding, burnt. Whatever a man sacrifices to God is never lost, for he finds it again in God.

There is a fine piece on this subject in Juvenal, Sat. viii. l. 80. which deserves to be recorded here.

Verse 40. He that receiveth you] Treats you kindly, receiveth me; I will consider the kindness as shewn to myself, for he who receiveth me as the true Messiah, receiveth that God by whose counsels and through whose love I am come.

Verse 41. He that receiveth a prophet] Προφητην, a teacher not a foreteller of future events, for this is not always the meaning of the word; but one commissioned by God to teach the doctrines of eternal life. It is no small honour to receive into one's house a minister of Jesus Christ. Every person is not admitted to exercise the sacred ministry; but none are excluded from partaking of its grace, its spirit, and its reward. If the teacher should be weak, or even if he should be found afterwards to have been worthless; yet the person who has received him in the name, under the sacred character of an evangelist, shall not lose his reward; because what he did, he did for the sake of Christ, and through love for his church. Many sayings of this kind are found among the Rabbins, and this one is common; "He who receives a learned man, or an elder, into his house, is the same as if he had received the Shecinah;" and again, "He who speaks against a faithful pastor, it is the same as if he had spoken against God himself." See Schoetgen.

Verse 42. A cup of cold water] Υδατος is not in the common text, but it is found in the Codex Bezæ, Coptic, Armenian, Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, Slavonic, all copies of the Itala, Vulgate, and Origen. It is necessarily understood, the ellipsis of the same substantive is frequent, both in the Greek and Latin writers. See Wakefield.

Little ones] My apparently mean, and generally despised disciples.

But a cup of water in the eastern countries was not a matter of small worth. In India, the Hindoos go sometimes a great way to fetch it, and then boil it that it may do the less hurt to travellers when they are hot; and after that they stand from morning to night in some great road, where there is neither pit nor rivulet, and offer it in honour of their god to be drunk by all passengers. This necessary work of charity, in these hot countries, seems to have been practised by the more pious and humane Jews; and our Lord assures them, that if they do this in his name, they shall not lose their reward. See the Asiatic Miscellany, vol. ii. p. 142.

Verily—he shall in no wise lose his reward.] The Rabbins have a similar saying, "He that gives food to one that studies in the law, God will bless him in this world, and give him a lot in the world to come." Syn. Sohar.

Love heightens the smallest actions, and gives a worth to them which they cannot possess without it. Under a just and merciful God, every sin is either punished or pardoned, and every good action rewarded. The most indigent may exercise the works of mercy and charity; seeing even a cup of cold water given in the name of Jesus, shall not lose its reward. How astonishing is God's kindness! it is not the rich merely which he calls on to be charitable; but even the poor, and the most impoverished of the poor! God gives the power and inclination to be charitable, and then rewards the work which, it may be truly said, God himself hath wrought. It is the name of Jesus that sanctifies every thing, and renders services, in themselves comparatively contemptible, of high worth in the sight of God. See Quesnel.

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. This verse properly belongs to the preceding chapter, from which it should on no account be separated; as with that it has the strictest connexion, but with this it has none.

To teach and to preach] To teach, to give private instructions to as many as came unto him; and to preach, to proclaim publicly, that the kingdom of God is at hand; two grands parts of the duty of a gospel minister.

Their cities.] The cities of the Jews.

Verse 2. John had heard in the prison] John was cast into prison by order of Herod Antipas, chap. xiv. 3, &c. (where see the notes) a little after our Lord began his public ministry, chap. iv. 12. and after the first passover, John iii. 24.

Verse 3. Art thou he that should come] Ο ερχομενος, he that cometh, seems to have been a proper name of the Messiah; to save or deliver, are necessarily implied. See on Luke vii. 19.

There is some difficulty in what is here spoken of John; some have thought he was utterly ignorant of our Lord's divine mission, and that he sent merely for his own information; but this is certainly inconsistent with his own declarations, Luke iii. 15, &c. John. i. 15, 26, 33. iii. 28, &c. Others suppose, he sent the message merely for the instruction of his disciples; that as he saw his end approaching, he wished them to have the fullest conviction that Jesus was the Messiah, that they might attach themselves to him.

A third opinion takes a middle course between the two former, and states, that, though John was at first perfectly convinced that Jesus was the Christ; yet entertaining some hopes that he would erect a secular kingdom in Judea, wished to know whether this was likely to take speedy place. It is very probable that John now began, through the length of his confinement, to entertain doubts, relative to this kingdom, which perplexed and harassed his mind; and he took the most reasonable way to get rid of them at once, viz. by applying to Christ himself.

Two of his disciples] Instead of δυο two several excellent MSS. with both the Syriac, Armenian, Gothic, and one copy of the Itala, have δια by; he sent by his disciples.

Verse 4. Go and shew John the things—ye do hear and see] Christ would have men to judge only of him and of others by their works. This is the only safe way of judging. A man is not to be credited because he professes to know such and such things: but because he demonstrates by his conduct that his pretensions are not vain.

Verse 5. The blind receive their sight, &c.] Αναβλεπουσι, look upwards, contemplating the heavens which their Lord hath made.

The lame walk] Περιπατουσι, they walk about; to give the fullest proof to the multitude that their cure was real. These miracles were not only the most convincing proofs of the supreme power of Christ; but were also emblematic of that work of salvation which he effects in the souls of men. 1. Sinners are blind; their understanding is so darkened by sin, that they see not the way of truth and salvation. 2. They are lame; not able to walk in the path of righteousness. 3. They are leprous; their souls are defiled with sin, the most loathsome and inveterate disease; deepening in themselves, and infecting others. 4. They are deaf; to the voice of God, his word, and their own conscience. 5. They are dead; in trespasses and sins; God who is the life of the soul, being separated from it by iniquity. Nothing less than the power of Christ can redeem from all this; and, from all this, that power of Christ actually does redeem every penitent believing soul. Giving sight to the blind, and raising the dead, are allowed by the ancient Rabbins, to be works which the Messiah should perform, when he should manifest himself in Israel.

The poor have the gospel preached to them.] And what was this gospel? Why, the glad tidings that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. That he opens the eyes of the blind; enables the lame to walk with an even, steady, and constant pace in the way of holiness; cleanses the lepers from all the defilement of their sins; opens the ears of the deaf to hear his pardoning words; and raises those who were dead in trespasses and sins, to live in union with himself to all eternity.

Verse 6. Blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me.] Or, Happy is he who will not be stumbled at me: for the word σκανδαλισθῆναι in its root signifies to hit against or stumble over a thing, which one may meet with in the way. The Jews, as was before remarked, expected a temporal deliverer. Many might be tempted to reject Christ, because of his mean appearance, &c. and so lose the benefit of salvation through him. To instruct and caution such our blessed Lord spoke these words. By his poverty and meanness he condemns the pride and pomp of this world. He who will not humble himself, and become base and poor and vile in his own eyes, cannot enter into the kingdom of God. It is the poor in general who hear the gospel; the rich and the great are either too busy, or too much gratified with temporal things to pay any attention to the voice of God.

Verse 7. What went ye out into the wilderness to see?] The purport of our Lord's design in this and the following verses, is to convince the Scribes and Pharisees of the inconsistency of their conduct in acknowledging John Baptist for a divinely authorized teacher, and not believing in the very Christ which he pointed out to them. He also shews from the excellencies of John's character, that their confidence in him was not misplaced, and that this was a farther argument why they should have believed in him whom the Baptist proclaimed, as being far superior to himself.

A reed shaken with the wind?] An emblem of an irresolute unsteady mind, which believes and speaks one thing to-day, and another to-morrow. Christ asks these Jews if they had ever found any thing in John like this; was he not ever steady and uniform in the testimony he bore to me? The first excellency which Christ notices in John was his steadiness; convinced once of the truth, he continued to believe and assert it. This is essentially necessary to every preacher, and to every private Christian. He who changes about from opinion to opinion, and from one sect or party to another, is never to be depended on; there is much reason to believe that such a person is either mentally weak, or has never been rationally and divinely convinced of the truth.

Verse 8. A man clothed in soft raiment?] A second excellency in John was, his sober and mortified life. A preacher of the Gospel should have nothing about him which savours of effeminacy and worldly pomp: he is awfully mistaken, who thinks to prevail on the world to hear him and receive the truth, by conforming himself to its fashions and manners. Excepting the mere colour of his clothes, we can scarcely now distinguish a preacher of the Gospel, whether in the establishment of the country, or out of it, from the merest worldly man. Ruffles, powder, and fribble seem universally to prevail. Thus the Church and the world begin to shake hands, the latter still retaining its enmity to God. How can those who profess to preach the doctrine of the Cross act in this way? Is not a worldly-minded preacher, in the most peculiar sense, an abomination in the eyes of the Lord?

Are in kings' houses.] A third excellency in John was, he did not affect high things. He was contented to live in the desert, and to announce the solemn and severe truths of his doctrine to the simple inhabitants of the country. Let it be well observed, that the preacher who conforms to the world in his clothing, is never in his element but when he is frequenting the houses and tables of the rich and great.

Verse 9. A prophet? yea—and more than a prophet] That is, one more excellent (περισσοτερον) than a prophet; one greatly beyond all who had come before him, being the immediate forerunner of Christ; (see below) and who was especially commissioned to prepare the way of the Lord. This was a fourth excellency; he was a prophet, a teacher, a man divinely commissioned to point out Jesus and his salvation; and more excellent than any of the old prophets; because he not only pointed out this Christ, but saw him, and had the honour of dying for that sacred truth, which he steadily believed and boldly proclaimed.

Verse 10. Behold, I send my messenger] A fifth excellency of the Baptist was, his preparing the way of the Lord; being the instrument, in God's hand, of preparing the people's hearts to receive the Lord Jesus; and it was probably through his preaching, that so many thousands attached themselves to Christ, immediately on his appearing as a public teacher.

a Luke 16. 16.——b Or, is gotten by force, and they that thrust men.——c Mal. 4. 6.

d Mal. 4. 5. ch. 17. 12. Luke 1. 17.——e ch. 13. 9. Luke 8. 8. Rev. 2. 7, 11, 17, 29. & 3. 6, 13, 22.——f Luke 7. 31.

Verse 11. A greater than John the Baptist] A sixth excellency of the Baptist; he was greater than any prophet from the beginning of the world till that time—1st. Because he was prophesied of by them. Isai. xl. 3. and Mal. iii. 1. where Jesus Christ himself seems to be the speaker. 2dly. Because he had the privilege of shewing the fulfilment of their predictions, by pointing out that Christ as now come, which they foretold should come. And 3dly. Because he saw and enjoyed that salvation, which they could only foretel. See Quesnel.

Notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven] By the kingdom of heaven in this verse is meant, the fulness of the blessings of the gospel of peace; which fulness was not known till after Christ had been crucified, and had risen from the dead. Now the least in this kingdom, the meanest preacher of a crucified, risen, and glorified Saviour was greater than John, who was not permitted to live to see the plenitude of gospel grace, in the pouring out of the Holy Spirit. Let the reader observe, 1st. That the kingdom of heaven here does not mean the state of future glory—See chap. iii. 2. 2dly. That it is not in holiness or devotedness to God that the least in this kingdom is greater than John; but 3dly. That it is merely in the difference of the ministry. The prophets pointed out a Christ that was coming. John shewed that that Christ was then among them: and the preachers of the Gospel prove that this Christ has suffered; and entered into his glory, and that repentance and remission of sins are proclaimed through his blood. There is a saying similar to this among the Jews, "Even the servant maid that passed through the Red-sea, saw what neither Ezekiel nor any other of the prophets had seen."

Verse 12. The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence] The tax-gatherers and heathens whom the scribes and Pharisees think have no right to the kingdom of the Messiah, filled with holy zeal and earnestness, seize at once on the proffered mercy of the Gospel, and so take the kingdom as by force from those learned doctors who claimed for themselves the chiefest places in that kingdom. Christ himself said, The tax-gatherers and harlots go before you, into the kingdom of God. See the parallel place Luke vii. 28, 29, 30. He that will take, get possession of the kingdom of righteousness, peace, and spiritual joy, must be in earnest; all hell will oppose him in every step he takes; and if a man be not absolutely determined to give up his sins and evil companions, and have his soul saved at all hazards, and at every expence, he will surely perish everlastingly.

Verse 13. All the prophets and the law prophesied until John.] I believe προεφητευσαν means here, they taught, or continued to instruct. They were the instructors concerning the Christ who was to come, till John came and shewed that all the predictions of the one, and the types and ceremonies of the other, were now about to be fully and finally accomplished; for Christ was now revealed.

Verse 14. This is Elias, which was for to come.] This should always be written Elijah, that as strict a conformity as possible might be kept up between the names in the Old Testament and the New. The prophet Malachi, who predicted the coming of the Baptist in the spirit and power of Elijah, gave the three following distinct characteristics of him. First, that he should be the forerunner and messenger of the Messiah: Behold I send my messenger before me, Mal. iii. 1. Secondly, That he should appear before the destruction of the second temple: Even the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, ibid. Thirdly, That he should preach repentance to the Jews, and that some time after, the great and terrible day of the Lord should come, and the Jewish land be smitten with a curse, chap. iv. 5, 6. Now these three characters agree perfectly with the conduct of the Baptist, and what shortly followed his preaching, and have not been found in any one else; which is a convincing proof, that Jesus was the promised Messiah.

Verse 15. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.] As if our Lord had said, These things are so clear and manifest, that a man has only to hear them, to be convinced and fully satisfied of their truth. But neither the Jews of that time, nor of the succeeding times to the present day, have heard or considered these things. When spoken to on these subjects, their common custom is to stop their ears, spit out, and blaspheme; this shews not only a bad but a ruined cause. They are deeply and wilfully blind. They will not come unto the light lest their deeds should become manifest, that they are not wrought in God. They have ears, but they will not hear.

b Ch. 9. 10.——c Luke 7. 35.——d Luke 10. 13, &c.

That is, the Jewish people—την γενεαν ταυτην, this race: and so the word γενεα is often to be understood in the Evangelists.

In the markets] Or, places of concourse, αγοραις, from αγειρω, I gather together; not a market place only, but any place of public resort: probably meaning here, places of public amusement.

Calling unto their fellows] Or, companions. Instead of εταιροις, companions, many of the best MSS. have ετεροις, others. The great similarity of the words might have easily produced this difference.

There are some to whom every thing is useful in leading them to God; others, to whom nothing is sufficient. Every thing is good to an upright mind, every thing bad to a vicious heart.

Verse 17. We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced] We have begun the music, which should have been followed by the dance, but ye have not attended to it.

We have mourned—and ye have not lamented.] Ye have not smote the breast: ουκ εκοψασθε, from κοπτομαι, to strike, or beat the breasts with the hands, particularly in lamentation. So used Nah. ii. 7. Luke xviii. 13. xxiii. 48. and by the best Greek and Roman writers. There is an allusion here to those funeral lamentations explained chap. ix. 23.

Verse 18. For John came neither eating nor drinking] Leading a very austere and mortified life: and yet, ye did not receive him. A sinner will not be persuaded, that what he has no mind to imitate, can come from God. There are some who will rather blame holiness itself, than esteem it in those whom they do not like.

He hath a devil] He is a vile hypocrite, influenced by a dæmon, to deceive and destroy the simple.

Verse 19. The Son of Man came eating and drinking] That is, went wheresoever he was invited to eat a morsel of bread, and observed no rigid fasts: how could he, who had no corrupt appetites to mortify or subdue?

They say, Behold a man gluttonous, &c.] Whatever measures the followers of God may take, they will not escape the censure of the world: the best way is not to be concerned at them. Iniquity being always ready to oppose and contradict the Divine conduct, often contradicts and exposes itself.

But wisdom is justified of her children.] Those who follow the dictates of true wisdom, ever justify, point out as excellent, the holy maxims by which they are guided, for they find the way, pleasantness, and the path, peace. Of, here and in many places of our translation, ought to be written by, in modern English.

Some suppose that our blessed Lord applies the epithet of η σοφια, that Wisdom, to himself; as he does that of Son of Man, in the first clause of the verse; and that this refers to the sublime description given of wisdom in Prov. viii. Others have supposed that by the children, or sons (τεκνων) of wisdom, our Lord means John Baptist and himself, who came to preach the doctrines of true wisdom to the people, and who were known to be teachers come from God, by all those who seriously attended to their ministry; they recommending themselves by the purity of their doctrines, and the holiness of their lives, to every man's conscience in the sight of God. It is likely, however, that by children our Lord simply means the fruits or effects of wisdom, according to the Hebrew idiom, which denominates the fruits or effects of a thing, its children. So in Job, chap. v. 7. sparks emitted by coals, are termed בני רשף beney resheph, the children of the coal. It was probably this well known meaning of the word, which led the Codex Vaticanus, one of the most ancient MSS. in the world, together with the Syriac, Persic, Coptic, and Ethiopic, to read εργων, works, instead of τεκνων, sons or children. Wisdom is vindicated by her works, i. e. the good effects prove that the cause is excellent.

The children of true wisdom can justify all God's ways in their salvation; as they know, that all the dispensations of Providence work together for the good of those who love and fear God. See on Luke vii. 35.

Verse 20. Then began he to upbraid the cities] The more God has done to draw men unto himself, the less excusable are they if they continue in iniquity. If our blessed Lord had not done every thing that was necessary for the salvation of these people, he could not have reproached them for their impenitence.

Verse 21. Woe unto thee, Chorazin—Bethsaida!] It would be better to translate the word ουαι σοι, alas for thee than woe to thee. The former is an exclamation of pity; the latter a denunciation of wrath. It is evident, that our Lord used it in the former sense. It is not known precisely where

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes.

22 But I say unto you, [b] It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you.

23 And thou, Capernaum, [c] which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

24 But I say unto you, [d] That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee.

25 ¶ [e] At that time Jesus answered and said, a Jonah 3. 7, 8.——b ch. 10. 15. ver. 24.——c See Isai. 14. 13. Lam. 2. 1.

d Ch. 10. 15.——e Luke 10. 21.

Chorazin was situated; but as Christ joins it in the same censure with Bethsaida, which was in upper Galilee, beyond the sea, Mark vi. 45. it is likely that Chorazin was in the same quarter. Though the people in these cities were (generally impenitent, yet there is little doubt that several received the word of life. Indeed, Bethsaida itself furnished not less than three of the twelve apostles, Philip, Andrew and Peter. See John i. 44.

Tyre and Sidon] Were two heathen cities, situated on the shore of the Mediterranean Sea, into which it does not appear that Christ ever went, though he was often very nigh to them; see chap. xv. 21.

They would have repented long ago] Παλαι, formerly, seems here to refer to the time of Ezekiel, who denounced destruction against Tyre and Sidon, Ezek. xxvi. xxvii. and xxviii. Our Lord then intimates, that if Ezekiel had done as many miracles in those cities, as himself had in Chorazin and Bethsaida, the inhabitants would have repented in sackcloth and ashes, with the deepest and most genuine sorrow.

Verse 22. But—it shall be more tolerable] Every thing will help to overwhelm the impenitent at the tribunal of God—the benefits and favours which they have received, as well as the sins which they have committed.

Verse 23. Thou, Capernaum—exalted unto heaven] A Hebrew metaphor, expressive of the utmost prosperity, and the enjoyment of the greatest privileges. This was properly spoken of this city, because that in it our Lord dwelt, and wrought many of his miraculous works.

Shalt be brought down to hell] Perhaps not meaning here, the place of torment, but rather a state of desolation. The original word is hades Ἅδης from α, not and ιδειν, to see—the invisible receptacle or mansion of the dead, answering to שׁאול sheol, in Hebrew; and implying often, 1st. the grave; 2dly. the state of separate souls, or unseen world of spirits, whether of torment, Luke xvi. 23. or, in general, Rev. i. 18. vi. 8. xx. 13, 14. The word hell, used in the common translation, conveys now an improper meaning of the original word; because hell is only used to signify the place of the damned. But as the word hell comes from the Anglo-Saxon, helan, to cover or hide, hence the tyling or slating of a house is called, in some parts of England, (particularly Cornwall) heling to this day; and the covers of books (in Lancashire) by the same name; so the literal import of the original word Ἅδης was formerly well expressed by it. Here it means a state of the utmost woe, and ruin, and desolation, to which these impenitent cities should be reduced. This prediction of our Lord was literally fulfilled; for, in the wars between the Romans and the Jews, these cities were totally destroyed, so that no traces are now found of Bethsaida, Chorazin, or Capernaum. See Bp. PEARCE.

Verse 24. But—it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom] Γῃ Σοδομων, the land of the Sodomites; i. e. the ancient inhabitants of that city and its neighbourhood.

In Jude, verse 7. we are told that these persons are suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah happened A. M. 2107, which was 1897 years before the incarnation. What a terrible thought is this! It will be more tolerable for certain sinners who have already been damned nearly four thousand years, than for those who live and die infidels under the Gospel! There are various degrees of punishments in hell, answerable to various degrees of guilt; and the contempt manifested to, and the abuse made of, the preaching of the Gospel, will rank semi-infidel Christians in the highest list of transgressors, and purchase them the hottest place in hell! Great God! save the Reader from this destruction!

Day of judgment] May either refer to that particular time in which God visits for iniquity, or to that great day in which he will judge the world by the Lord Jesus Christ. The day of Sodom's Judgment was that in which it was destroyed by fire and brimstone from heaven, Gen. xix. 24. and the day of judgment to Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, was the time in which they were destroyed by the Romans, ver. 23. But there is a day of final judgment, when Hades itself (sinners in a state of partial punishment in the invisible world) shall be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death. See Rev. xx. 14.

thee—I am perfectly of the same mind. Thou hast acted in all things according to the strictest holiness, justice, mercy, and truth.

Wise and prudent] The scribes and Pharisees, vainly puffed up by their fleshly minds, and having their foolish hearts darkened, refusing to submit to the righteousness of God, (God's method of saving man by Christ) and going about to establish their own righteousness, (their own method of saving themselves) they rejected God's counsel, and God sent the peace and salvation of the Gospel to others, called here babes, (his disciples) simple-hearted persons, who submitted to be instructed and saved in God's own way. Let it be observed, that our Lord does not thank the Father that he had hidden these things from the wise and prudent, but that, seeing they were hidden from them, he had revealed them to the others.

There is a remarkable saying in the Talmudists, which casts light upon this: "Rab. Jochanan said, 'From the time in which the temple was destroyed, wisdom was taken away from the prophets, and given to fools and children.' Bava Bathra, fol. 12. Again, 'In the days of the Messiah, every species of wisdom, even the most profound, shall be revealed; and this even to children." Synop. Sohar. fol. 10.

Verse 26. Even so, Father] Ναι ὁ πατηρ. An emphatical ratification of the preceding address.

It was right that the heavenly wisdom, despised, rejected, and persecuted by the scribes and Pharisees, should be offered to the simple people, and afterwards to the foolish people, the Gentiles, who are the children of wisdom; and justify God in his ways, by bringing forth that fruit of the Gospel of which the Pharisees refused to receive even the seed.

Verse 27. All things are delivered unto me of my Father] This is a great truth, and the key of the science of salvation. The man Christ Jesus receives from the Father, and in consequence of his union with the Eternal Godhead, becomes the Lord and Sovereign Dispenser of all things. All the springs of the divine favour are in the hands of Christ, as Priest of God, and atoning Sacrifice for men: all good proceeds from him, as Saviour, Mediator, Head, Pattern, Pastor, and Sovereign Judge of the whole world.

No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man, &c.] None can fully comprehend the nature and attributes of God, but Christ; and none can fully comprehend the nature, incarnation, &c. of Christ, but the Father. The full comprehension and acknowledgment of the Godhead, and the mystery of the Trinity, belong to God alone.

Verse 28. Come unto me] This phrase in the New Covenant implies simply, believing in Christ, and becoming his disciple, or follower.

All ye that labour and are heavy laden] The metaphor here appears to be taken from a man who has a great load laid upon him, which he must carry to a certain place: every step he takes, reduces his strength, and renders his load the more oppressive. However, it must be carried on; and he labours, uses his utmost exertions, to reach the place where it is to be laid down. A kind person passing by, and seeing his distress, offers to ease him of his load, that he may enjoy rest.

The Jews, heavily laden with the burdensome rites of the Mosaic institution, rendered still more oppressive by the additions made by the scribes and Pharisees, who, our Lord says, (chap. xxiii. 4.) bound on heavy burdens; and labouring, by their observance of the law, to make themselves pleasing to God, are here invited to lay down their load, and receive the salvation procured for them by Christ.

Sinners, wearied in the ways of iniquity, are also invited to come to this Christ, and find speedy relief.

Penitents, burthened with the guilt of their crimes, may come to this Sacrifice, and find instant pardon.

Believers, sorely tempted, and oppressed by the remains of the carnal mind, may come to this Blood, that cleanseth from all unrighteousness; and purified from all sin, and powerfully succoured in every temptation, they shall find uninterrupted rest in this complete Saviour.

All are invited to come, and all are promised rest. If few find rest from sin and vile affections, it is because few come to Christ to receive it.

Verse 29. Take my yoke upon you] Strange paradox! that a man already weary and overloaded, must take a new weight for I am meek and [a] lowly in heart: [b] and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

upon him, in order to be eased and find rest! But this advice is similar to that saying, Psal. lv. 22. Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he will sustain thee; i. e. trust thy soul and concerns to him, and he will carry both thyself and thy load.

I am meek and lowly in heart] Wherever pride and anger dwell, there is nothing but mental labour and agony; but where the meekness and humility of Christ dwell, all is smooth, even, peaceable, and quiet; for the work of righteousness is peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever, Isai. xxxii. 17.

Verse 30. For my yoke is easy] My Gospel imposes nothing that is difficult; on the contrary, it provides for the complete removal of all that which oppresses and renders man miserable, viz. sin. The commandments of Christ are not grievous. Hear the whole: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbour as thyself. Can any thing be more congenial to the nature of man than love? such a love as is inspired by God, and in which the soul rests supremely satisfied and infinitely happy? Taste, and know, by experience, how good the Lord is, and how worthy his yoke is to be taken, borne, and loved. This most tender invitation of the compassionate Jesus, is sufficient to inspire the most diffident soul with confidence. See on Mark viii. 34.

Creeshna, the incarnate God of the Hindoos, is represented in the Geeta addressing one of his beloved disciples thus; "I am the creator of all things, and all things proceed from me. Those who are endued with spiritual wisdom, believe this, and worship me: their very hearts and minds are in me; they rejoice among themselves, and delight in speaking of my name, and teaching one another my doctrine. I gladly inspire those who are constantly employed in my service, with that use of reason by which they come unto me; and, in compassion, I stand in my own nature, and dissipate the darkness of their ignorance with the light of the lamp of wisdom." Bhagvat Geeta, p. 84.

The word עול âval, among the Jews, which we properly enough translate yoke, signifies not only that sort of neck-harness by which bullocks drew in waggons, carts, or in the plough; but also any kind of bond or obligation, to do some particular thing, or to do some particular work. By them it is applied to the following things:

1. The yoke of the KINGDOM of heaven, עול מלכות השמים—obedience to the revealed will of God.

2. The yoke of the LAW, עול תורה—the necessity of obeying all the rites, ceremonies, &c. of the Mosaic institution.

3. The yoke of the PRECEPT, עול מצוה—the necessity of performing that particular obligation, by which any person had bound himself, such as that of the Nazarite, &c.

4. The yoke of REPENTANCE, עול של תשובה—without which, they knew, they could not enter into the kingdom of heaven. With the Jews, repentance not only implied forsaking sin, but fasting, mortification, &c.

5. The yoke of FAITH, עול אמונה—the necessity of believing in the promised Messiah.

6. The DIVINE yoke, עול דלעילא—the obligation to live a spiritual life; a life of thanksgiving and gratitude unto God.

In Shemoth Rabba it is said, "Because the ten tribes did not take the yoke of the holy and blessed God upon them; therefore Sennacherib led them into captivity."

CHRIST'S yoke means, the obligation to receive him as the MESSIAH, to believe his doctrine, and to be in all things conformed to his Word and to his Spirit.

NOTES ON CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. At that time Jesus went on the sabbath day through the corn] "The time is determined by Luke in these words, εν σαββατω δευτεροπρωτω, that is, on the sabbath from the second first.

"I. Provision was made by the divine Law, that the sheaf of first-fruits should be offered on the second day of the Pass-over week, Levit. xxiii. 10, 11. On the morrow after the sabbath, the priest shall shake (or wave) it. Not on the morrow after the ordinary sabbath of the week, but the morrow after the first of the Pass-over week, which was a sabbatic day. Exod. xii. 16. Levit. xxiii. 7. Hence the seventy, επαυριον της πρωτης, the morrow of the first day; the Chaldee, the morrow after the holy day. The Rabbins, Solomon and Menachen, have it, On the morrow after the first day of the Pass-over feast; of which mention had been made in the verses foregoing.

"But now, from the second day of the Pass-over solemnity, wherein the sheaf was offered, were numbered seven weeks to Pentecost: for the day of the sheaf, and the day of Pentecost, did mutually respect each other; for on this second day of the Pass-over, the offering of the sheaf was supplicatory, and by way of prayer, beseeching a blessing upon the new corn, and leave to eat it, and to put in the sickle into the standing corn. Now, the offering of the first-fruit loaves, on the day of Pentecost, (Levit. xxiii. 15, 16, 17,) did respect the giving of thanks for the finishing and housing of the barley-harvest. Therefore, in regard of this relation, these two solemnities were linked together, that both might respect the harvest; that, the harvest beginning; this, the harvest ended: this depended on that, and was numbered seven weeks after it. Therefore, the computation of the time coming between, could not but carry with it the memory of that second day of the Pass-over week; and hence Pentecost is called the feast of weeks, Deut. xvi. 10. The true calculation of the time between, could not otherwise be retained, as to sabbaths, but by numbering thus: this is σαββατον δευτερο-πρωτον, the first sabbath after the second day of the Pass-over. This is δευτεροδευτερον, the second sabbath after that second day. And so of the rest. In the Jerusalem Talmud, the word שבת פרוטוגמיא shebeth protogamiya, the sabbath, πρωτογαμιας, of the first marriage, is a composition not very unlike." Lightfoot.

His disciples were an-hungred] Were hungry. The former is a mode of expression totally obsolete. How near does the translation of this verse come to our ancient mother-tongue, the Anglo-Saxon! Se hælend ferde on ænne-dæg ofer æcernas; foðlice hyra leorningcnihtas hingrede. and hig ongunnun pluccian þa ear and etan—The Healer went on rest-day over acres: truly his learning knights hungred, and they began to pluck the ear and eaten. We may well wonder at the extreme poverty of Christ and his disciples. He was himself present with them, and yet permitted them to lack bread! A man, therefore, is not forsaken of God because he is in want. It is more honourable to suffer the want of all temporal things in fellowship with Christ and his followers, than to have all things in abundance in connexion with the world.

Verse 2. Thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do] The Jews were so superstitious concerning the observation of the sabbath, that in their wars with Antiochus Epiphanes, and the Romans, they thought it a crime even to attempt to defend themselves on the sabbath: when their enemies observed this, they deferred their operations to that day. It was through this, that Pompey was enabled to take Jerusalem. Dion. Cass. lib. xxxvi.

Those who know not the spirit and design of the divine Law, are often superstitious to inhumanity, and indulgent to impiety. An intolerant and censorious spirit in religion, is one of the greatest curses a man can well fall under.

Verse 3, 4. Have ye not read what David did] The original history is in 1 Sam. xxi. 1—6.

gave him the shew-bread, &c. The interpretation also of the clause, Yea, though it were sanctified this day in the vessel, is this: It is a small thing to say, that it is lawful for us to eat THESE LOAVES taken from before the Lord, when we are hungry; for it would be lawful to eat this very loaf which is now set on, which is also sanctified in the vessel, (for the table sanctifieth) it would be lawful to eat even this, when another loaf is not present with you to give us, and we are so hunger-bitten. And a little after, There is nothing which may hinder taking care of life, beside idolatry, adultery, and murder. That is, a man, according to them, should do any thing but these, in order to preserve life." See Lightfoot.

He entered into the house of God] Viz. the house of Ahimelech the priest, who dwelt at Nob, with whom the tabernacle then was, in which the divine presence was manifested.

And did eat the shew-bread] Τους αρτους της προθεσεως—in Hebrew, לחם פנים lechem panim—bread of the presence, or faces, because this bread was to be set continually, לפני יהוה lipney Yehovah, before the face of Jehovah. See the notes on Exod. xxv. 23. and 30.

"Since part of the frankincense put in the bread was to be burnt on the altar for a memorial, Lev. xxiv. 7. and since Aaron and his sons were to eat it in the holy place, it is evident that this bread typified Christ, first presented as a sacrifice to, or in the presence of Jehovah, and then becoming spiritual food to such as, in and through him, are spiritual priests to God. See Rev. i. 6. v. 10. xx. 6. also 1 Pet. ii. 5." Parkhurst.

Verse 5. The priests—profane the sabbath] Profane, i. e. put it to what might be called a common use, by slaying and offering up sacrifices, and by doing the services of the temple, as on common days, Exod. xxix. 38. Numb. xxviii. 9.

Verse 6. In this place, is one greater than the temple.] Does not our Lord refer here to Mal. iii. 1.? Confer this with Heb. iii. 3. The Jews esteemed nothing greater than the Temple, except that God who was worshipped in it. Christ, by asserting he was greater than the temple, asserts that he was God; and this he does, in still more direct terms, ver. 8. The Son of man is Lord of the sabbath—is Institutor and Governor of it. Compare this with Gen. ii. 3. and see the notes there.

Verse 7. I will have mercy, &c.] See this explained, ch. ix. 13. There are four ways in which positive laws may cease to oblige.

First, by the natural law of necessity.

Secondly, by a particular law, which is superior.

Thirdly, by the law of charity and mercy.

Fourthly, by the dispensation and authority of the Lawgiver.

These cases are all exemplified from verse 4. to verse 8.

Verse 8. The Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath day.] The change of the Jewish into the Christian sabbath, called the Lord's day, Rev. i. 10. shews that Christ is not only the Lord, but also the truth and completion of it. For it seems to have been by an especial providence that this change has been made, and acknowledged all over the Christian world.

Verse 10. A man which had his hand withered.] Probably through a partial paralysis. The man's hand was withered; but God's mercy had still preserved to him the use of his feet; he uses them to bring him to the public worship of God, and Jesus meets and heals him there. How true is the proverb—It is never so ill with us, but it might be much worse.

Verse 11. If it fall into a pit on the sabbath day, &c.] It was a canon among the Jews; "We must take a tender care of the goods of an Israelite." Hence,

"If a beast fall into a ditch, or into a pool of water, let sheep? Wherefore, it is lawful to do well on the sabbath days.

13 Then saith he to the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other.

14 ¶ Then [a] the Pharisees went out, and [b] held a council against him, how they might destroy him.

(the owner) bring him food in that place if he can; but if he cannot, let him bring clothes and litter, and bear up the beast; whence, if he can come up, let him come up, &c."

"If a beast or its foal fall into a ditch on a holy day, R. Lazar saith, let him lift up the former to kill him, and let him kill him, but let him give fodder to the other lest he die in that place. R. Joshuah saith, let him lift up the former with the intention of killing him, although he kill him not; let him lift up the other also, although it be not in his mind to kill him." To these canons our Lord seems here very properly to appeal, in vindication of his intention to heal the distressed man. See Lightfoot.

Self-interest is a very decisive casuist, and removes abundance of scruples in a moment. It is always the first consulted, and the most readily obeyed. It is not sinful to hearken to it, but it must not govern nor determine by itself.

Verse 12. How much then is a man better than a sheep?] Our Lord's argument is what is called argumentum ad hominem: they are taken on their own ground, and confuted on their own maxims and conduct. There are many persons who call themselves christians, who do more for a beast of burden or pleasure than they do for a man for whom Christ died! Many spend that on coursers, spaniels, and hounds, of which multitudes of the followers of Christ are destitute:—but this also shall come to judgment.

Wherefore, it is lawful to do well, &c.] This was allowed by a multitude of Jewish canons. See Schoetgen.

Verse 13. Stretch forth thine hand.] The bare command of God is sufficient reason of obedience. This man might have reasoned thus, "Lord, my hand is withered, how then can I stretch it out? Make it whole first, and afterwards I will do as thou commandest." This may appear reasonable, but in his case it would have been foolishness. At the command of the Lord he made the effort, and in making it the cure was effected! Faith disregards apparent impossibilities, where there is a command and promise of God. The effort to believe, is, often, that faith by which the soul is healed.

A little before (verses 6 and 8.) Jesus Christ had asserted his Godhead, in this verse he proves it. What but the omnipotence of the living God would have, in a moment, restored this withered hand? There could be no collusion here; the man who had a real disease, was instantaneously, and therefore miraculously cured; and the mercy and power of God were both amply manifested in this business.

It is worthy of remark, that as the man was healed with a word, without even a touch, the sabbath was unbroken, even according to their most rigid interpretation of the letter of the Law.

Verse 14. Held a council against him] Nothing sooner leads to utter blindness, and hardness of heart than envy. There are many who abandon themselves to pleasure taking and debauchery on the sabbath, who condemn a poor man, whom necessity obliges to work on what is termed a holiday or a national fast.

Verse 15. Jesus—withdrew himself from thence] It is the part of prudence and christian charity, not to provoke, if possible, the blind and the hardened; and to take from them the occasion of sin. A man of God is not afraid of persecution; but as his aim is only to do good, by proclaiming, every where, the grace of the Lord Jesus, he departs from any place, when he finds the obstacles to the accomplishment of his end are, humanly speaking, invincible; and that he cannot do good without being the means of much evil. Yield to the stream when you cannot stem it.

Great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all] The rejection of the gospel in one place has often been the mean of sending it to, and establishing it in another. Jesus healed all that followed him, i. e. all who had need of healing, and who desired to be healed: for thus the passage must be understood;—and is he not still the same? No soul shall ever implore his healing power in vain; but let it be remembered, that only those who follow Christ, and apply to him, are healed of their spiritual maladies.

Verse 16. Charged them that they should not make him known] See chap. 8. 4. Jesus Christ, as GOD, could have easily concealed himself, but he chooses to do it as man, and to use no other than human means, as these were quite sufficient for the purpose, to teach us not to neglect them in our necessity. Indeed he always used his power less on his own account, than on that of men.

Verse 18. Behold my servant] This title was given to our blessed Lord in several prohecies. See Isa. xlii. 1. liii. 2. Christ resumes it, Psal. xl. 7—9. compare these with John xvii. 4. and Phil. ii. 7. God required an acceptable and perfect service from man; but man being sinful, could not perform it. Jesus taking upon him the nature of man, fully performed the whole will of God, and communicates grace to all his followers, to enable them perfectly to love, and worthily to magnify their maker.

And he shall shew judgment to the Gentiles.] That is, He will publish the gospel to the heathens, for the word κρισιν here answers to the word משפט mishpat of the prophet, and it is used among the Hebrews to signify laws, precepts, and a whole system or body of doctrine. See Psal. xix. 19. cxix. 30, 39. Isa. lviii. 2.

Verse 19. He shall not strive, nor cry] The spirit of Christ is not a spirit of contention, murmuring, clamour, or litigiousness. He who loves these does not belong to him. Christ therefore fulfilled a prophecy by withdrawing from this place, on account of the rage of the Pharisees.

Verse 20. A bruised reed shall he not break] A reed is, in Scripture, the emblem of weakness, Ezek. xxix. 6. and a bruised reed must signify that state of weakness that borders on dissolution and death.

And smoking flax shall he not quench] Λινον τυφομενον. Λινος means the wick of a lamp, and τυφομενον is intended to point out its expiring state, when the oil has been all burnt away from it, and nothing is left but a mere snuff, emitting smoke. Some suppose the Jewish state, as to ecclesiastical matters, is here intended, the prophecy declaring that Christ would not destroy it, but leave it to expire of itself, as it already contained the principles of its own destruction. Others have considered it as implying that great tenderness with which the blessed Jesus should treat the weak and the ignorant, whose good desires must not be stifled, but encouraged. The bruised reed may recover itself, if permitted to vegetate under the genial influences of heaven, and the life and light of the expiring lamp may be supported by the addition of fresh oil. Jesus therefore quenches not faint desires after salvation, even in the worst and most undeserving of men: for even such desires may lead to the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of peace.

Judgment unto victory.] See ver. 18. By judgment, understand the gospel, and by victory, its complete triumph over Jewish opposition, and Gentile impiety. He will continue by these mild and gentle means to work till the whole world is christianized, and the universe filled with his glory.

Verse 21. And in his name shall the Gentiles trust.] Ελπιουσι, they shall hope. Jesus Christ is the sole hope and trust of mankind; to trust and hope in his name JESUS, is to expect salvation and all things necessary from him alone, to despise, comparatively, all earthly promises, to esteem, love, and desire heavenly things only, and to bear with patience and tranquillity all the losses and evils of this life, upon the prospect and hope of that felicity which he has purchased for us.

Verse 22. One possessed with a devil, blind, and dumb] A person from whom the indwelling demon took away both light and hearing. Satan makes himself master of the heart, the eyes, and the tongue of the sinner. His heart he fills with the love of sin; his eyes he blinds that he may not see his guilt, and the perdition which awaits him; and his tongue he hinders from prayer and supplication though he gives it increasing liberty in blasphemies, lies, slanders, &c. None but Jesus can redeem from this threefold captivity.

Verse 24. Beelzebub] See chap. x. 25.

nimity: Satan, like every other potentate, must wish to rule his empire in peace and security; how then can he be in league with me who oppose his authority, and am destroying his kingdom?

The reasoning of the Pharisees, ver. 24. was not expressed and Jesus knowing their thoughts, gave them ample proof of his omniscience. This with our Lord's masterly confutation of their reasonings, by a conclusion drawn from their own premises, one would have supposed might have humbled and convinced these men; but the most conclusive reasoning, and the most astonishing miracles were lost upon a people who were obstinately determined to disbelieve every thing good, relative to Christ. How true the saying; He came unto his own, and his own received him not!

Verse 26. If Satan cast out Satan] A good cause will produce a good effect, and an evil cause an evil effect. Were I on Satan's side, I would act for his interest, and confirm his influence among you; but I oppose his maxims by my doctrine, and his influence by my power.

Verse 27. By whom do your children cast them out?] Children, or sons of the prophets, means the disciples of the prophets; and children or sons of the Pharisees, disciples of the Pharisees. From Acts xix. 13, 14. it is evident there were exorcists among the Jews, and, from our Lord's saying here, it is also evident that the disciples of the Pharisees did cast out demons, or at least, those who educated them wished to have it believed that they had such a power. Our Lord's argument here is extremely conclusive: If the man who casts out demons, proves himself thereby to be in league with, and influenced by Satan, then your disciples, and you who taught them, are all of you in league with the Devil: ye must either give up your assertion, that I cast out dæmons by Beelzebul, or else admit this conclusion in its fullest force and latitude, that ye are all children of the devil, and leagued with him against God.

Envy causes persons often to condemn in one what they approve in another.

Verse 28. But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God] Perhaps the Spirit of God is here mentioned by way of opposition to the magical incantations of the Jews; for it is well known that, by fumigations and magical washings, they professed to cast out devils. See a case mentioned by Schoetgen on this verse.

Then the kingdom of God] For the destruction of the kingdom of Satan plainly implies the setting up of the kingdom of God.

Is come unto you] Is come unexpectedly upon you. Εφθασεν from φθανω, to appear suddenly—unexpectedly.

They pretended to be in expectation of the kingdom of God, and consequently of the destruction of the kingdom of Satan. But by being not prepared to receive Christ in these proofs of his divine mission, they shewed that their expectation was but pretended. They were too carnal to mind spiritual things.

Verse 29. Else how can one enter into a strong man's house] Men, through sin, are become the very house and dwelling-place of Satan; having, of their own accord, surrendered themselves to this unjust possessor; for whoever gives up his soul to sin, gives it up to the Devil. It is Jesus, and Jesus alone who can deliver from the power of this bondage. When Satan is cast out, Jesus purifies and dwells in the heart.

Verse 30. He that is not with me is against me] In vain do men seek for methods to reconcile God and Mammon. There is no medium between loving the Lord and being his enemy; between belonging to Christ or to Satan. If we be on the side of the Devil, we must expect to go to the Devil's hell; if we be on the side of Christ, we may expect to go to his heaven. When Christ, his truth, and his servants are assaulted, he who does not espouse their cause, is not on Christ's side, but incurs the guilt of deserting and betraying them. There are many (it is to be feared) in the world who are really against Christ, and scatter abroad, who flatter themselves that they are workers together with him, and of the number of his friends!

Scattereth abroad.] This seems to have been a proverbial form of speech, and may be a metaphor taken from shepherds. He who does not help the true shepherd to gather his flock into the fold, is, most likely, one who wishes to scatter them, that he may have the opportunity of stealing and destroying them. I do not find any parallel to this proverbial mode of speech in the Jewish Rabbins, if it be one, nor have I met with it among the Greek or Roman writers.

Verse 31. All manner of sin and blasphemy] Βλασφημια, injurious or impious speaking, byrmoŋ spræc, mocking and deriding speech, Anglo-Saxon. See chap. ix. 3.

But the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost] Even personal reproaches, revilings, persecutions against Christ were remissible; but blasphemy, or impious speaking, against the Holy Spirit was to have no forgiveness; i. e. when the person obstinately attributed those works to the Devil, which he had the fullest evidence could be wrought only by the Spirit of God. That this, and nothing else, is the sin against the Holy Spirit, is evident from the connexion in this place, and more particularly from Mark iii. 28, 29, 30. "All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme, but he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation; BECAUSE they said he hath an unclean spirit."

Here the matter is made clear beyond the smallest doubt—the unpardonable sin, as some term it, is neither less nor more than ascribing the miracles Christ wrought, by the power of God, to the spirit of the Devil. Many sincere people have been grievously troubled with apprehensions that they had committed the unpardonable sin; but let it be observed that no man who believes the divine mission of Jesus Christ, ever can commit this sin: therefore let no man's heart fail because of it, from henceforth and for ever, Amen. See below.

Verse 32. Neither in this world, neither in the world to come] Though I follow the common translation, yet I am fully satisfied the meaning of the words is, neither in this dispensation (viz. the Jewish) nor in that which is to come, viz. the Christian. עולם הבא ólam ha-bo, the world to come, is a constant phrase for the times of the Messiah, in the Jewish writers. See below. The sin here spoken of by our Lord, ranks high in the catalogue of presumptuous sins, for which there was no forgiveness under the Mosaic dispensation. See Num. xv. 30, 31. xxxv. 31. Lev. xx. 10. 1 Sam. ii. 25. When our Lord says that such a sin hath no forgiveness, is he not to be understood as meaning that the crime shall be punished under the Christian dispensation as it was under the Jewish, viz. by the destruction of the body? And is not this the same mentioned 1 John i. 7. called there the sin unto death; i. e. a sin that was to be punished by the death of the body, while mercy might be extended to the soul? The punishment for presumptuous sins, under the Jewish law, to which our Lord evidently alludes, certainly did not extend to the damnation of the soul, though the body was destroyed; therefore I think that, though there was no such forgiveness to be extended to this crime as to absolve the man from the punishment of temporal death, yet, on repentance, mercy might be extended to the soul; and every sin may be repented of under the gospel dispensation.

Dr. Lightfoot has sufficiently vindicated this passage from all false interpretation. "They that endeavour hence to prove the remissions of some sins after death, seem little to understand to what Christ had respect, when he spake these words. Weigh well this common and most known doctrine of the Jewish schools, and judge.

"He that transgresses an affirmative precept, if he presently repent, is not moved until the Lord pardon him, and of such it is said, Be ye converted, O backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings. He that transgresses a negative precept and repents, his repentance suspends judgment, and the day of expiation expiates him; as it is said, This day shall all your uncleannesses be expiated to you. He that transgresses to cutting off (by the stroke of God) or to death by the Sanhedrin, and repents, repentance and the day of expiation do suspend judgment, and the strokes that are laid upon him wipe off sin, as it is said, and I will visit their transgression with a rod, and their iniquity with scourges. But he by whom the name of God is profaned (or blasphemed) repentance is of no avail to him to suspend judgment, nor the day of expiation to expiate it, nor scourges (or corrections inflicted) to wipe it off, but all suspend judgment, and death wipes it off. Thus the Babylonian Gemara writes, but the Jerusalem thus: Repentance and the day of expiation expiate as to the third part, and corrections as to the third part, and death wipes it off, as it is said, and your iniquities shall not be expiated to you until ye die: behold we learn that death wipes off. Note this, which Christ contradicts, concerning blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. It shall not be forgiven, saith he, neither in this world, nor in the world to come; that is, nei-

34 O [a] generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? [b] for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

35 A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things.

36 But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.

"In the world to come.—I. Some phrases were received into common use, by which, in common speech, they opposed the heresy of the Sadducees, who denied immortality. Of that sort were עולם הבא ólam ha-ba, Αιων ὁ μελλων, The world to come. גן ערן gan âden, Παραδεισος, Paradise: גי הנום gei hinnom, Γεεννα, Hell, &c.

"At the end of all the prayers in the temple, (as we observed before) they said עד עולם âd ólam for ever. But when the Heretics (i. e. the Sadducees) brake in, and said there was NO AGE but one; then it was appointed to be said for ever and ever. העולם מן העולם ועד min ha-olam, vead ha-olam. Bab. Beracoth, fol. 54. This distinction of עולם הזה ólam hazeh, this world, and of עולם הבא olam ha-ba, the world to come, you may find almost in every page of the Rabbins.

"The Lord recompense thee a good reward for this thy good work in this world, and let thy reward be perfected in the world to come. Targum on Ruth.

"It (that is, the history of the creation and of the Bible) therefore begins with the letter ב beth (in the word ברישית bereshith) because two worlds were created, this world, and a world to come. Baal Turim.

"II. The world to come hints two things especially (of which see Rambam, in Sanhed. cap. Chelek.) I. The times of the Messiah: 'Be mindful of the day wherein thou camest out of Egypt, all the days of thy life; the wise men say, by the days of thy life is intimated this world, by all the days of thy life, the days of the Messiah are superinduced.' In this sense the apostle seems to speak Heb. ii. 5. and vi. 5. II. The state after death, thus Rab. Tanchum, The world to come, is when a man has departed out of this world."

Verse 33. Either make the tree good] That is, the effect will be always similar to the cause, a bad tree will produce bad fruit, and a good tree good fruit.

The works will resemble the heart, nothing good can proceed from an evil spirit, no good fruit can proceed from a corrupt heart;—before the heart of man can produce any good, it must be renewed and influenced by the Spirit of God.

Verse 34. O generation of vipers] These are apparently severe words, but they were extremely proper in reference to that execrable people to whom they were addressed: the whole verse is an inference from what was spoken before.

Out of the abundance (περισσευματος, the overflowings) of the heart] Wicked words, and sinful actions may be considered as the overflowings of a heart that is more than full of the spirit of wickedness; and holy words and righteous deeds may be considered as the overflowings of a heart that is filled with the Holy Spirit, and running over with love to God and man.

Verse 35. A good man out of the good treasure of the heart] Της καρδιας, of his heart, is omitted by upwards of one hundred MSS. many of them of the greatest antiquity and authority: by all the Syriac, Arabic, and Persic; by the Slavonic, Saxon, Vulgate, and Itala (except four) and by several of the primitive fathers. It seems to have been added here by some copyist, merely to explain. The good heart is the good treasury, and the treasure that is in it is the love of God, and of all mankind. The bad heart is the bad treasury, and its treasure is the carnal mind, which is enmity against God, and ill-will to man.

Verse 36. Every idle word] Ρημα αργον, a word that does nothing, that neither ministers grace, nor instruction to them who hear it. The word αργον corresponds to the Hebrew שוא shavé, which signifies not only vain or empty, but also wicked and injurious, such as a false testimony against a neighbour, compare Deut. v. 11. and 20. Add to this that Symmachus translates פגול piggul, polluted, Lev. xix. 7. by the very Greek word in the text. It was to explain this ambiguous meaning of the word, that ten MSS. have changed αργον into πονηρον, evil. Our Lord must be understood here as condemning all false and injurious words: the scope of the place necessarily requires this meaning.

Verse 37. By thy words thou shalt be justified] That is, the whole tenor of thy conversation will be an evidence for or against thee, in the great day. How many are here who count words for nothing, and yet eternity often depends on them. Lord, put a watch before the door of my lips! is a prayer, proper for all men.

Verse 38. We would see a sign from thee.] That is, we wish now to see thee work a miracle. Pride, vain curiosity, and incredulity, have never proof sufficient of the truth: for they will not be satisfied.

Verse 39. An evil and adulterous generation] Or, race of people; for so γενεα should be translated here, and in most other places in the Gospels; for our Lord, in general, uses it to point out the Jewish people. This translation is a key to unlock some very obscure passages in the Evangelists.

Seeketh after a sign] Or, seeketh another sign, (επιζητει) so I think this word should be translated. Our Lord had already given the Jews several signs; and here they desire sign upon sign.

Our Lord terms the Jews an adulterous race. Under the Old Covenant, the Jewish nation was represented as in a marriage contract with the Lord of hosts; as believers, in the New Covenant, are represented as the spouse of Christ—all unfaithfulness and disobedience was considered as a breach of this marriage contract: hence the persons who were thus guilty, are denominated adulterers and adultresses. But independently of this, there is the utmost proof from their own writings, that in the time of our Lord, they were most literally an adulterous race of people: for, at this very time, R. Jochanan ben Zacchai abrogated the trial by the bitter waters of jealousy, because so many were found to be thus criminal. See on John viii. 3.

Verse 40. Three days and three nights] Our Lord rose from the grave on the day but one after his crucifixion: so that in the computation of this verse, the part of the day on which he was crucified, and the part of that on which he rose again, are severally estimated as an entire day: and this, no doubt, exactly corresponded to the time in which Jonah was in the belly of the fish. Our Lord says, As Jonah was, so shall the Son of man be, &c. Evening and morning, or night and day, is the Hebrew phrase for a natural day, which the Greeks termed νυχθημερον nuchthemeron. The very same quantity of time which is here termed three days and three nights, and which in reality was only one whole day, a part of two others, and two whole nights, is termed three days and three nights, in the book of Esther: Go; neither eat nor drink THREE DAYS, NIGHT or DAY, and so I will go in unto the king: chap. iv. 16. Afterwards it follows, chap. v. 1. On the THIRD DAY, Esther stood in the inner court of the king's house. Many examples might be produced from both the sacred and profane writers, in vindication of the propriety of the expression in the text. For farther satisfaction, the Reader, if he please, may consult Whitby and Wakefield, and take the following from Lightfoot.

"I. The Jewish writers extend that memorable station of the unmoving sun at Joshua's prayer, to six and thirty hours; for so Kimchi upon that place. 'According to more exact interpretation, the sun and moon stood still for six and thirty hours: for when the fight was on the eve of the sabbath, Joshua feared lest the Israelites might break the sabbath, therefore he spread abroad his hands, that the sun might stand still on the sixth day, according to the measure of the day of the sabbath, and the moon according to the measure of the night of the sabbath, and of the going out of the sabbath, which amounts to six and thirty hours.'

"II. If you number the hours that passed from our Saviour's giving up the ghost upon the cross to his resurrection, you shall find almost the same number of hours; and yet that space is called by him three days and three nights, whereas two nights only came between, and only one complete day. Nevertheless, while he speaks these words, he is not without the consent both of the Jewish schools and their computation. Weigh well that which is disputed in the tract Scabbath, concerning the separation of a woman for three days; where many things are discussed by the Gemarists, concerning the computation of this space of three days. Among other things these words occur: R. Ismael saith, Sometimes it contains four אונות onoth, sometimes five, sometimes six. But how much is the space of an אונה onah? R. Jochanan saith, Either a day or a night. And so also the Jerusalem Talmud: 'R. Akiba fixed a DAY for an onah, and a NIGHT for an onah.' But the tradition is, that R. Eliazar ben Azariah said, A day and a night make an onah: and a PART of an onah is as the WHOLE. And a little after, R. Ismael computed a part of the onah for the whole." Thus then, three days and three nights, according to this Jewish method of reckoning, included any part of the first day; the whole of the following night; the next day and its night; and any part of the succeeding or third day.

In the whale's belly] That a fish of the shark kind, and not a whale, is here meant, Bochart has abundantly proved, vol. iii. col. 742, &c. edit. Leyd. 1692. It is well known, that the throat of a whale is capable of admitting little more than the arm of an ordinary man; but many of the shark species can swallow a man whole; and men have been found whole in the stomachs of several. Every natural history abounds with facts of this kind. Besides, the shark is a native of the Mediterranean sea, in which Jonah was sailing, when swallowed by what the Hebrew terms דג גדול dag gadol, a great fish; but every body knows that whales are no produce of the Mediterranean sea, though some have been by accident found there, as in most other parts of the maritime world; but let them be found where they may, there is none of them capable of swallowing a man. Instead of either whale or shark, some have translated דג גדול dag gadol, Jonah i. 17. by a fishing cove, or something of this nature; but this is merely to get rid of the miracle: for, according to some, the whole of Divine revelation is a forgery—or it is a system of metaphor or allegory, that has no miraculous interferences in it. But independently of all this, the criticism is contemptible. Others say, that the great fish means a vessel so called, into which Jonah went, and into the hold of which he was thrown, where he continued three days and three nights. In short, it must be any thing but a real miracle, the existence of which, the wise men, so called, of the present day cannot admit. Perhaps these very men are not aware, that they have scarcely any belief even in the existence of God himself!

Verse 41. The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment] The voice of God, threatening temporal judgments, caused a whole people to repent, who had neither Moses nor Christ, neither the Law nor the prophets; and who perhaps never had but this one preacher among them. What judgment may not we expect, if we continue impenitent, after all that God has bestowed upon us?

A greater than Jonas is here.] Πλειον, for τι πλειον, something more. The evidence offered by Jonah sufficed to convince and lead the Ninevites to repentance; but here was more evidence, and a greater person; and yet so obstinate are the Jews, that all is ineffectual. 1. Christ, who preached to the Jews, was infinitely greater than Jonah in his nature, person, and mission. 2. Jonah preached repentance in Nineveh only forty days, and Christ preached among the Jews for several years. 3. Jonah wrought no miracles to authorize his preaching; but Christ wrought miracles every day, in every place, and of every kind. And 4. Notwithstanding all this, the people of Judea did not repent, though the people of Nineveh did.

Verse 42. The queen of the south] In 1 Kings x. 1. this queen is said to be of Saba, which was a city and province of Arabia Felix, to the south, or south-east, of Judea.

Uttermost parts of the earth] Περατων της γης—a form of speech which merely signifies, a great distance. See Deut. xxviii. 49.

Verse 43. When the unclean spirit] If there had been no reality in demoniacal possessions, our Lord would have scarcely appealed to a case of this kind here, to point out the real state of the Jewish people, and the desolation which was coming upon them. Had this been only a vulgar error, of the nonsense of which the learned Scribes and the wise Pharisees must have been convinced, the case not being one in point, because not true, must have been treated by that very people with contempt, for whose conviction it was alone designed.

He walketh through dry places] Δι' ανυδρων τοπων. There seems to be a reference here to the Orphic demonology, in which evil spirits were divided into various classes, according to the different regions of their abode, or places in which they delighted. These classes were five: 1. Δαιμονες ουρανιοι, Celestial dæmons. 2. Δαιμονες περιοι, Aerial. 3. Δαιμονες ενυδριοι, Aquatic. 4. Δαιμονες χθονιοι, Terrestrial. 5. Και δαιμονες υποχθονιοι, And subterranean dæmons. See Orph. ad Mus. ap. Schott. The Platonists, the followers of Zoroaster, and the primitive Jews, made nearly the same distinctions.

Seeking rest] Or refreshment. Strange! a fallen corrupt spirit can have no rest but in the polluted human heart: the corruption of the one is suited to the pollution of the other, and thus like cleaves to like.

Verse 44. Into my house] The soul of that person from whom he had been expelled by the power of Christ, and out of which he was to have been kept by continual prayer, faith, and watchfulness.

He findeth it empty] Unoccupied σχολαζοντα, empty of the former inhabitant, and ready to receive a new one: denoting a soul that has lost the life and power of godliness, and the testimony of the Holy Spirit.

from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished.

45 Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: [a] and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation.

Swept, and garnished.] As σχολαζω signifies to be idle, or unemployed, it may refer here to the person, as well as to his state. His affections and desires are no longer busied with the things of God, but gad about like an idle person, among the vanities of a perishing world. Swept, from love, meekness, and all the fruits of the Spirit; and garnished, or adorned, κεκοσμημενον, decorated, with the vain showy trifles of folly and fashion. This may comprize also smart speeches, cunning repartees, &c. for which, many who have lost the life of God, are very remarkable.

Verse 45. Seven other spirits more wicked] Seven was a favourite number with the Jews, implying frequently with them, something perfect, completed, filled up, for such is the proper import of the Hebrew word שבע shevá or shevang: nearly allied in sound to our seven. And perhaps this meaning of it refers to the seventh day, when God rested from his work, having filled up, or completed the whole of his creative design. Seven dæmons—as many as could occupy his soul, harassing it with pride, anger, self-will, lust, &c. and torturing the body with disease.

The last state of that man is worse than the first.] His soul before, influenced by the Spirit of God, dilated and expanded under its heavenly influences, becomes more capable of refinement in iniquity, as its powers are more capacious than formerly. Evil habits are formed and strengthened by relapses; and relapses are multiplied and become more incurable through new habits.

So shall it be also unto this wicked generation.] And so it was: for they grew worse and worse, as if totally abandoned to diabolic influence: till at last the besom of destruction swept them and their privileges, national and religious, utterly away. What a terrible description of a state of apostacy is contained in these verses! May he who readeth, understand!

Verse 46. His mother and his brethren] These are supposed to have been the cousins of our Lord, as the word brother is frequently used among the Hebrews in this sense. But there are others who believe Mary had other children beside our Lord, and that these were literally his brothers, who are spoken of here. And although it be possible, that these were the sons of Mary, the wife of Cleopas or Alpheus, his mother's sister, called his relations, Mark iii. 21. yet it is as likely, that they were the children of Joseph and Mary, and brethren of our Lord, in the strictest sense of the word. See on chap. xiii. 55.

Verse 48. Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?] The reason of this seeming disregard of his relatives was this; they came to seize upon him, for they thought he was distracted. See Mark iii. 21.

Verse 50. Whosoever shall do the will of my Father, &c.] Those are the best acknowledged relatives of Christ, who are united to him by spiritual ties, and who are become one with him, by the indwelling of his Spirit. We generally suppose that Christ's relatives must have shared much of his affectionate attention; and doubtless they did: but here we find that whosoever does the will of God is equally esteemed by Christ, as his brother, sister, or even his virgin mother. What an encouragement for fervent attachment to God!

1. From various facts related in this chapter, we see the nature and design of the revelation of God, and of all the ordinances and precepts contained in it—they are all calculated to do man good: to improve his understanding, to soften and change his nature, that he may love his neighbour as himself. That religion that does not inculcate and produce humanity, never came from heaven.

2. We have already seen what the sin against the Holy Ghost is: no soul that fears God can commit it: perhaps it would be impossible for any but Jews to be guilty of it, and they only in the circumstances mentioned in the text; and in such circumstances, it is impossible that any person should now be found.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. The same day] Our Lord scarcely ever appears to take any rest—he is incessant in his labours; and instant in season and out of season: and in this he has left all his successors in the ministry an example, that they should follow his steps: for he who wishes to save souls, will find few opportunities to rest. As Satan is going about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, the messenger of God should imitate his diligence, that he may counteract his work.

Went Jesus out of the house] This was the house of Peter. See chap. xvii. 24.

Sat by the sea side.] The sea of Galilee, on the borders of which the city of Capernaum was situated.

Verse 2. Into a ship.] Το πλοιον, THE vessel or boat. Mr. Wakefield supposes (which is very likely) that a particular vessel is uniformly specified, which seems to have been kept on the lake for the use of Christ and his Apostles: it probably belonged to some of the fishermen: (see chap. iv. 22. who, he thinks, occasionally, at least, followed their former occupation. See John xxi. 3.

The thought of pious Quesnel on this verse should not be neglected. We see here a represention of the church, which consists of the people united to their pastors. These being more exposed to violent tossings and storms, are, as it were, in a ship, while those continue at ease on the shore.

Verse 3. He spake many things unto them in parables] Parable, from παρα, near, and βαλλω, I cast, or put. A comparison or similitude, in which one thing is compared with another, especially spiritual things with natural, by which means these spiritual things are better understood, and make a deeper impression on an attentive mind. Or, a parable is a representation of any matter accommodated, in the way of similitude, to the real subject, in order to delineate it with the greater force and perspicuity. See more on this subject at the conclusion of this chapter. No scheme, says Dr. Lightfoot, of Jewish rhetoric was more familiarly used, than that of parables; which, perhaps, creeping in from thence, among the heathens, ended in fables.

It is said in the tract Sotah, chap. ix. "From the time that Rabbi Meri died, those that spake in parables ceased." Not that this figure of rhetoric perished in the nation from that time; but because he surpassed all others in these flowers, as the gloss there from the tract Sanhedrin speaks. "A third part of his discourses was tradition; a third part allegory; and a third part parable." The Jewish books every where abound with these figures, the nation inclining by a kind of natural genius to this kind of rhetoric. Their very religion might be called parabolical, folded up within the coverings of ceremonies; and their oratory in their sermons was like to it. But is it not indeed a wonder, that they who were so much given to and delighted in parables, and so dexterous in unfolding them, should stick in the outward shell of ceremonies, and should not have brought out the parabolical and spiritual sense of them? Our Saviour, who always spoke with the common people, uses the same kind of speech, and very often, the same preface which they used, To what is it likened? See Lightfoot in loco. Though we find the basis of many of our Lord's parables in the Jewish writings, yet not one of them comes through his hands, without being astonishingly improved. In this respect also, Surely never man spake like this man.

Under the parable of the sower, our Lord intimates, 1. That of all the multitudes then attending his ministry, few would bring forth fruit to perfection. And 2. That this would be a general case in preaching the Gospel among men.

Verse 8. Good ground] Where the earth was deep, the field well ploughed, and the brambles and weeds all removed. See more on ver. 18, &c. and see on Luke viii. 15.

Verse 9. Who hath ears to hear, &c.] Let every person who feels the necessity of being instructed in the things which concern his soul's welfare, pay attention to what is spoken, and he shall become wise unto salvation.

Verse 11. It is given unto you to know the mysteries, &c.] By mysteries here, we may understand not only things concerning the scheme of salvation, which had not yet been revealed; but also the prophetic declarations concerning the future state of the Christian church, expressed in the ensuing parables. It is not given to them to know the purport and design of these things—they are gross of heart, earthly and sensual, and do not improve the light they have received; but to you it is given, because I have appointed you not only to be the first preachers of my gospel to sinners, but also the persons who shall transmit accounts of all these things to posterity. The knowledge of these mysteries, in the first instance, can be given only to a few; but when these faithfully write and publish what they have heard and seen, unto the world, then the science of salvation is revealed and addressed to all. From ver. 17. we learn, that many prophets and righteous men had desired to see and hear these things, but had not that privilege—to them it was not given; not because God designed to exclude them from salvation, but because HE who knew all things, knew, either that they were not proper persons, or that that was not the proper time: for the choice of the PERSONS by whom, and the choice of the TIME in which it is most proper to reveal divine things, must ever rest with the all-wise God.

Verse 12. Whosoever hath, to him shall be given] This is an allusion to a common custom in all countries: he who possesses much, or is rich, to such a person, presents are ordinarily given.

Whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.] That is, the poor man: he that has little may be easily made a prey of, and so lose his little. This is a proper sense of the word ἐχειν in sacred and profane writers. In 1 Cor. xi. 22. τους μη εχοντας, those who have not, means simply THE POOR: and Aristophanes uses τους εχοντας, those that have, for the RICH or OPULENT. See a variety of pertinent examples in Kypke on Luke viii. 18. There is one example in Juvenal, Sat. iii. l. 208, 209. that expresses the whole of our Lord's meaning, and is a beautiful illustration of this apparently difficult passage.

NIL habuit Codrus: quis enim negat? et tamen illud Perdidit infelix TOTUM NIL.

"'Tis true, poor Codrus NOTHING had to boast,
And yet poor Codrus ALL that NOTHING lost." Dryden.

Now what was this NOTHING which the poet said, Codrus had and lost? The five preceding lines tell you.

Lectus erat Codro Proculâ minor, urceoli sex,
Ornamentum abaci; necnon et parvulus infrà
Cantharus, et recubans sub eodem marmore Chiron;
Jamque vetus Græcos servabat cista libellos,
Et divina Opici rodebant carmina mures.

He had one small bed, six little pitchers, the ornament of a side-board; a small jug or tankard, the image of a centaur, and an old chest with some Greek books in it, on which the mice had already begun to make depredations. And all this he lost; probably by continuing, in spite of his destiny, to be a poet. So those who devote not the light and power which God has given them, to the purposes for which he has granted these gifts, from them shall be taken away these unemployed or prostituted blessings. This seems to have been a proverbial mode of speech, which our Lord here uses to inform his disciples, that he who does not improve the first operations of grace, howsoever small, is in danger of losing not only all the possible product, but even the principal; for God delights to heap benefits on those who properly improve them. See the note on Luke viii. 18.

Verse 13. Therefore speak I to them in parables] On this account, viz. to lead them into a proper knowledge of God. I speak to them in parables, natural representations of spiritual truths, that they may be allured to enquire, and to find out the spirit, which is hidden under the letter; because seeing the miracles which I have wrought, they see not, i. e. the end for which I have wrought them: and hearing my doctrines, they hear not, so as to profit by what is spoken; neither do they understand, ουδε συνιουσι, they do not lay their hearts to it. Is not this obviously our Lord's meaning? Who can suppose that he would employ his time in speaking enigmatically to them, on purpose that they might not understand what was spoken? Could the God of truth and sincerity act thus? If he had designed to act otherwise, he might have saved his time and labour, and not spoken at all, which would have answered the same end, viz. to leave them in gross ignorance.

Verse 14. In them is fulfilled] Αναπληρουται, Is AGAIN fulfilled: this proper meaning of the Greek word has been generally overlooked. The Evangelist means, that as these words were fulfilled in the Jews in the time of the prophet Isaiah, so they are now again fulfilled in these their posterity, who exactly copy their father's example. These awful words may be again fulfilled in us, if we take not warning by the things which these disobedient people have suffered.

By hearing ye shall hear] Jesus Christ shall be sent to you, his miracles ye shall fully see, and his doctrines ye shall distinctly hear, but God will not force you to receive the salvation which is offered.

Verse 15. Heart is waxed gross] Επαχυνθη, is become fat—inattentive, stupid, insensible. They hear heavily with their ears—are half asleep while the salvation of God is preached unto them.

Their eyes they have closed] Totally and obstinately resisted the truth of God, and shut their eyes against the light.

Lest they should see, &c.] Lest they should see their lost estate, and be obliged to turn unto God, and seek his salvation. His state is truly deplorable who is sick unto death, and yet is afraid of being cured. The fault is here totally in the people, and not at all in that God, whose name is mercy and whose nature is love.

Verse 16. But blessed are your eyes] Ye improve the light which God has given you; and you receive an increase of heavenly wisdom by every miracle and by every sermon.

Verse 17. Many prophets and righteous men] These lived by, and died in the faith of the promised Messiah: the fulness of the time was not then come for his manifestation in the flesh. See also on ver. 11.

Verse 19. When any one heareth the word of the kingdom] Viz. the preaching of the gospel of Christ.

And understandeth it not] Μη συνιεντος, perhaps more properly regardeth it not, does not lay his heart to it.

eth the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. This is he which received seed by the way side.

20 But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon [c] with joy receiveth it; distresses and torments the soul. Mark, chap. iv. 15. calls him ὁ σατανας, the adversary or opposer, because he resists men in all their purposes of amendment, and to the utmost of his power, opposes, in order to frustrate, the influences of divine grace upon the heart. In the parallel place in Luke, chap. viii. 12. he is called ὁ διαβολος, the devil, from διαβαλλειν, to shoot, or dart through. In allusion to this meaning of the name, St. Paul, Eph. vi. 16. speaks of the fiery DARTS of the wicked one. It is worthy of remark, that the three Evangelists should use each a different appellative of this mortal enemy of mankind; probably to shew, that the devil, with all his powers and properties, opposes every thing that tends to the salvation of the soul.

Catcheth away] Makes the utmost haste to pick up the good seed, lest it should take root in the heart.

A careless inattentive hearer is compared to the way side—his heart is an open road, where evil affections, and foolish and hurtful desires continually pass and repass without either notice or restraint. "A heart where Satan has," (as one terms it) "ingress, egress, regress, and progress: in a word the devil's thoroughfare."

Verse 20. But he that received the seed into stony places—is he] That is, is a fit emblem of that man, who hearing the gospel, is affected with its beauty and excellency, and immediately receiveth it with joy—is glad to hear what God has done to make man happy.

Verse 21. Yet hath he not root in himself] His soul is not deeply convinced of its guilt and depravity; the fallow ground is not properly ploughed up, nor the rock broken. When persecution &c. ariseth, which he did not expect, he is soon stumbled—seeks some pretext to abandon both the doctrine and followers of Christ. Having not felt his own sore, and the plague of his heart, he has not properly discovered that this salvation is the only remedy for his soul—thus he has no motive in his heart, strong enough to counteract the outward scandal of the cross—so he endureth only for the time, in which there is no difficulty to encounter, no cross to bear.

Verse 22. He also that received seed among the thorns] In land ploughed, but not properly cleared and weeded. Is he—represents that person who heareth the word, but the cares, rather, the anxiety, η μεριμνα, the whole system of anxious carking cares. Lexicographers derive the word μεριμνα from μεριζειν τον νουν, dividing, or distracting the mind. Thus a poet,

Tot me impediunt curæ, quæ meum animum divorsè trahunt.

"So many cares hinder me, which draw my mind different ways." Terence.

The deceitfulness of riches] Which promise peace and pleasure, but can never give them.

Choke the word] Or, together choke the word, συμπνιγει, meaning, either that these grow up together with the word, overtop, and choke it; or that these united together, viz. carking worldly cares, with the delusive hopes and promises of riches, cause the man to abandon the great concerns of his soul, and seek in their place, what he shall eat, drink, and wherewithal he shall be clothed. Dreadful stupidity of man, thus to barter spiritual for temporal good—a heavenly inheritance for an earthly portion! The seed of the kingdom can never produce much fruit in any heart, till the thorns and thistles of vicious affections and impure desires be plucked up by the roots and burned. The Persic translator renders it اصل کلمه را خبه کند asle kalmé-ra khubé kund, chokes the root of the word: for it appears the seed had taken root, and that these cares, &c. choked it in the root, before even the blade could shew itself.

Verse 23. Good ground] That which had depth of mould, was well ploughed, and well weeded.

Is he that heareth] Who diligently attends the ministry of the word.

And understandeth it] Lays the subject to heart, deeply weighing its nature, design, and importance.

Which also beareth fruit] His fruitfulness being an almost necessary consequence of his thus laying the divine message to heart. Let it be observed, that to hear, to understand, and to bring forth fruit, are the three grand evidences of a genuine believer. He who does not hear the word of wisdom, cannot understand what makes for his peace; and standeth it; which also beareth fruit, and bringeth forth, [a] some a hundredfold, some sixty, some thirty.

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

24 ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed [b] good seed in his field:

25 But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed [c] tares among the wheat, and went his way.

26 But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also.

c Deut. 22. 9. Isai. 56. 9, 10. Wisd. 2. 24. 1 Tim. 4. 2.

he who does not understand what the gospel requires him to be and to perform, cannot bring forth fruit; and he who is not fruitful, very fruitful, cannot be a disciple of Christ: see John xv. 8. and he who is not Christ's disciple, cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

From the different portions of fruit produced by the good ground, a hundred, sixty, and thirty, we may learn, that all sound believers are not equally fruitful—all hear, understand, and bring forth fruit, but not in the same degrees—occasioned partly, by their situation and circumstances not allowing them such extensive opportunities of receiving and doing good; and partly, by lack of mental capacity—for every mind is not equally improvable.

Let it be farther observed, that the unfruitfulness of the different lands was not owing to bad seed or an unskilful sower—the same sower sows the same seed in all, and with the same gracious design—but it is unfruitful in many, because they are careless, inattentive, and worldly minded.

But is not the ground naturally bad in every heart? Undoubtedly. And can any but God make it good! None. But it is your business, when you hear of the justice and mercy of God, to implore him to work in you that which is pleasing in his sight. No man shall be condemned because he did not change his own heart, but because he did not cry to God to change it; who gave him his Holy Spirit for this very purpose; and which he, by his worldly mindedness and impiety, quenched. Whoso hath ears to hear, let him hear: and may the Lord save the Reader from an impenitent and unfruitful heart!

Verse 24. The kingdom of heaven] God's method of managing the affairs of the world, and the concerns of his church.

Is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field] In general, the world may be termed the field of God; and in particular, those who profess to believe in God through Christ, are his field or farm; among whom God sows nothing but the pure unadulterated word of his truth.

Verse 25. But while men slept] When the professors were lukewarm, and the pastors indolent; his enemy came and sowed tares, degenerate or bastard wheat. The righteous and the wicked are often mingled in the visible church. Every Christian society, how pure soever its principles may be, has its bastard wheat—those who bear a resemblance to the good, but whose hearts are not right with God. He who sows this bastard wheat among God's people, is here stiled God's enemy: and he may be considered also as a sower of them, who permits them to be sown and to spring up through his negligence. Woe to the indolent pastors, who permit the souls under their care, to be corrupted by error or sin!

The word ζιζανια, zizania, which is here translated tares, and which should rather be translated bastard or degenerate wheat, is found in no Greek writer: even those who have written expressly on botany and agriculture, have neither it, nor any thing like it. It is a Chaldee word, and its meaning must be sought in the Rabbinical writers. In a treatise in the Mishna called Kelayim, which treats expressly on different kinds of seeds, the word זונים zunim, or זונין zunin, is used for bastard or degenerated wheat: that which was wholly a right seed in the beginning, but afterwards became degenerate—the ear not being so large, nor the grains in such quantity as formerly, nor the corn so good in quality. In Psal. cxliv. 13. the words מזן אל זן mizzan al zan, are translated, all manner of store; but they properly signify, from species to species: might not the Chaldee word זונין zunin, and the Greek word ζιζανια zizania, come from the Psalmist's זנן zanzan, which might have signified a mixture of grain of any kind, and be here used to point out the mixing bastard or degenerate wheat, among good seed wheat? The Persic translator renders it تلخ دانه telkh daneh, bitter grain, but it seems to signify merely degenerate wheat. This interpretation throws much light on the scope and design of the whole passage. Christ seems to refer first, to the origin of evil—God sowed good seed in his field; made man in his own image and likeness:—but the enemy, the devil, (ver. 39.) corrupted this good seed, and caused it to degenerate. Secondly, he seems to refer to the state of the Jewish people: God had sowed them at first, wholly a right seed, but now they were become utterly degenerate, and about to be plucked up and destroyed by the Roman armies, which were the angels or messenger's of God's justice, whom he had commissioned to sweep these rebellious people from the face of the land. Thirdly, he seems to refer also to the state in which the world shall be found, when he comes to judge it. The righteous and the wicked shall be permitted to grow together, till God comes to make a full and final separation.

tares also.] Satan has a shoot of iniquity for every shoot of grace; and when God revives his work, Satan revives his also. No marvel, therefore, if we find scandals arising suddenly to discredit a work of grace, where God has begun to pour out his Spirit.

Verse 27. So the servants—said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow] A faithful and vigilant minister of Christ fails not to discover the evil, to lament it, and to address himself to God by prayer, in order to find out the cause of it, and to receive from him proper information how to behave on this occasion.

Verse 28. An enemy hath done this.] It is the interest of Satan to introduce hypocrites and wicked persons into religious societies, in order to discredit the work of God, and to favour his own designs.

Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? A zeal which is rash and precipitate, is as much to be feared as the total lack of strict discipline.

Verse 29. But he said, Nay] God judges quite otherwise than men, of this mixture of good and evil in the world: he knows the good which he intends to produce from it; and how far his patience towards the wicked should extend, in order to their conversion, or the farther sanctification of the righteous. Men often persecute a true Christian, while they intend only to prosecute an impious person. "A zeal for the extirpation of heretics and wicked men," said a pious papist, "not regulated by these words of our blessed Saviour, allows no time for the one to grow strong in goodness, or to the other, to forsake their evil courses. They are of a spirit very opposite to his, who care not if they root up the wheat, provided they can but gather up the tares." The zeal which leads persons to persecute others for religious opinions, is not less a seed of the devil, than a bad opinion itself is.

Verse 30. Let both grow together] Though every minister of God should separate from the church of Christ every incorrigible sinner, yet he should proceed no farther—the man is not to be persecuted in his body or goods, because he is not sound in the faith—GOD tolerates him; so should men. False doctrines are against God—he alone is the judge and punisher of them—man has no right to interfere in this matter. They who burnt Vanini for atheism, usurped the seat of judgment, and thus proved themselves to be not less a diabolic seed, than the person they thus, without God's leave, hurried into eternity. MARY, of execrable memory, and the inquisitorial tormentors she employed, were all of this diabolic sowing. See more on this parable at ver. 37, &c.

Verse 31. The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed] This parable is a representation of the progress of the gospel in the world; and of the growth of grace in the soul. That grace which leads the soul to the fulness of glory, may begin, and often does, in a single good desire—a wish to escape hell, or a desire to enjoy God in heaven.

Verse 32. Which indeed is the least of all seeds] That is, of all those seeds which produce plants, whose stems and branches, according to the saying of the botanists, are apt δενδρίζειν, arborescere, to grow into a ligneous or woody substance.

Becometh a tree] That is, it is not only the largest of plants which are produced from such small seeds, but partakes, in its substance, the close woody texture, especially in warm climates, were we are informed it grows to an almost incredible size. The Jerusalem Talmud, tract Peah. fol. 20. says, "There was a stalk of mustard in Sichin, from which sprang out three boughs; one of which being broken off, served to cover the tent of a potter, and produced three cabes of mustard seed. Rabbi Simeon ben Chalapha said, A stalk of mustard seed was in my field, into which I was wont to climb, as men are wont to climb into a fig-tree." See Lightfoot and Schoetgen. This may appear to be extravagant; and it is probable, that in the case of the three cabes of seed, there is considerable exaggeration: but if it had not been usual for this plant to grow to a very large size, such relations as these would not have appeared even in the Talmud; and the parable of our Lord sufficiently attests the fact. Some soils being more luxuriant than others, and the climate much warmer, raise the same plant to a size and perfection far beyond what a poorer soil, or a colder climate, can possibly do. Herodotus says, he has seen wheat and barley in the country about Babylon, which carried a blade full four fingers breadth: and that the millet and sesamum grew to an incredible size. I have myself seen a field of common cabbages in one of the Norman isles, each of which was from seven to nine feet in height; and one in the garden of a friend, which grew beside an apple-tree, though the latitude of the place is only about 48°. 13′. North, was fifteen feet high, the stem of which is yet remaining, (September 1798). These facts and several others which might be added, confirm fully the possibility of what our Lord says of the mustard-tree, however incredible such things may appear to those who are acquainted only with the productions of northern regions and cold climates.

Verse 33. The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven] On the nature and effects of leaven, see the note on Exod. xii. 8. As the property of leaven is to change, or assimilate to its own nature, the meal or dough with which it is mixed; so the property of the grace of Christ is to change the whole soul into its own likeness: and God intends that this principle should continue in the soul till all is leavened, till the whole bear the image of the heavenly, as it before bore the image of the earthly. Both these parables are prophetic, and were intended to shew, principally, how, from very small beginnings, the Gospel of Christ should pervade all the nations of the world, and fill them with righteousness and true holiness.

Verse 34. All these things spake Jesus in parables] Christ descends from divine mysteries to parables, in order to excite us to raise our minds, from and through natural things, to the great God, and the operations of his grace and Spirit. Divine things cannot be taught to man but through the medium of earthly things. If God should speak to us in that language which is peculiar to heaven, clothing those ideas which angelic minds form, how little should we comprehend of the things thus described? How great is our privilege in being thus taught! Heavenly things, in the parables of Christ, assume to themselves a body, and thus render themselves palpable.

Verse 35. By the prophet] As the quotation is taken from Psal. lxxviii. 2. which is attributed to Asaph, he must be the prophet who is meant in the text; and, indeed, he is expressly called a prophet, 1 Chron. xxv. 2. Several MSS. have Ησαιου, Isaiah; but this is a manifest error. Jerom supposes that Asaph was first in the text, and that some ignorant transcriber, not knowing who this Asaph was, inserted the word Isaiah; and thus, by attempting to remove an imaginary error, made a real one.

Verse 36. Jesus—went into the house: and his disciples came] Circumstances of this kind should not pass unnoticed: they are instructive and important. Those who attend only to the public preaching of the Gospel of God, are not likely to understand fully the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. To understand clearly the purport of the divine message, a man must come to God by frequent, fervent, secret prayer. It is thus that the word of God sinks into the heart, is watered, and brings forth much fruit.

Declare unto us (φρασον, explain,) to us the parable of the tares of the field.] To what has already been spoken on this parable, the following general exposition may be deemed a necessary appendage:

I. What is the cause of EVIL in the world?

1. We must allow, that God, who is infinite in holiness, purity, and goodness, could not have done it. Nothing can produce what is not in itself. This is a maxim which every man subscribes to: God then could not have produced sin, forasmuch as his nature is infinite goodness and holiness. He made man at first in his own image, a transcript of his own purity: and since sin entered into the world, He has done every thing consistent with his own perfections, and the freedom of the that soweth the good seed is the Son of man;

38 [c] The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are [b] the children of the wicked one;

39 The enemy that sowed them is the devil; [c] the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels.

40 As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world.

41 The Son of man shall send forth his angels, [d] and they shall gather out of his kingdom all [e] things that offend, and them which do iniquity;

42 [f] And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: [g] there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

43 [h] Then shall the righteous shine forth as human mind, to drive it out; and to make and keep man holy.

2. After a thousand volumes are written on the origin of evil, we shall just know as much of it as Christ has told us here—An enemy hath done it; and this enemy is the Devil, verse 39.

1. This enemy is represented as a deceitful enemy: a friend in appearance, soliciting to sin, by pleasure, honour, riches, &c.

2. A vigilant enemy. While men sleep he watches, ver. 25.

3. A hidden or secret enemy. After having sown his seed, he disappears, ver. 25. Did he appear as himself, few would receive solicitations to sin; but he is seldom discovered in evil thoughts, unholy desires, flattering discourses, bad books, &c.

II. Why was evil permitted to enter into the world?

1. There are doubtless sufficient reasons in the Divine Mind for its permission; which, connected with his infinite essence, and extending to eternity, are not only unfathomable by us, but also, from their nature, incommunicable to men.

2. But it may be justly said, that hereby many attributes of the divine Nature become manifest, which otherwise could not have been known; such as mercy, compassion, long-suffering, &c. All of which endear the Deity to men, and perfect the felicity of those who are saved.

III. But why does he suffer this mixture of the good and bad seed now?

1. Because of the necessary dependance of one part of the creation on the other. Were the wicked all rooted up, society must fail—the earth be nearly desolated—noxious things greatly multiplied—and the small remnant of the godly, not being able to stand against the onsets of wild beasts, &c must soon be extirpated, and then adieu to the œconomy of grace.

2. Did not the wicked exist, there would be no room for the exercise of many of the graces of the Spirit, on which our spiritual perfection greatly depends.

3. Nor could the grace of God be so manifest in supporting and saving the righteous; and consequently could not have that honour which now it justly claims.

4. Were not this evil tolerated, how could the wicked be converted? the bastard wheat, by being transplanted to a better soil, may become good wheat; so sinners may be engrafted in Christ, and become sons of God through faith in his name; for the long-suffering of God leads multitudes to repentance.

IV. Observe the end of the present state of things:

1. The wicked shall be punished, and the righteous rewarded.

The wicked are termed bastard wheat—the children of the wicked one, ver. 38. the very seed of the serpent.

Observe the place in which the wicked shall be punished,—a FURNACE. The instrument of this punishment, FIRE. This is an allusion to a punishment inflicted only on those supposed to be the very worst of criminals. See Dan. iii. 6. They were cast into a burning fiery furnace. The effect of it, DESPAIR; weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth, ver. 42.

2. Observe the character and state of the righteous;

1. They are the children of the kingdom, a seed of God's sowing, ver. 38.

2. As to their persons, they shall be like the sun.

3. The place of their felicity shall be the kingdom of heaven: and,

4. The object of it, GOD in the relation of FATHER, ver. 43. This is a reference to Dan. xii. 2, 3.

Some learned men are of opinion, that the whole of this parable refers to the Jewish state and people; and that the words συντελεια του αιωνος, which are commonly translated the end of the world, should be rendered the end of the age, viz. the end of the Jewish polity. That the words have this meaning in other places, there can be no doubt; and this may be their primary meaning here; but there are others matters in the parable which agree far better with the consummation of all things, than with the end of the Jewish dispensation and polity. See on Mark iv. 29.

Verse 44. The kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field] θησαυρῳ κεκρυμμενῳ, to a hidden treasure. We are not to imagine that the treasure here mentioned, and to which the Gospel salvation is likened, means a pot or chest of money hidden in the field, but rather a gold or silver mine, which he who found out, could not get at, or work, without turning up the field, and for this purpose he bought it. Mr. Wakefield's observation is very just; "There is no sense in the purchase of a field for a pot of money, which he might have carried away with him very readily, and as honestly too, as by overreaching the owner by an unjust purchase."

He hideth—i. e. he kept secret, told the discovery to no person, till he had bought the field.—From this view of the subject, the translation of this verse, given above, will appear proper—a hidden treasure, when applied to a rich mine, is more proper than a treasure hid, which applies better to a pot of money deposited there, which I suppose was our translator's opinion:—and kept secret, or concealed, will apply better to the subject of his discovery till he made the purchase, than hideth, for which there could be no occasion, when the pot was already hidden, and the place known only to himself.

Our Lord's meaning seems to be this.

The kingdom of heaven,—the salvation provided by the gospel—is like a treasure—something of inestimable worth—hidden in a field; it is a rich mine, the veins of which run in all directions in the sacred Scriptures; therefore, the field must be dug up, the records of salvation diligently and carefully turned over, and searched. Which, when a man hath found—when a sinner is convinced that the promise of life eternal is to him; he kept secret—pondered the matter deeply in his heart; he examines the preciousness of the treasure, and counts the cost of purchase; for joy thereof—finding that this salvation is just what his needy soul requires, and what will make him presently and eternally happy, went and sold all that he had—renounces his sins, abandons his evil companions, and relinquishes all hope of salvation, through his own righteousness; and purchased that field—not merely bought the book for the sake of the salvation it described, but by the blood of the covenant, buys gold tried in the fire, white raiment, &c.; in a word, pardon and purity, which he receives from God for the sake of Jesus. We should consider the salvation of God, 1. As our only treasure, and value it above all the riches in the world. 2. Search for it in the Scriptures, till we fully understand its worth and excellence. 3. Deeply ponder it in the secret of our souls. 4. Part with all we have in order to get it. 5. Place our whole joy and felicity in it, and 6. Be always convinced that it must be bought, and that no price is accepted for it but the blood of the covenant; the sufferings and death of our only Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Verse 45. A merchant man, seeking goodly pearls] A story very like this is found in the Talmudical Tract Shabbath: "Joseph, who sanctified the sabbath, had a very rich neighbour; the Chaldeans said, All the riches of this man shall come to Joseph, who sanctifies the sabbath. To prevent this, the rich man went and sold all that he had, and bought a pearl, and went aboard of a ship; but the wind carried the pearl away, it fell into the sea, and was swallowed by a fish. This fish was caught, and the day before the sabbath it was brought into the market, and they proclaimed, Who wishes to buy this fish? The people said, Carry it to Joseph, the sanctifier of the sabbath, who is accustomed to buy things of great value. They carried it to him, and he bought it, and when he cut it up he found the pearl, and sold it for thirteen pounds weight of golden Denarii!" From some tradition of this kind our Lord might have borrowed the simile in this parable.

The meaning of this parable is the same with the other; and both were spoken to impress more forcibly this great truth on the souls of the people: eternal salvation from sin and its consequences, is the supreme good of man, should be sought after above all things, and prized beyond all that God has made. Those merchants who compass sea and land for temporal gain, condemn the slothfulness of the majority of those called Christians, who, though they confess that this salvation is the most certain, and the most excellent, of all treasures, yet seek worldly possessions in preference to it! Alas for him who expects to find any thing more amiable than God, more worthy to fill his heart, and more capable of making him happy!

47 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and [a] gathered of every kind:

48 Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away.

a Ch. 22. 10.——b ch. 25. 32.

c Ver. 42.——d Cant. 7. 13.

Verse 47. Is like unto a net] A drag-net. This is the proper meaning of Σαγηνη, which the Latins translate verriculum, a sweep-net, Quod in aquam jacitur ad pisces comprehendendos: imprimis, cujus usus est extrahendis ils à fundo. MARTINIUS. Which is cast into the water to catch fish, and the particular use of which is to drag them up from the bottom. As this is dragged along it keeps gathering all in its way, both good and bad, small and great; and when it is brought to the shore, those which are proper for use are preserved, and those which are not, are either destroyed or thrown back into the water.

By the net may be understood the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom, which keeps drawing men into the profession of christianity, and into the fellowship of the visible church of Christ: By the sea may be represented that abyss of sin, error, ignorance and wickedness in which men live, and out of which they are drawn by the truth and Spirit of God, who cordially close in with the offers of salvation made to them in the preaching of the Gospel.

By drawing to shore may be represented the consummation of all things, see ver. 49. when a proper distinction shall be made between those who served God, and those who served him not; for many shall doubtless be found who shall bear the name without the nature of Christ. By picking out the good, and throwing away the bad, ver. 48. is meant that separation which God shall make between false and true professors, casting the former into hell, and bringing the latter to heaven.

Instead of τα καλα the good, the Cod. Bezæ, and five copies of the old antehieronimian, or Itala version, read τα καλλιστα the best, the very best:—every reader would naturally hope that this is not the true reading, or that it is not to be understood literally, as it seems to intimate that only the very best shall be at last saved.

It is probable that this parable also refers, in its primary meaning, to the Jewish state, and that when Christ should come to judge and destroy them by the Roman power, the genuine followers of Christ only should escape, and the rest be overwhelmed with the general destruction. See chap. xxiv. ver. 30, &c.

Verse 50. Into the furnace of fire] See the note on chap. viii. ver. 12.

Verse 51. Have ye understood all these things?] Divine truths must not be lightly passed over.—Our Lord's question here, shews them to be matters of the utmost weight and importance; and that they should be considered again and again, till they be thoroughly understood.

Verse 52. Every scribe] Minister of Christ—who is instructed—taught of God: in the kingdom of heaven—in the mysteries of the gospel of Christ;—out of his treasury—his granary, or store-house, things new and old—a Jewish phrase for great plenty. A small degree of knowledge is not sufficient for a preacher of the gospel. The Sacred Writings should be his treasure, and he should properly understand them. His knowledge does not consist in being furnished with a great variety of human learning, (though of this he should acquire as much as he can;) but his knowledge consists in being well instructed in the things concerning the kingdom of heaven, and the art of conducting men thither. Again, it is not enough for a man to have these advantages in possession: he must bring them forth, and distribute them abroad. A good pastor will not, like a miser, keep these things to himself to please his fancy; nor like a merchant traffic with them, to enrich himself, but like a bountiful father or householder, distribute them with a liberal though judicious hand, for the comfort and support of the whole heavenly family.

A preacher whose mind is well stored with divine truths, and who has a sound judgment, will suit his discourses to the circumstances and states of his hearers. He who preaches the same sermon to every congregation, gives the fullest proof that however well he may speak, he is not a scribe who is instructed in the kingdom of heaven. Some have thought that old and new things here, which imply the produce of the past, and the produce of the present year, may also refer to the old and new covenants—a proper knowledge of the Old Testament Scriptures, and of the doctrines of Christ as contained in the New. No man can properly understand the Old Testament but through the medium of the New, nor can the New be so forcibly or successfully applied to the conscience of a sinner, as through the medium of the Old. The Law is still a schoolmaster to lead men to Christ—by it, is the knowledge of sin, and without it, there can be no conviction—where it ends, the Gospel begins, as by the Gospel alone is salvation from sin. See the whole of the comment on the Pentateuch.

Verse 54. And when he was come into his own country] Probably Nazareth, where his parents lived, and where he had continued till his thirtieth year, though it appears he had a lodging in Peter's house, at Capernaum.

They were astonished] It appears hence, that our blessed Lord had lived in obscurity all the time above specified; for his countrymen appear not to have heard his doctrines, nor seen his miracles until now. 'Tis a melancholy truth, that those who should know Christ best, are often the most ignorant, of himself, the doctrines of his word, and the operations of his spirit.

Verse 55. Is not this the carpenter's son? Seven copies of the old Itala have, Is not this the son of JOSEPH the carpenter? But it is likely our Lord, during the thirty years of his abode at Nazareth, wrought at the same trade with Joseph; and perhaps this is what is intended, Luke ii. 51. He went down with them (his parents) to Nazareth, and was SUBJECT unto them. An honest trade is no discredit to any man.—He who spends his time in idleness, is fit for any business in which the Devil chooses to employ him.

Is not his mother—Mary, and his brethren James, &c.] This insulting question seems to intimate, that our Lord's family was a very obscure one; and that they were of small repute among their neighbours, except for their piety.

It is possible that brethren and sisters may mean here near relations, as the words are used among the Hebrews in this latitude of meaning; but I confess it does not appear to me likely. Why should the children of another family be brought in here to share a reproach, which it is evident was designed for Joseph the carpenter, Mary his wife, Jesus their son, and their other children? Prejudice apart, would not any person of plain common sense suppose from this account, that these were the children of Joseph and Mary, and the brothers and sisters of our Lord, according to the flesh. It seems odd that this should be doubted; but through an unaccountable prejudice, Papists and Protestants are determined to maintain as a doctrine, that on which the Scriptures are totally silent, viz. the perpetual virginity of the mother of our Lord. See ch. i. ver. 25.

Verse 57. And they were offended in him.] They took offence at him, εσκανδαλιζοντο εν αυτω, making the meanness of his family, the reason why they would not receive him as a prophet, though they were astonished at his wisdom, and at his miracles, ver. 54. So their pride and their envy were the causes of their destruction.

A prophet is not without honour] This seems to have been a proverbial mode of speech, generally true, but not without some exceptions. The apparent meanness of our Lord was one pretence why they rejected him; and yet, God, manifested in the flesh, humbling himself to the condition of a servant, and to the death of the cross, is the only foundation for the salvation of a lost world. Perhaps our Lord means, by prophet in this place, himself alone, as if he had said, My ministry is more generally reputed, and my doctrine better received in any other part of the land than in my own country, among my own relatives; because, knowing the obscurity of my birth, they can scarcely suppose that I have these thing from heaven.

Verse 58. And he did not many mighty works there, because of their unbelief.] Δυναμεις miracles. So the word is used, ch. vii. 22. xi. 20. Acts xix. 11. 1 Cor. xii. 28. Gal. iii. 5. Heb. ii. 4. The Septuagint translates נפלאות אל niphleoth el, the miraculous works of God, by δυναμεις κυριου.

Unbelief and contempt drive Christ out of the heart, as they did out of his own country. Faith seems to put the almighty power of God into the hands of men; whereas unbelief appears to tie up even the hands of the Almighty. A man, generally speaking, can do but little good among his relatives, because it is difficult for them to look with the eyes of faith upon one, whom they have been accustomed to behold with the eyes of the flesh.—QUESNEL.

A DISSERTATION ON THE NATURE AND USE OF PARABOLICAL WRITING.

As parables occupy so distinguished a place in the Old and New Testaments, especially in the latter, and as the most important information relative to the nature of God, the œconomy of heaven, the state of separate spirits, the punishment of the wicked, the beatification of the godly, and the doctrines of salvation, is conveyed to mankind in parables, it becomes a matter of the utmost importance, fully to understand their nature and their use.

The word Parable we have from the Greek Παραβολη, which comes either from παρα near, and βαλλω I cast or put, or παραβαλλειν to compare, properly different things together, so as to discover their relations and similarity; in order to which, the things to be compared are placed or put together, or near to each other, that by a close inspection of both, the relations and likenesses may be the more accurately ascertained.

Parable and proverb are called in Hebrew משל mashal, from משל mashal, to govern or rule, either because the parabolic and proverbial mode of instruction was of general use, and had a sort of universal presidency, which we know was the case among the Hebrews; or because a parable or proverb was the chief or principal illustrative point in the discourse. Hence we may discover the proper meaning of a proverb—it is a word or saying, forming a maxim for the government and regulation of a man's conduct in domestic, civil, religious, or political life.

Parable has been generally defined. "A comparison or similitude, in which one thing is compared with another, especially spiritual things with natural, by which means those spiritual things are better understood, and make a deeper impression on the attentive mind." This definition is pretty correct, especially in reference to the parables of our blessed Lord.—Or parable may be more generally defined, "A representation of any matter accommodated in the way of similitude to the real subject, in order to delineate its different parts with the greater force and perspicuity." This definition is applicable to parables in their more general and extended sense.

The method of conveying instruction by parables or moral fictions, sometimes in the form of similitudes, allegories, fables, or apologues, was very common, and in high esteem among all ancient nations: but the Asiatics used it most frequently, and brought it to a higher degree of perfection than any other people on the earth. The despotic and tyrannical nature of their government led them often to make use of this method. Reproof and censure, which it might not on many occasions be expedient or safe to deliver in explicit language, and which might exasperate, when too plainly spoken, rather than correct, could be conveyed with delicacy and success under the disguise of parable. Even to the present time, information concerning grievances, oppressive acts of government, &c. is conveyed to the despotic Asiatic rulers, under the guise of parable. An ancient instance of this we find in the reproof conveyed to the heart of David, by the prophet Nathan, in the parable of the poor man's ewe lamb.

Persons thus addressed, not perceiving at first the relation under this artificial form, to be directed against themselves, lost sight of their selfishness and prejudices, and were frequently induced, by their unsuspecting replies, to acknowledge the justice of the reprehension, and to pronounce the condemnation of their conduct, from their own mouth; as in the case of David above referred to. This therefore was one important use of this mode of instruction.

Though fable, similitude, and parable are nearly of the same nature, and have been indifferently applied to the same purposes; yet it may not be amiss to examine the meaning of each distinctly.

SIMILITUDE implies a proper resemblance between two subjects, the one well known, the other not at all, or less known; the leading properties of the one serving clearly to illustrate those of the other. Five rules have been given by the ancients, for the regulation of similitudes.

1. The first is, that the similitude must be clearer than the subject it is brought to illustrate.

2. That it be not in general derived from common or well known things, which are in themselves uninteresting; as it is well known, the more novelty a thing possesses, the more it is calculated to excite the attention and impress the mind.

3. It should not be false in itself, as in this case the mind revolts not only against the thing itself, but against the conclusion drawn from it. On this rule I shall take the liberty of making the following observations: Several of the ancients illustrated and endeavoured to prove the truth and certainty of the resurrection, by the history of the phœnix, a bird supposed to be produced in Arabia, once in one hundred years; there never being more than one at a time. It is reported, that when this bird finds its end approaching, it builds itself a nest of the most fragrant spices and aromatic plants, which being set on fire by the rays of the sun, the bird is consumed in it; but from its ashes a worm or grub is formed, out of which another phœnix, in process of time, arises; others say that it dies in the nest, and a grub is formed out of the marrow of its bones. Both these relations are equally untrue. Herodotus, Dion Cassius, Tacitus, and Pliny, mention this fabulous animal; and I have met with this account seriously produced by Clemens Alexandrinus, and other Christian fathers, to prove the resurrection of the body. Now it is well known no such bird ever did, or ever could exist; that the supposed fact is impossible, and that the conclusion drawn from it, is not only not solid and convincing, but absurd, because the premises are all false. The same objections would lie against a similitude which is dubious in its nature; because if it be brought to enforce conviction, and impress truth, this is impossible; as the conclusion must rest on the premises. If, then, the premises be dubious, the conclusion will be uncertain; and consequently, the hesitancy of the mind must necessarily continue.

In like manner, the similitude must be useless if it be absurd; for as soon as the mind perceives this, it becomes armed both against the similitude and the subject it was intended to illustrate or prove.

4. A fourth rule of similitude is, that the mind should gain real information, and useful knowledge from it. Let the similitude be ever so true, clear, and correct; yet if it convey no more information than was before known, it is useless; and the time is lost which was employed in proposing it.

5. It should be calculated to make deep impressions on the mind, by leaving such images on the imagination as may become, in all cases to which they apply, motives of conduct. As many preachers and public speakers delight in the use of similitudes, I thought it necessary to make these observations on the subject, that we might be preserved from copying bad examples, or, that if we followed the custom at all, we might make it truly useful, by subjecting it to its proper rules.

FABLE is very nearly allied to similitude and parable, and has been applied exactly in the same way, to convey lessons of moral instruction by pleasing images and interesting dialogue.

But fable, in its nature differs widely from the others. Every subject of inanimate creation may be employed by similitude and parable; but the grand subjects in fable are borrowed from the animate and rational creation only. Of this sort are the Heetopades commonly called the Fables of Pilpay, written originally in Sanscrit, the oldest fables, probably, in the world; and the fables of Lockman, the Arabian Æsop. In all these, human actions, speech, and intelligence, are transferred to brute and irrational animals.

Though the former methods have been long, often, and successfully used to convey miscellaneous instruction; yet the parabolic method has been chiefly employed to illustrate divine subjects, and to convey instruction to the heart on those matters which concern the salvation of the soul.

The most important truths are by our Lord conveyed both to the disciples and to the multitude in parables: not that they might not be discovered, but that they might be sought earnestly after. In this, our Lord, who was well acquainted with all the springs and secret movements of human nature, consulted a well known propensity of the mind, which leads a person always to esteem that most, which is, or appears to be a discovery of his own. Christ speaks a parable, and in it gives a clue by which we may discover the will of God. He that loves his soul's prosperity, takes up the thread, and guided by it through all the labyrinth of error, he safely arrives at the fountain of truth. We must not, however, suppose that the word parable always conveys the same meaning: I have taken some pains on this subject, and if I mistake not, I find the word has the ten following significations in Scripture:

1. It means a simple comparison, (as I have already noted when defining the Greek word.) Which comparison is intended to shew the relation between two dissimilar things; or, how one fact or circumstance may be fitly introduced to illustrate and explain another. Such is that comparison of our Lord, between the state of the Jewish nation, and that of the world in the days of Noah, mentioned Matt. xxiv. 32—38.

2. It signifies an obscure similitude, such as that mentioned Matt. xv. 13—15. where the whole system of Pharisaism, with all its secular and spiritual influence, is represented under the notion of a plantation not planted by God, and which was shortly to be rooted up.

3. A simple allegory where one thing is represented by another, the leading circumstances and principal design of that one, being produced to illustrate and explain the design and leading circumstances of the other. Such is our Lord's parable concerning those invited to a marriage supper; of the sower—tares and wheat—grain of mustard seed—leaven—hidden treasure—precious pearl—drag-net, &c. contained in the preceding Chapter, Matt. xiii.

4. A maxim, or wise sentence, to direct and govern a man in civil or religious life. In this sense we have already seen the Hebrew word משל mashal employed. In 1 Kings iv. 32. we are informed, that Solomon spoke 3000 of this kind of parables or proverbs; and in this sense the original word is frequently used.

5. It means a by-word, or proverb of reproach; such God threatened to make the disobedient Jewish people.—See 2 Chron. vii. 20. I will pluck them up by the roots out of my land—and this house I will cast out of my sight, and will make it a proverb and a by-word among all nations, where the original word for proverb is משל mashal. Such we may conceive the following to be: As rebellious as Corah—as covetous as Judah—as wicked as the Jews—as bad as the Devil. In all which parables or proverbs, respect should be paid to the similitude between the object of comparison, and the thing with which it is compared.—In this sense it is used Psalm xliv. 14. lxix. 11. Jerem. xxiv. 9.

6. As parables, proverbs, and useful maxims for the regulation of life, and instruction in righteousness, had, before the Babylonish captivity, lost all their power and influence among the wicked Jews; so they were generally disregarded, and those who made use of them, became objects of reproach and contempt; hence, parable, at that time at least, was used to signify a frivolous uninteresting discourse. In this sense alone, I suppose the word to be used, Ezek. xx. 49. "Then I said, Ah Lord God! They say of me, Doth he not speak parables?" i. e. he delivers frivolous discourses, of no weight or importance.

7. It means a simple proverb or adage, where neither comparison nor similitude was intended: such as that mentioned by our Lord, Luke iv. 23. "And he said, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, την παραβολην ταυτην, this parable, Physician heal thyself." In this, neither comparison nor likeness is intended. The same kind of a proverb is found Luke vi. 39. "Can the blind lead the blind," &c.

8. It means a type, illustration, or representation. See Heb. ix. 9. where the first tabernacle is said to have been a figure, παραβολη, a parable, for the time then present; i. e. a thing which, from the peculiar use to which it was appropriated, shadowed forth or represented the human body of our Lord, and the Christian church which he should establish.

9. It means a daring exploit, an unusual and severe trial, or a case of imminent danger and jeopardy. In these senses it is used by some of the best and most correct Greek writers, such as Polybius and Xenophon; and by the best Greek Lexicographers, such as Hesychius and Suidas: with whom παραβολος signifies a daring, bold, rash person; and παραβολα, things extremely dangerous. In this sense the verb is evidently used 2 Mac. xiv. 38. where it is said, that Razis, one of the Jewish elders, did "boldly jeopard (παραβεβλημενος) his body and life with all vehemency, for the religion of the Jews." I know no place in the Sacred Writings, in which it has this sense, unless it be in Heb. xi. 19. where, speaking of the intended sacrifice of Isaac, and his rescue, Abraham is said to have rescued him from the most imminent death, εν παραβολη, which we translate, in a figure. Now, if we may suppose that the death here referred to, is not that metaphorical death implied in the deadness of Sarah's womb, and the superannuation of Abraham, but the imminent death to which he was exposed when Abraham drew his knife to slay his son, Gen. xxii. 10. and was only prevented by the sudden and miraculous interposition of God; then it is probable, that the word here has the above meaning, which, I must own, I think likely; if so, the text may be read thus: "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: of whom it was said, In Isaac shall thy seed be called; accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead, from whence he received him, εν παραβολη, he being in the most imminent danger of losing his life."

10. It signifies a very ancient and obscure prophecy, Psal. xlix. 4. I will incline mine ear to a parable: I will open my dark saying upon the harp. Likewise in Psal. lxxviii. I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark sayings of old. Probably this kind of dark, ancient, enigmatical prophecy, is what is spoken of Prov. i. 6. To understand a proverb (or parable) and the interpretation; the words of the wise and their dark sayings. Now a proverb, in the common acceptation of that word, is neither dark, nor requires any particular interpretation; it being a plain maxim, easy to be understood by the mass of the people, for whose instruction it is chiefly designed. But parable, in this sense, evidently refers to the ancient prophecies, which were delivered concerning Christ and the nature of his kingdom. And to this very subject, the words are applied and quoted by the Evangelist Matthew in the preceding chapter. (xiii. 35.)

Having traced the word parable through its different meanings in the Sacred Writings, it may be now necessary to enquire for what purpose our blessed Lord used that mode of speech so frequently: as many have supposed from his own words, Matt. xiii. 11—13. that he addressed the people in parables, merely that they might not understand. To you, said he, addressing his disciples, it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given: therefore I speak to them in parables, &c. Now, to do justice to this passage, we must observe, that by mysteries here, we are to understand not only things concerning the scheme of salvation which had not been as yet fully revealed; but also the prophetic declarations concerning the future state of the Christian church, as they are signified by the different parables mentioned in the succeeding parts of the chapter. It was not given to THEM to know the purport and design of these things: "They," said our Lord, "are gross of heart:" they are earthly and sensual, and do not improve the light they have received; so that when many of them might have been preachers of this truth to others, they are found destitute of salvation themselves, notwithstanding the means of it were all within their power: but, said he, "to YOU it is given:" because I have appointed you, not only to be the first preachers of the Gospel to sinners, but also the persons who shall transmit accounts of all these things to posterity. The knowledge of these mysteries, in the first instance, could be given only to a few; but when these faithfully wrote and published what they had heard and seen unto the world, then the science of salvation being fully revealed, was addressed to all.

From ver. 17. of the same chapter we learn, that many prophets and righteous men had desired to see and hear these things, but had not that privilege: to them it was not given: not because God designed to exclude them from salvation, but because He who knew all things, knew either that they were not proper persons; or, that that was not the proper time: for the choice of the PERSONS by whom, and the choice of the TIME in which it is most proper to reveal divine things, must ever rest with the all-wise God.

But it is not intimated that our Lord spoke to the Jews in parables, that they might not understand: the very reverse, I think, is plainly intended. It was to lead them by a familiar and appropriate mode of instruction, into the knowledge of God, and the interests of their souls. I speak to them, said he, in parables, i. e. natural representations of spiritual truths; that they might be allured to enquire, and to find out the spirit which was hidden under the letter. Because, said he, seeing the miracles which I have wrought, they see not, i. e. the end for which I have wrought them. And hearing my doctrines, they hear not, so as to profit by what is spoken: neither do they understand, ουδε συνιουσι, they do not lay their hearts to it, so as to consider it with that deep attention which such momentous truths required. But that they might not continue in their ignorance, and die in their sins, he adds parable to parable, to make the whole science of salvation as plain and as intelligible as possible. Is not this obviously our Lord's meaning? Who that is not most miserably warped and begloomed by some Jewish exclusive system of salvation, can suppose that the wise, the holy, the benevolent Christ, would employ his time in speaking enigmatically to the people, on purpose that they might not understand what was spoken? Could the God of truth and sincerity act thus? If he had designed that they should continue in darkness, he might have saved his time and labour, and not spoken at all, which would have as effectually answered the same purpose, viz. that of leaving them in destructive ignorance, as his speaking in such a way as should render his meaning incomprehensible.

On the whole I conclude, that the grand object of parabolical writing is not to conceal the truth, but to convey information to the hearers, in the most concise, appropriate, impressive, and effectual manner.

In preaching on parables and similitudes, great care should be taken to discover their object and design; and those grand and leading circumstances by which the author illustrates his subject. There are few if any parables, whose every circumstance was designed to apply to the subject, in reference to which they were proposed. Maimonides, in his Moreh Nevochim, gives an excellent rule on this head: "Fix it as a principle," says he, "to attach yourself to the grand object of the parable, without attempting to make a particular application of all the circumstances and terms which it comprehends." This shews us, that we should not attempt to find a spiritual meaning, or pointed reference in all the parts of the parable, to the subject which it is intended to illustrate. And this maxim of Maimonides is the more to be regarded, because it comes from a person who was perfectly well acquainted with the subject; and who lived, if I might so term it, in the very country of parables, and was best qualified to decide on their use in the Sacred Writings, and the proper mode of interpretation. By not attending to this rule, many have disgraced both themselves and the Scriptures. The most dignified subjects in such hands, have been rendered contemptible by their injudicious modes of elucidation. See the notes at the beginning of this chapter.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIV.

Verse 1. Herod the tetrarch] This was Herod Antipas, the son of Herod the Great. See the notes on chap. ii. 1. where an account is given of the Herod family. The word tetrarch, properly signifies a person who rules over the fourth part of a country; but it is taken in a more general sense by the Jewish writers, meaning sometimes a governor simply, or a king; see ver. 9. The estates of Herod the Great were not, at his death, divided into four tetrarchies, but only into three: one was given by the emperor Augustus to Archelaus; the second to Herod Antipas, the person in the text; and the third to Philip; all three, sons of Herod the Great.

Verse 2. This is John the Baptist] Ουτος εστιν Ιωαννης ο βαπτιστης Whom I beheaded. These words are added here by the Codex Bezæ and several others, by the Saxon, and five copies of the Itala.—See the power of conscience! He is miserable because he is guilty; being continually under the dominion of self-accusation, reproach, and remorse. No need for the Baptist now: conscience performs the office of ten thousand, accusers! But to complete the misery, a guilty conscience offers no relief from God—points out no salvation from sin.

He is risen from the dead] From this we may observe, 1. That the resurrection of the dead was a common opinion

3 ¶ [a] For Herod had laid hold on John, and bound him, and put him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife.

4 For John said unto him, [b] It is not lawful for thee to have her.

5 And when he would have put him to death, he feared the multitude, [c] because they counted him as a prophet.

6 But when Herod's birthday was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced [d] before them, and pleased Herod.

7 Whereupon he promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask.

8 And she, being before instructed of her mother, said, Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger.

9 And the king was sorry: nevertheless for the oath's sake, and them which sat with him at meat, he commanded it to be given her.

10 And he sent, and beheaded John in the prison.

11 And his head was brought in a charger, among the Jews: and 2. that the materiality of the soul made no part of Herod's creed. Bad and profligate as he was, it was not deemed by him a thing impossible with God to raise the dead: and the spirit of the murdered Baptist had a permanent resurrection in his guilty conscience.

Verse 3. For Herodias' sake] This infamous woman was the daughter of Aristobulus and Berenice, and grand-daughter of Herod the Great. Her first marriage was with Herod Philip, her uncle, by whom she had Salome: some time after, she left her husband, and lived publicly with Herod Antipas her brother-in-law, who had been before married to the daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia Petræa. As soon as Aretas understood that Herod had determined to put away his daughter, he prepared to make war on him: the two armies met, and that of Herod was cut to pieces by the Arabians; and this, Josephus says, was supposed to be a judgment of God on him for the murder of John the Baptist. See the account in Josephus, Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 7.

Verse 4. For John said unto him, It is not lawful for thee to have her.] Here is an instance of zeal, fidelity, and courage, highly worthy of imitation. Plainness, mildness, and modesty, are qualifications necessary to be observed when we reprove the great. The best service a subject can render his prince is, to lay before him in the plainest but most respectful manner, what the law of God requires of him, and what it forbids. How unutterable must the punishment of those be, who are chaplains to princes, or great men, and who either flatter them in their vices, or wink at their sins!

Verse 5. He feared the multitude] Miserable prince! who fears more to offend his people, than to sin against his God, by shedding innocent blood. When a man resists sin only by the help of human motives, he cannot long defend himself.

Verse 6. Herod's birthday] Either the day in which he was born, or the day on which he began to reign; for both were termed birthdays. See 1 Sam. xiii. 1. and Hos. vii. 5. The kings of Persia were accustomed to reject no petition that was preferred to them during the entertainment. See Herodotus in Calliope, and Esther v. 3.

The daughter—danced] This was Salome, mentioned before. Danced—by a literal rendering of the saltavit of the Vulgate in my old MS. of the English Bible, the whole of this business seems to be treated with sovereign contempt: for thus says the Translator, Shee leped in the myddle.

Verse 8. Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger.] The word charger formerly signified a large dish, bowl, or drinking cup: the Saxon has ðiɼce, a dish, Tindal, a platter; any thing is better than charger, which never conveyed much meaning, and now conveys none. The Evangelist says, she was instructed before by her mother, to ask the Baptist's head! What a most infernal mother, to give such instructions to her child! and what a promising daughter to receive them! What a present for a young lady! the bloody head of the murdered forerunner of Jesus! and what a gratification for an adulterous wife, and incestuous mother! The disturber of her illicit pleasures, and the troubler of her brother-husband's conscience, is no more! Short, however, was their glorying! See on ver. 3.

Verse 9. The king was sorry] He knew John to be a righteous man, and at first did many things gladly, which John told him it was his duty to perform: Mark vi. 20.

Nevertheless for the oath's sake] The OATHS, ὁρκους,—he had probably sworn again and again—one sin begets many.

And them which sat with him at meat] Who were probably such as himself, and would have considered it a breach of honour, if he had not fulfilled his sworn promise: he therefore commanded it to be given!

Verse 11. His head was—given to the damsel: and she brought it to her mother.] There is no person so revengeful as a lascivious woman when reproved and blamed. A preacher and given to the damsel: and she brought it to her mother.

12 And his disciples came, and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus.

13 ¶ [a] When Jesus heard of it, he departed thence by ship into a desert place apart: and when the people had heard thereof, they followed him on foot out of the cities.

14 And Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and [b] was moved with compassion toward them, and he healed their sick.

of the Gospel has most to fear from this quarter:—the first of this profession lost his life for the sake of truth and chastity; and others, especially those who have any thing to do with men in power, who are profligates, may learn what they are to expect in return for a faithful discharge of their duty.

Verse 12. His disciples came, and took up the BODY] The HEAD was in the possession of Herodias, who, 'tis probable, took a diabolic pleasure in viewing that speechless mouth, which had often been the cause of planting thorns in her criminal bed; and in offering indignities to that tongue from which she could no longer dread a reproof. Her character justifies every bad conjecture that can well be formed on this head: and St. Jerome positively says, that when she got it, she drew out the tongue, and thrust it through with her bodkin. On the whole we may observe,

That the diversions of the world, feasting and dancing, are but two commonly the occasions of sin. After so fatal an example as this, can we doubt whether balls are not snares for souls; destructive of chastity, modesty, and sometimes even of humanity itself; and a pernicious invention to excite the most criminal passions? How many on such occasions have sacrificed their chastity, and then to hide their shame have stifled the feelings of the human being and the parent, and by direct or indirect means, have put a period to the innocent offspring of their criminal connections! Unhappy mother, who exposes her daughter to the same shipwreck herself has suffered, and makes her own child the instrument of her lust and revenge! Behold here, ye professedly religious parents, the fruits of what was doubtless called in those times, elegant breeding and accomplished dancing! Fix your eyes on that vicious mother, that prostituted daughter, and especially on that murdered ambassador of God, and then send your children to genteel boarding-schools, to learn the accomplishment of DANCING! where the fear of God makes no part of the education.

Verse 13. When Jesus heard of it, he departed thence] Had the blessed Jesus continued in that place, 'tis probable the hand of this impure female murderer would have been stretched out against him also: he withdrew therefore, not through fear, but to teach his messengers rather to yield to the storm, than expose themselves to destruction, where, from circumstances, the case is evidently hopeless.

The people—followed him on foot] πεζη, or, by land, which is a common acceptation of the word in the best Greek writers. See many examples in Kypke.

Verse 14. Jesus—was moved with compassion] Εσπλαγχνισθη, he was moved with tender compassion, so I think the word should in general be translated: see the note on chap. ix. 36. As a verb, it does not appear to have been used by any but ecclesiastical writers. It always intimates, that motion of the bowels, accompanied with extreme tenderness and concern, which is felt at the sight of the miseries of another.

Verse 15. Send the multitude away, that they may go—and buy] The disciples of Christ are solicitous for the people's temporal as well as spiritual welfare: and he is not worthy to be called a minister of Christ, who does not endeavour to promote both, to the uttermost of his power. The preaching of Christ must have been accompanied with uncommon power to these people's souls, to have induced them to leave their homes, to follow him from village to village, for they could never hear enough; and to neglect to make use of any means for the support of their lives, so that they might still have the privilege of hearing him. When a soul is either well replenished with the bread of life, or hungry after it, the necessities of the body are, for the time, little regarded.

Verse 16. They need not depart] He that seeks first the kingdom of heaven, is sure to have every temporal requisite. When a man ensures the first, God always takes care to throw the other into the bargain. He who has an interest in Jesus, has in him an inexhaustible treasure of spiritual and temporal good. Though the means by which man may help his fellows, have failed, we are not to suppose that the bounty of God is exhausted. When we are about to give up all hope of farther supply, the gracious word of Christ still holds good—They need not depart; give ye them to eat.

feeble ministering servants feed so many hungry souls as attend thy word! Begin, at the command of Jesus—make the attempt—divide what you have—and the bread of God shall be multiplied in your hands, and all shall eat and be satisfied.

Verse 17. We have here but five loaves, and two fishes.] When we are deeply conscious of our own necessities, we shall be led to depend on Jesus with a firmer faith. God often permits his servants to be brought low, that they may have repeated opportunities of proving the kindness and mercy of their gracious Lord and Master.

Verse 18. Bring them hither to me.] No creature of God should be considered as good or safe without the blessing of God in it. If thou have but even a handful of meal and a few herbs, bring them to Christ by prayer and faith, and he will make them a sufficiency for thy body and a sacrament to thy soul. Let the minister of the Gospel attend also to this—let him bring all his gifts and graces to his Maker—let him ever know, that his word can be of no use, unless the blessing of Christ be in it.

Verse 19. And took the five loaves, &c.] This was the act of the father of a family among the Jews—his business it was to take the bread into his hands, and render thanks to God, before any of the family was permitted to taste of it.

Looking up to heaven] To teach us to acknowledge GOD as the Supreme Good, and fountain of all excellence.

He blessed] The word God should, I think, be rather inserted here than the word them, because it does not appear that it was the loaves which Christ blessed, but that God who had provided them: and this indeed was the Jewish custom, not to bless the food, but the God who gave it. However, there are others who believe the loaves are meant, and that he blessed them, in order to multiply them. The Jewish form of blessing, or what we term grace, before and after meat, was as follows:

BEFORE MEAT.

ברוך אתה אלהינו מלך העולם המוצא לחם מן הארץ:

Baruc attah Elohinoo melec haôlam hamotse lechem min haarets:

Blessed art thou, our God, king of the universe, who bringest bread out of the earth!

AFTER MEAT.

ברוך אלהינו מלך חעולם בורא פרי הגפן:

Baruc Elohinoo melec haôlam boré peri hagephen;

Blessed be our God, the king of the universe, the creator of the fruit of the vine!

And brake] We read often in the Scripture of breaking bread, never of cutting it: because the Jews made their bread broad and thin like cakes, and to divide such, being very brittle, there was no need of a knife.

Verse 20. They did all eat, and were filled] Little or much is the same in the hands of Jesus Christ.—Here was an incontestible miracle—five thousand men, besides women and children, fed with five cakes and two fishes! here must have been a manifest creation of substance—the parts of the bread were not dilated to make them appear large, nor was there any delusion in the eating—for they all ate, and were all filled. Here then is one miracle of our Lord attested by at least five thousand persons! But did not this creation of bread prove the unlimited power of Jesus? Undoubtedly: and nothing less than eternal power and god-head could have effected it.

They took up—twelve baskets] It was customary for many of the Jews to carry a basket with them at all times: and Mr. Wakefield's conjecture here is very reasonable:—"By the number here particularized, it should seem, that each Apostle filled his own bread basket." Some think, that the Jews carried baskets in commemoration of their Egyptian bondage, when they were accustomed to carry the clay and stubble to make the bricks, in a basket that was hung about their necks. This seems to be what Sidonius Appollinaris refers to in the following words, Epist. vii. 6. Ordinis res est, ut, (dum in allegorica versamur Ægypto) Pharao incedat cum diademate, Israelita cum COPHINO.

These words of Alcimus Avitus, lib. v. ver. 30. are to the same effect:

Servitii longo lassatam pondere plebem,
Oppressos cophinis humeros, attritaque collo.

It appears that a basket about the neck, and a bunch of hay, were the general characteristic of this long enslaved and oppressed people, in the different countries where they sojourned.

Juvenal also mentions the basket and the hay:

Gifford.

The simple reason why the Jews carried baskets with them appears to be this:—When they went into Gentile countries, they carried their own provision with them, as they were afraid of being polluted, by partaking of the meat of heathens. This also obliged them probably to carry hay with them to sleep on: and it is to this, in all likelihood, that Juvenal alludes.

After five thousand were fed, twelve times as much, at least, remained, as the whole multitude at first sat down to! See the note on Luke ix. 16.

Verse 22. Jesus constrained his disciples to get into a ship] Either they were afraid to return into the jurisdiction of Herod, or, they were unwilling to embark without their Lord and Protector; and would not enter their boat till Christ had commanded them to embark.

From this verse it appears that Christ gave some advices to the multitudes after the departure of his disciples, which he did not wish them to hear.

Unto the otherside] Towards Capernaum, ver. 34. John vi. 16, 17. or Bethsaida, see on Mark vi. 45.

Verse 23. He went up into a mountain apart, to pray] He whom God has employed in a work of mercy, had need to return, by prayer, as speedily, to his Maker, as he can, lest he should be tempted to value himself on account of that in which he has no merit—for the good that is done upon earth, the Lord doth it alone. Some make this part of our Lord's conduct emblematic of the spirit and practice of prayer: and observe, that the proper dispositions and circumstances for praying well, are: 1. Retirement from the world. 2. Elevation of the heart to God. 3. Solitude. 4. The silence and quiet of the night. It is certain that in this also Christ has left us an example, that we should follow his steps. Retirement from the world is often a means of animating, supporting and spiritualizing prayer. Other society should be shut out, when a soul comes to converse with God.

Verse 24. Tossed with waves:] Grievously agitated. This is the proper meaning of the word βασανιζομενον: but one MS. reads βαπτιζομενον, plunged under the waves, frequently covered with them: the waves often breaking over the vessel.

Verse 25. The fourth watch] Anciently the Jews divided the night into three watches, consisting of four hours each. The first watch is mentioned, Lam. ii. 19. the second, Judg. vii. 19. and the third, Exod. xiv. 24. but a fourth watch is not mentioned in any part of the OLD Testament. This division the Romans had introduced in Judea, as also the custom of dividing the day into twelve hours: see John xi. 9. The first watch began at six o'clock in the evening, and continued till nine: the second began at nine, and continued till twelve. The third began at twelve and continued till three next morning, and the fourth began at three and continued till six. It was therefore between the hours of three and six in the morning, that Jesus made this appearance to his disciples.

Walking on the sea.] Thus suspending the laws of gravitation, was a proper manifestation of unlimited power. Jesus did this by his own power; therefore Jesus shewed forth his godhead. In this one miracle we may discover three: 1. Though at a distance from his disciples, he knew their distress. 2. He found them out on the lake, and probably in the midst of darkness. 3. He walked upon the water. Job, speaking of those things, whereby the Omnipotence of God was demonstrated, says particularly, chap. ix. 8. He walketh upon the waves of the sea: intimating that this was impossible to any thing but Omnipotence.

Verse 26. It is a spirit] That the spirits of the dead might, and did appear, was a doctrine held by the greatest and holiest men that ever existed: and a doctrine which the cavillers, free-thinkers and bound-thinkers, of different ages, have never been able to disprove.

on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear.

27 But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid.

28 And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water.

29 And he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus.

30 But when he saw the wind [a] boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me.

31 And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

32 And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased.

33 Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped him, saying, Of a truth [b] thou art the Son of God.

34 ¶ [c] And when they were gone over, they came into the land of Gennesaret.

a Or, strong.——b Ps. 2. 7. Mark 1. 1. ch. 16. 16. & 26, 63. Luke 4. 41. John 1. 49. & 6. 69. & 11. 27. Acts 8. 37. Rom. 1. 4.——c Mark 6. 53.

Verse 27. It is I; be not afraid.] Nothing but this voice of Christ could, in such circumstances, have given courage and comfort to his disciples: those who are grievously tossed with difficulties and temptations, require a similar manifestation of his power and goodness. When he proclaims himself in the soul, all sorrow and fear and sin are at an end.

Verse 28. Bid me come unto thee on the water.] A weak faith is always wishing for signs and miracles. To take Christ at his word, argues not only the perfection of faith, but also the highest exercise of sound reason; He is to be credited on his own word, because he is the TRUTH, and therefore can neither lie nor deceive.

Verse 29. Peter—walked on the water] However impossible the thing commanded by Christ may appear, it is certain he will give power to accomplish it, to those who receive his word by faith; but we must take care never to put Christ's power to the proof for the gratification of a vain curiosity; or even for the strengthening of our faith, when the ordinary means for doing that, are within our reach.

Verse 30. When he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid] It was by faith in the power of Christ he was upheld; when that faith failed, by which the laws of gravitation were suspended, no wonder that those laws returned to their wonted action, and that he began to sink. It was not the violence of the winds, nor the raging of the waves, which endangered his life; but his littleness of faith.

Verse 31. Jesus stretched forth his hand] Every moment we stand in need of Christ—while we stand, we are upheld by his power only; and when we are falling, or have fallen, we can be saved only by his mercy. Let us always take care that we do not consider so much the danger to which we are exposed, as the power of Christ by which we are to be upheld; and then our mountain is likely to stand strong.

Verse 32. The wind ceased.] Jesus is the Prince of Peace, and all is peace and calm where he condescends to enter and abide.

Verse 33. Thou art the son of God.] It is probable that these words were spoken either by the sailors or passengers, and not by the disciples. Critics have remarked, that when this phrase is used to denominate the MESSIAH, both the articles are used, ὁ υἱος του Θεου, and that the words without the articles mean, in the common Jewish phrase, a divine person. It would have been a strange thing indeed, if the disciples, after all the miracles they had seen Jesus work—after their having left all to follow him, &c. were only now persuaded that he was the promised Messiah. That they had not as yet, clear conceptions concerning his kingdom, is evident enough; but that they had any doubts concerning his being the promised Messiah, is far from being clear.

Verse 34. The land of Gennesaret] It was from this country that the sea or lake of Gennesaret had its name. In this district were the cities of Capernaum and Tiberias.

Verse 35. The men of that place had knowledge of him] i. e. they knew him again. They had already seen his miracles; and now they collect all the diseased people they can find, that he may have the same opportunity of shewing forth his marvellous power, and they of being the instruments of relieving their friends and neighbours.

They brought unto him all that were diseased] And Jesus received and healed every man and woman of them. And is not the soul, in the sight of God, of more value than the body? and will he withhold his healing power from the former, and grant it so freely to the latter? this cannot be. Let a man come himself to Jesus, and he shall be saved; and afterwards let him recommend this Christ to the whole circle of his acquaintance, and they, if they come, shall also find mercy.

round about, [a] and brought unto him all that were diseased;

Verse 36. That they might only touch the hem of his garment] What mighty influence must the grace and spirit of Christ have in the soul, when even the border or hem of his garment produced such wonders in the bodies of those who touched it! Here is a man who has turned from sin to God through Christ, and the healing hand of Jesus is laid upon him.—Then, no wonder that he knows and feels his sins forgiven, his soul purified, and his heart filled with the fulnesss of his Maker. Lord, increase our faith! and we shall see greater manifestations of thy power and glory! Amen.

CHAPTER XV.

The Pharisees accuse the disciples of eating with unwashed hands, 1, 2. Our Lord answers, and convicts them of gross hypocrisy, 3—9. Teaches the people and the disciples what it is that renders men unclean, 10—20. Heals the daughter of a Canaanitish woman, 21—28. Heals many diseased people on a mountain of Galilee, 29—31. With seven loaves, and a few little fishes, he feeds 4,000 men, besides women and children, 32—38. Having dismissed the multitudes, he comes to the coast of Magdala, 39.

NOTES ON CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. The scribes and Pharisees of Jerusalem] Our Lord was now in Galilee, chap. xiv. 34.

Verse 2. Elders] Rulers and magistrates among the Jews.

For they wash not their hands] What frivolous nonsense! These Pharisees had nothing which their malice could fasten on in the conduct or doctrine of our blessed Lord and his disciples, and therefore they must dispute about washing of hands! All sorts of Pharisees are troublesome people in religious society; and the reason is, they take more pleasure in blaming others, than in amending themselves.

The tradition of the elders] The word παραδοσις tradition, has occupied a most distinguished place, both in the Jewish and Christian Church. Man is ever fond of mending the work of his Maker; and hence he has been led to put his finishing hand even to Divine revelation! This supplementary matter has been called παραδοσις from παραδιδομαι, to deliver from hand to hand: to transmit—and hence the Latin term, tradition, from trado, to deliver, especially from one to another;—to hand down. Among the Jews, TRADITION signifies what is also called the Oral law, which they distinguish from the written law: this last contains the Mosaic precepts, as found in the Pentateuch: the former the traditions of the elders, i. e. traditions or doctrines, that had been successively handed down from Moses through every generation, but not committed to writing. The Jews feign that when GOD gave Moses the written law, he gave him also the oral law, which is the interpretation of the former. This law, Moses at first delivered to Aaron: then to his sons Eleazar and Ithamar—and after these to the seventy-two Elders, who were six of the most eminent men chosen out of each of the twelve tribes. These seventy-two, with Moses and Aaron, delivered it again to all the heads of the people; and afterwards to the congregation at large. They say also, that, before Moses died, he delivered this oral law, or system of traditions to JOSHUA, and Joshua to the ELDERS, which succeeded him—THEY to the Prophets, and the PROPHETS to each other, till it came to JEREMIAH, who delivered it to BARUCH his Scribe, who repeated it to EZRA, who delivered it to the men of the great synagogue, the last of whom was SIMON the just. By Simon the just it was delivered to ANTIGONUS of Socho; by him to JOSE', the son of Jochanan; by him to JOSE', the son of Joezer; by him to NATHAN the Arbelite, and Joshua the son of Perachiah, and by them to JUDAH the son of Tabbai, and Simeon, the son of Shatah; and by them to SHEMAIAH and ABTALION; and by them to HILLEL; and by Hillel to SIMEON

A. M. 4032. A. D. 28. An. Olymp. CCI. 4.

3 But he answered and said unto them, Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?

4 For God commanded, saying, [a] Honour thy father and mother: and, [b] He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death.

5 But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, [c] It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me;

6 And honour not his father or his mother, he shall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.

his son, the same who took Christ in his arms when brought to the temple to be presented to the Lord: by SIMEON it was delivered to GAMALIEL his son, the preceptor of St. Paul, who delivered it to SIMEON his son, and he to Rab. JUDAH, HAKKODESH his son, who compiled and digested it into the book which is called the MISHNA; to explain which the two Talmuds, called the Jerusalem and Babylonish Talmuds were compiled, which are also called the gemara or complement, because by these, the oral law or Mishneh is fully explained. The Jerusalem Talmud was completed about A.D. 300; and the Babylonish Talmud about the beginning of the sixth century. This Talmud was printed at Amsterdam in 12 vols. folio. These contain the whole of the traditions of the Elders, and have so explained, or rather frittered away the words of God, that our Lord might well say, Ye have made the word of God of no effect by your traditions. In what estimation these are held by the Jews, the following examples will prove: "The words of the Scribes are lovely beyond the words of the law: for the words of the Law are weighty and light, but the words of the Scribes are all weighty." Hierus. Berac. fol. 3.

"He that shall say, there are no Phylacteries, though he thus transgress the words of the Law, he is not guilty; but he that shall say, There are five Totaphot, thus adding to the words of the Scribes, he is guilty."

"A Prophet and an elder, to what are they likened? To a king sending two of his servants into a province; of one he writes thus: Unless he shew you my seal, believe him not; for thus it is written of the Prophet, He shall shew thee a sign; but of the Elders thus: According to the law which they shall teach thee, for I will confirm their words.—See Prideaux. Con. vol. 2. p. 465, and Lightfoot's Hor. Talmud.

They wash not their hands] On washing of hands before and after meat, the Jews laid great stress—they considered eating with unwashed hands to be no ordinary crime; and, therefore to induce men to do it, they feigned that an evil spirit, called Shibta שיבתא, who sits on the hands by night, has a right to sit on the food of him who eats without washing his hands, and make it hurtful to him! They consider the person who undervalues this rite, to be no better than a heathen, and consequently excommunicate him. See many examples of this doctrine in Schoetgen and Lightfoot.

Verse 3. Why do ye—transgress the commandment] Ye accuse my disciples of transgressing the traditions of the Elders—I accuse you of transgressing the commands of God, and that too in favour of your own tradition; thus preferring the inventions of men to the positive precepts of God. Pretenders to zeal often prefer superstitious usages to the Divine law, and human inventions to the positive duties of Christianity.

Verse 4. Honour thy father and mother] This word was taken in great latitude of meaning among the Jews: it not only meant respect and submission, but also to take care of a person, to nourish and support him, to enrich. See Numb. xxii. 17. Judg. xiii. 17. 1 Tim. v. 17. And that this was the sense of the law, as it respected parents, see Deut. xxvii. 16. and see the note on Exod. xx. 12.

Verse 5. It is a gift] קרבן korban, Mark vii. 11. an offering of approach; something consecrated to the service of God in the temple, by which a man had the privilege of approaching his Maker. This conduct was similar to the custom of certain persons who bequeath the inheritance of their children to churches or religious uses; either through terror of conscience, thus striving to purchase the kingdom of glory; or through the persuasions of interested hireling priests. It was in this way that, in the days of popish influence, the principal lands in the nation had fallen into the hands of the church. In these charters, multitudes of which have passed through my hands, a common form was, pro salute meæ, et pro salute antecessorum meorum, & pro salute successorum meorum, & pro salute uxoris meæ, &c. &c. do, et concedo Deo et Ecclesiæ, &c. "For my salvation, and for the salvation of my predecessors, and for the salvation of my successors, and for the salvation of my wife, &c. &c. I give and bequeath to God and his Church, &c."

Though a world of literature was destroyed, and fine buildings ruined by the suppression of the monasteries in England, yet this step, with the Stat. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 10. together with the Stat. 9 Geo. II. c. 36. were the means of checking an evil that had arrived at a pitch of unparalleled magnitude; an evil that was supplanting the atonement made by the blood of the Covenant, and putting death-bed grants of land, &c.

in the place of Jesus Christ, and throwing the whole secular power of the kingdom into the hands of the pope and the priests. No wonder then that they cried out when the monasteries were suppressed! It is sacrilege to dedicate that to God, which is taken away from the necessities of our parents and children; and the good that this pretends to, will doubtless be found in the catalogue of that unnatural man's crimes in the judgment of the great day, who has thus deprived his own family of its due. To assist our poor relatives, is our first duty; and this is a work infinitely preferable to all pious legacies and indowments.

Verse 7. Hypocrites, well did Isaiah prophesy of you] In every place where the proper names of the Old Testament occur, in the New the same mode of orthography should be followed: I therefore write Isaiah with the Hebrew, not Esaias, with the Greek. This prophecy is found chap. xxix. 13. Our blessed Lord unmasks these hypocrites; and we may observe, that when a hypocrite is found out, he should be exposed to all; this may lead to his salvation—if he be permitted to retain his falsely acquired character, how can he escape perdition!

Verse 8. Their heart is far from me.] The true worship of God consists in the union of the heart to him—where this exists not, a particle of the spirit of devotion cannot be found.

This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth] This clause, which is taken from Isai. chap. xxix. 13. is omitted by several excellent MSS. and by several Versions and Fathers. Erasmus, Mill, Drusius, and Bengel, approve of the omission, and Griesbach has left it out of the text; but as I find it in the Prophet, the place from which it is quoted, I dare not omit it, howsoever respectable the above authorities may appear.

Verse 9. In vain they do worship me, &c.] By the traditions of the Elders, not only the word of God was perverted but his worship also was greatly corrupted. But the Jews were not the only people who have acted thus: whole Christian churches, as well as sects and parties, have acted in the same way. Men must not mould the worship of God according to their fancy—it is not what they think will do—is proper, innocent, &c. but what God himself has prescribed, that he will acknowledge as his worship. However sincere a man may be in a worship of his own invention, or, of man's commandment, yet it profits him nothing.—Christ himself says it is in vain: to condemn such, may appear to some illiberal; but whatever may be said in behalf of sincere heathens, and others who have not had the advantages of Divine Revelation, there is no excuse for the man who has the BIBLE before him.

Verse 10. Hear, and understand] A most important command—Hear—make it a point of conscience to attend to the ministry of the word. Understand—be not satisfied with attending places of public worship merely, see that the teaching be of God, and that you lay it to heart.

Verse 11. Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth] This is an answer to the carping question of the Pharisees, mentioned ver. 2. Why do thy disciples eat with unwashed hands? To which our Lord here replies, That what goes into the mouth defiles not the man; i. e. that if, in eating with unwashed hands, any particles of dust, &c. cleaving to the hands, might happen to be taken into the mouth with the food, this did not defile, did not constitute a man a sinner; for it is on this alone, the question hinges—thy diciples eat with unwashed hands, therefore they are sinners, for they transgress the tradition of the elders, i. e. the oral law, which they considered equal in authority to the written law; and indeed often preferred the former to the latter, so as to make it of none effect, totally to destroy its nature and design, as we have often seen in the preceding notes.

That which cometh out of the mouth] That is, what springs from a corrupt unregenerate heart—a perverse will and impure passions—these defile, i. e. make him a sinner.

Verse 12. The Pharisees were offended] None so liable to take offence as formalists and hypocrites, when you attempt to take away the false props from the one, and question the sincerity of the other. Besides, a Pharisee must never be suspected of ignorance, for they are the men and wisdom must die with them!

Verse 13. Every plant] Every plantation. So I render φυτεια, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.

A. M. 4032. A. D. 28. An. Olymp. CCI. 4.

14 Let them alone: [a] they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.

15 [b] Then answered Peter and said unto him, Declare unto us this parable.

16 And Jesus said, [c] Are ye also yet without understanding?

A. M. 4032. A. D. 28. An. Olymp. CCI. 4.

17 Do not ye yet understand, that [d] whatsoever entereth in at the mouth, goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught?

18 But [e] those things which proceed out of c Ch. 16. 9. Mark 7. 18.——d 1 Cor. 6. 13.——e Jam. 3. 6.

and so it is translated in the Itala version which accompanies the Greek text in the Codex Bezæ, omnis plantatio, and so the word is rendered by Suidas. This gives a different turn to the text. The Pharisees as a religious body, were now a plantation of trees, which God did not plant, water, nor own: therefore, they should be rooted up, not left to wither and die but the fellers, and those who root up (the Roman armies) should come against, and destroy them, and the Christian church was to be planted in their place. Since the general dispersion of the Jews, this sect, I believe, has ceased to exist as a separate body, among the descendants of Jacob. The first of the Apostolical Constitutions begins thus: Θεου φυτεια η καθολικη εκκλησια, και αμπελων αυτου εκλεκτος. The Catholic church is the plantation of God, and his chosen vineyard.

Verse 14. Let them alone] Αφετε αυτους, give them up, or, leave them. These words have been sadly misunderstood.—Some have quoted them to prove that blind and deceitful teachers should not be pointed out to the people, nor the people warned against them; and that men should abide in the communion of a corrupt church, because that church had once been the church of God, and in it they had been brought up; and to prove this they bring Scripture, for, in our present translation, the words are rendered, let them alone: but the whole connexion of the place evidently proves that our blessed Lord meant, give them up, have no kind of religious connexion with them, and the strong reason for which, he immediately adds, because they are blind leaders. This passage does not at all mean that blind leaders should not be pointed out to the people, that they may avoid being deceived by them, for this our Lord does frequently; and warns his disciples, and the people in general, against all such false teachers as the Scribes and Pharisees were: and though he bids men do what they heard those say, while they sat in the chair of Moses, yet he certainly meant no more than that they should be observant of the moral law when read to them out of the sacred book:—yet, neither does he tell them to do all these false teachers said; for he testifies in the 6th verse, that they had put such false glosses on the law, that if followed, would endanger the salvation of their souls. The Codex Bezæ, for αφετε αυτους, has αφετε τους τυφλους, give up these blind men. Amen! A literal attention to these words of our Lord, produced the Reformation.

Probably the words may be understood as a sort of proverbial expression for don't mind them: pay no regard to them.—"They are altogether unworthy of notice."

And if the blind lead the blind] This was so self-evident a case, that an apter parallel could not be found—if the blind lead the blind, both must fall into the ditch. Alas for the blind teachers, who not only destroy their own souls, but those also of their flocks! Like priest, like people. If the minister be ignorant, he cannot teach what he does not know; and the people cannot become wise unto salvation under such a ministry—he is ignorant and wicked, and they are profligate. They who even wish such, God speed, are partakers of their evil deeds. But shall not the poor deceived people escape? No: both shall fall into the pit of perdition together; for they should have searched the Scriptures, and not trusted to the ignorant sayings of corrupt men, no matter of what sect or party. He who has the Bible in his hand, or within his reach, and can read it, has no excuse.

Verse 15. Declare unto us this parable.] Is it not strange to hear the disciples asking for the explanation of such a parable as this! The true knowledge of the spirit of the gospel, is a thing more uncommon than we imagine, among the generality of Christians, and even of the learned.

Verse 16. Are ye also yet without understanding?] The word ακμη, which we translate yet, should be here rendered still: are ye still void of understanding?—and the word is used in this sense by several Greek writers. The authorities which have induced me to prefer this translation, may be seen in Kypke.

Verse 17. Cast out into the draught] Εις αφεδρωνα, ꝧ byð on ꝓoꝛðgangaꝛenð. Anglo-Saxon, and beeth into the forthgoing a sent—what is not fit for nourishment is evacuated; is thrown into the sink. This I believe to be the meaning of this difficult and variously translated word, αφεδρων. Diodati translates it properly, nella latrina, into the privy. And the Persian translator has given a good paraphrase, and appears to have collected the general meaning, هر چه در دهن اندر اید از نشیب بیرون رود و بر زمین افتد her tche der dehen ander ayeed, az nusheeb beeroon rood, we ber zemeen aftad; "whatsoever enters into the mouth, goes downward, and falls upon the ground." the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man.

19 [a] For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies:

20 These are the things which defile a man: but to eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man.

21 ¶ [b] Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon.

Marsh, have been much perplexed with this perplexing passage.—See Michaelis's Introduction, vol. i. note 35. p. 458.

Verse 19. Out of the heart] In the heart of an unregenerate man, the principles and seeds of all sin are found. And iniquity is always conceived in the heart before it be spoken or acted. Is there any hope that a man can abstain from outward sin, till his heart, that abominable fountain of corruption, be thoroughly cleansed? I trow not.

Evil thoughts] Διαλογισμοι πονηροι, wicked dialogues—for in all evil surmisings the heart holds a conversation, or dialogue, with itself. For φονοι, murders, two MSS. have φθονοι, envyings, and three others have both. Envy and murder are nearly allied; the former has often led to the latter.

Blasphemies] I have already observed, chap. ix. 3. that the verb βλασφημεω, when applied to men, signifies to speak INJURIOUSLY of their persons, characters, &c. and when applied to God, it means to speak IMPIOUSLY of his nature, works, &c.

Verse 20. These—defile a man] Our Lord's argument is very plain.—What goes into the mouth, descends into the stomach and other intestines; part is retained for the nourishment of the body, and part is ejected, as being improper to afford nourishment. Nothing of this kind defiles the soul, because it does not enter into it; but the evil principles that are in it, producing evil thoughts, murders, &c. these defile the soul, because they have their seat and operation in it.

Verse 21. Depart into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon.] Εις τα μερη, towards the coasts or confines. It is not clear that our Lord ever left the land of the Hebrews; he was, as the apostle observes, Rom. xv. 8. the minister of the circumcision according to the truth of God. Tyre and Sidon are usually joined together, principally, because they are but a few miles distant from each other.

Verse 22. A woman of Canaan] Matthew gives her this name, because of the people from whom she sprung—the descendants of Canaan, Judg. i. 31, 32; but Mark calls her a Syrophenician, because of the country where she dwelt. The Canaanites and Phœnicians have been often confounded. This is frequently the case in the Septuagint: Compare Gen. xlvi. 10. with Exod. vi. 15. where the same person is called a Phœnician in the one place, and a Canaanite in the other. See also the same version in Exod. xvi. 35. Josh. v. 12.

The state of this woman is a proper emblem of the state of a sinner, deeply conscious of the misery of his soul.

Have mercy on me, &c.] How proper is this prayer for a penitent! There are many excellencies contained in it: 1. It is short; 2. humble; 3. full of faith; 4. fervent; 5. modest; 6. respectful; 7. rational; 8. relying only on the mercy of God; 9. persevering. Can he who sees himself a slave of the devil, beg with too much earnestness to be delivered from his thraldom?

Son of David] An essential character of the true Messiah.

Verse 23. He answered her not a word.] Seemed to take time to considered her request, and to give her the opportunity of exercising her faith, and manifesting her fervour.

Verse 24. I am not sent but unto the lost sheep] By the divine appointment, I am come to preach the Gospel to the Jews only. There are certain preachers who should learn a lesson of important instruction from this part of our Lord's conduct. As soon as they hear of a lost sheep being found by other ministers, they give all diligence to get that one into their fold; but display little earnestness in seeking in the wilderness for those that are lost. This conduct, perhaps, proceeds from a consciousness of their inability to perform the work of an Evangelist; and leads them to sit down in the labours of others, rather than submit to the reproach of presiding over empty chapels. Such persons should either dig or beg immediately, as they are a reproach to the pastoral office; for not being sent of God, they cannot profit the people.

The wilderness of this world is sufficiently wide and uncultivated. Sinners abound every where; and there is ample room for all truly religious people, who have zeal for God, and love for their perishing fellow creatures, to put forth all their strength, employ all their time, and exercise all their talents, in proclaiming the Gospel of God; not only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, but to a lost WORLD. Nor can such exertions be unsuccessful. Where the pure truth of God is preached, many will be converted. Where that truth is preached, though with a mixture of error, some will be converted, for God will bless his own truth. But where nothing but false doctrine is preached, no soul is converted: for God will never sanction error, by a miracle of his mercy.

Verse 25. Lord, help me.] Let me also share in the deliverance afforded to Israel.

Verse 26. The children's bread] The salvation provided for the Jews, who were termed the children of the kingdom. And cast it to the κυναριοις little dogs—to the curs; such the Gentiles were reputed by the Jewish people, and our Lord uses that form of speech which was common among his countrymen. What terrible repulses! and yet she still perseveres!

Verse 27. Truth, Lord] Ναι κυριε, Yes, Lord. This appears be not so much an assent, as a bold reply to our Lord's reason for apparently rejecting her suit.

The little dogs share with the children, for they eat the crumbs which fall from their master's table. I do not desire what is provided for these highly favoured children, only what they leave—a single exertion of thy Almighty Power in the healing of my afflicted daughter, is all that I wish for; and this the highly favoured Jews can well spare, without lessening the provision made for themselves. Is not this the sense of this noble woman's reply?

Verse 28. O woman, great is thy faith] The hinderances thrown in this woman's way, only tended to increase her faith. Her faith resembles a river, which becomes enlarged by the dikes opposed to it, till at last it sweeps them entirely away with it.

Her daughter was made whole] Persevering faith and prayer are next to omnipotent. No person can thus pray and believe, without receiving all his soul requires. This is one of the finest lessons in the book of God for a penitent, or for a discouraged believer. Look to Jesus! As sure as God is in heaven, so surely will he hear and answer thee to the eternal salvation of thy soul! Be not discouraged at a little delay: when thou art properly prepared to receive the blessing, then thou shalt have it. Look up, thy salvation is at hand.—Jesus admires this faith, to the end that we may admire and imitate it, and may reap the same fruits and advantages from it.

Verse 29. Went up into a mountain] Το ορος, THE mountain. "Meaning," says Mr. Wakefield, "some particular mountain which he was accustomed to frequent; for whenever it is spoken of at a time when Jesus is in Galilee, it is always discriminated by the article. Compare chap. iv. 18. with chap. v. i. and chap. xiii. 54. with chap. xiv. 23. and xxviii. 16. I suppose it was mount Tabor."

Verse 30. Those that were—maimed] Κυλλους. Wetstein has fully proved that those who had lost a hand, foot &c, were termed κυλλοι by the Greeks. Kypke has shewn from Hippocrates, that the word was also used to signify those who had distorted or dislocated legs, knees, hands, &c. Mr. Wakefield is fully of opinion, that it means here those who had lost a limb, and brings an incontestable proof from Matth. xviii. 8. Mark ix. 43. "If thy hand cause thee to offend, CUT IT OFF; it is better for thee to enter into life (κυλλον) WITHOUT A LIMB, than having thy TWO hands, to go away into hell." What an astonishing manifestation of omnific and creative energy must the re-production of a hand, foot, &c. be, at the word or touch of Jesus! As this was a mere act of creative power, like that of multiplying the bread; those who allow that the above is the meaning of the word, will hardly attempt to doubt the proper divinity of Christ. Creation in any sense of the word, i. e. causing something to exist that had no existence before, can belong only to God; because it is an effect of an unlimited power: to say that such power could be delegated to a person, is to say, that the person to whom it is delegated, becomes, for the time being, the omnipotent God; and that God, who has thus clothed a creature with his Omnipotence, ceases to be Omnipotent himself; for there cannot be two Omnipotents, nor can the Supreme Being delegate his Omnipotence to another, and have it at the same time. I confess, then, that this is to me an unanswerable argument for the Divinity of our blessed Lord. Others may doubt; I can't help believing.

Verse 31. The multitude wondered] And well they might when they had such proofs of the miraculous power and love of God before their eyes.—Blessed be God; the same miracles are continued in their spiritual reference. All the disorders of the soul are still cured by the power of Jesus.

Verse 32. I have compassion, &c.] See a similar transaction explained, chap. xiv. 14—22.

Verse 33. Whence should we have so much bread in the wilderness, &c. Human foresight, even in the followers of Christ, is very short. In a thousand instances, if we supply not its deficiency by faith, we shall be always embarrassed, and often miserable. This world is a desert, where nothing can be found to satisfy the soul of man, but the salvation which Christ has procured.

Verse 37. They did all eat, and were filled] Εχορτασθησαν—they were satisfied. The husks of worldly pleasures may fill the man, but cannot satisfy the soul. A man may eat, and not be satisfied: it is the interest therefore of every follower of Christ to follow him till he be fed, and to feed on him till he be satisfied.

Verse 38. Four thousand] Let the poor learn from these miracles to trust in God for support. Whatever his ordinary Providence denies, his miraculous power will supply.

Verse 39. He sent away the multitude] But not before he had instructed their souls, and fed and healed their bodies.

The coasts of Magdala.] In the parallel place, Mark viii. 10. this place is called Dalmanutha. Either Magdala was formed by a tranposition of letters from Dalman, to which the Syriac termination atha had been added, or the one of these names refers to the country, and the other to a town in that neighbourhood. Jesus went into the country, and proceeded till he came to the chief town or village in that district. Whitby says, "Magdala was a city and territory beyond Jordan, on the banks of Gadara. It reached to the bridge above Jordan, which joined it to the other side of Galilee, and contained within its precincts Dalmanutha." The MSS. and VV. read the name variously—Magada, Mageda, Magdala; and the Syriac has Magdū. In Mark, Dalmanutha is read by many MSS. Melagada, Madegada, Magada, Magidan, and Magedam. Magdala, variously pronounced, seems to have been the place or country; Dalmanutha, the chief town, or capital.

In this chapter a number of interesting and instructive particulars are contained.

1. We see the extreme superstition, envy, and incurable ill-nature of the Jews. While totally lost to a proper sense of the spirituality of God's law, they are ceremonious in the extreme. They will not eat without washing their hands, because this would be a transgression of one of the traditions of their elders; but they can harbour the worst tempers and passions, and thus break the law of God! The word of man weighs more with them than the testimony of Jehovah, and yet they pretend the highest respect for their God and sacred things, and will let their parents perish for lack of the necessaries of life, that they may have goods to vow to the service of the sanctuary! Pride and envy blind the hearts of men, and cause them often to act not only the most wicked, but the most ridiculous parts. He who takes the book of God for the rule of his faith and practice, can never go astray: but to the mazes and perplexities produced by the traditions of elders, human creeds and confessions of faith, there is no end. These evils existed in the Christian as well as in the Jewish Church; but the Reformation, thank God! has liberated us from this endless system of uncertainty and absurdity, and the sun of righteousness shines now unclouded! The plantation, which God did not plant, in the course of his judgments, he has now swept nearly away from the face of the earth. Babylon is fallen!

2. We wonder at the dulness of the disciples, when we find that they did not fully understand our Lord's meaning, in the very obvious parable about the blind leading the blind. But should we not be equally struck with their prying, inquisitive temper? They did not understand, but they could not rest till they did. They knew that their Lord could say nothing that had not the most important meaning in it: this meaning in the preceding parable, they had not apprehended, and therefore they wish to have it further explained by himself. Do we imitate their docility and eagerness to comprehend the truth of God? Christ presses every occurrence into a means of instruction.—The dulness of the disciples in the present case, has been the means of affording us the fullest instruction on a point of the utmost importance—the state of a sinful heart, and how the thoughts and passions conceived in it, defile and pollute it; and how necessary it is to have the fountain purified, that it may cease to send forth those streams of death.

3. The case of the Canaanitish woman, is, in itself, a thousand sermons. Her faith—her prayers—her perseverance—her success—the honour she received from her Lord, &c. &c. How instructively, how powerfully do these speak and plead! What a profusion of light does this single case throw upon the manner in which Christ sometimes exercises the faith and patience of his followers! They that seek shall find, is the great lesson inculcated in this short history: God is ever the same. Reader, follow on after God—cry, pray, plead—all in Him is for thee!—Thou canst not perish, if thou continuest to believe and pray. The Lord will help THEE.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. The Pharisees also with the Sadducees] Though a short account of these has been already given in the note on ch. iii. 7. yet as one more detailed may be judged necessary, I think it proper to introduce it in this place.

The PHARISEES were the most considerable sect among the Jews, for they had not only the Scribes and all the learned men of the law of their party, but they also drew after them the bulk of the people. When this sect arose is uncertain. Josephus Antiq. B. V. ch. xiii. s. 9. speaks of them as existing about 144 years before the Christian æra. They had their appellation of Pharisees, from פרש parash, to separate, and were probably in their rise, the most holy people among the Jews, having separated themselves from the national corruption, with a design to restore and practise the pure worship of the Most High. That they were greatly degenerated in our Lord's time, is sufficiently evident; but still we may learn from their external purity and exactness, that their principles in the beginning were holy. Our Lord testifies that they had cleansed the outside of the cup and platter, but within they were full of abomination. They still kept up the outward regulations of the institution, but they had utterly lost its spirit; and hypocrisy was the only substitute now in their power, for that spirit of piety, which I suppose, and not unreasonably, characterized the origin of this sect.

As to their religious opinions, they still continued to credit the Being of a God, they received the five books of Moses, the writings of the prophets, and the hagiographa. The hagio- grapha or holy writings, from αγιος holy, and γραφω I write, included the twelve following books,—Psalms, Proverbs, Job, Canticles, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Chronicles. These, among the Jews, occupied a middle place between the Law and the Prophets, as divinely inspired. The Pharisees believed in a confused way, in the resurrection, though they received the Pythagorean doctrine of the metempsychosis or transmigration of souls. Those, however, who were notoriously wicked, they consigned on their death, immediately to hell, without the benefit of transmigration, or the hope of future redemption. They held also the predestinarian doctrine of necessity, and the government of the world by fate; and yet, inconsistently allowed some degree of liberty to the human will. See Prideaux.

The SADDUCEES had their origin and name from one Sadoc, a disciple of Antigonus of Socho, president of the Sanhedrin, and teacher of the law in one of the great divinity schools in Jerusalem, about 264 years before the incarnation.

This Antigonus having often in his lectures informed his scholars, that they should not serve God through expectation of a reward, but through love and filial reverence only; Sadoc inferred from this teaching, that there were neither rewards nor punishments after this life, and by consequence, that there was no resurrection of the dead, nor angel, nor spirit in the invisible world; and that man is to be rewarded or punished here, for the good or evil he does.

They received only the five books of Moses, and rejected all unwritten traditions. From every account we have of this sect, it plainly appears they were a kind of mongrel deists, and professed materialists. See Prideaux, and the authors he quotes, Connect. vol. iii. p. 95. and 471, &c. and see the note on ch. iii. 7.

In chap. xxii. 16. we shall meet with a third sect, called HERODIANS, of whom a few words may be spoken here. It is allowed on all hands, that these did not exist before the time of Herod the Great, who died only three years after the incarnation of our Lord. What the opinions of these were, is not agreed among the learned. Many of the primitive fathers believed that their distinguishing doctrine was, that they held Herod to be the Messiah; but it is not likely that such an opinion could prevail in our Saviour's time, thirty years after Herod's death, when not one characteristic of Messiahship had appeared in him during his life. Others suppose that they were Herod's courtiers, who flattered the passions of their master; and being endowed with a convenient conscience, changed with the times; but as Herod was now dead upwards of thirty years, such a sect could not exist in reference to him, and yet all allow that they derived their origin from Herod the Great.

Our Lord says, Mark viii. 3. that they had the leaven of Herod, i. e. a bad doctrine, which they received from him. What this was may be easily discovered: 1. Herod subjected himself and his people to the dominion of the Romans, in opposition to that law, Deut. xvii. 15. Thou shalt not set a king over thee—which is not thy brother, i. e. one out of the twelve tribes. 2. He built temples, set up images, and joined in heathenish worship, though he professed the Jewish religion; and this was in opposition to all the law and the prophets. From this we may learn, that the Herodians were such as, first, held it lawful to transfer the divine government to a heathen ruler; and, secondly, to conform occasionally to heathenish rites in their religious worship. In short, they appear to have been persons who trimmed between God and the world—who endeavoured to reconcile his service with that of mammon,—and who were religious just as far as it tended to secure their secular interests. It is probable that this sect was at last so blended with, that it became lost in, the sect of the Sadducees; for the persons who are called Herodians, Mark viii. 15. are stiled Sadducees in ver. 6. of this chapter. See Prideaux, Con. vol. iii. p. 516, &c. and Josephus Antiq. B. xv. c. viii. s. i. and x. s. iii. But it is very likely that the Herodians, mentioned c. xxii. 10. were courtiers or servants of Herod king of Galilee. See the note there.

Shew them a sign] These sects, however opposed among themselves, most cordially unite in their opposition to Christ and his truth. That the kingdom of Satan may not fall, all his subjects must fight against the doctrine and maxims of the kingdom of Christ.

Tempting—him] Feigning a desire to have his doctrine fully proved to them, that they might credit it, and become his disciples; but having no other design than to betray and ruin him.

Verse 2. When it is evening] There are certain signs of fair and foul weather, which ye are in the constant habit of observing, and which do not fail.—The signs of the times—the doctrine which I preach, and the miracles which I work among you, are as sure signs that the day spring from on high has visited you for your Salvation; but if ye refuse to hear, and continue in darkness, the red and gloomy cloud of vindictive Justice shall pour out such a storm of wrath upon you, as shall sweep you from the face of the earth.

Verse 4. Wicked and adulterous generation] The Jewish people are represented in the Sacred Writings, as married to the most High; but like a disloyal wife, forsaking their true husband, and uniting themselves to Satan and sin. Seeketh after a sign, σημειον επιζητει, seeketh sign upon sign, or, still another sign. Our blessed Lord had already wrought miracles sufficient to demonstrate both his divine mission, and his divinity; only one was farther necessary to take away the scandal of his cross and death, to fulfil the Scriptures, and to establish the Christian religion; and that was, his resurrection from the dead, which he here states, was typified in the case of Jonah.

Verse 5. Come to the other side] Viz. the coast of Bethsaida, by which our Lord passed, going to Cæsarea, for he was now on his journey thither. See ver. 13. and Mark viii. 22, 27.

Verse 6. Beware of the leaven] What the leaven of Pharisees and Sadducees was, has been already explained, see ver. 1. Bad doctrines act in the soul, as leaven does in meal; they assimilate the whole spirit to their own nature. A man's particular creed has a greater influence on his tempers and conduct than most are aware of. Pride, hypocrisy, and worldly mindedness, which constituted the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees, ruin the major part of the world.

Verse 7. They reasoned] For as Lightfoot observes, the term leaven was very rarely used among the Jews, to signify doctrine, and therefore the disciples did not immediately apprehend his meaning. In what a lamentable state of blindness is the human mind! Bodily wants are perceived with the utmost readiness, and a supply is sought with all speed. But the necessities of the soul are rarely discovered, though they are more pressing than those of the body, and the supply of them of infinitely more importance.

Verse 8. When Jesus perceived, he said] Αυτοις, unto them, is wanting in BDKLMS. and twenty others; one of the Syriac, the Armenian, Æthiopic, Vulgate, and most of the Itala; also in Origen, Theophylact, and Lucifer Calaritanus. Mill approves of the omission, and Griesbach has left it out of the text.

O ye of little faith] There are degrees in faith, as well as in the other graces of the spirit. Little faith may be the seed of great faith, and therefore is not to be despised. But many who should be strong in faith, have but a small measure of it, because they either give way to sin, or are not careful to improve what God has already given.

Verses 9 and 10. Do ye not yet understand—the five loaves—neither the seven.—See the notes on chap. xiv. 14, &c. How astonishing is it that these men should have any fear of lacking bread, after having seen the two miracles which our blessed Lord alludes to above! Though men quickly perceive their bodily wants, and are querulous enough till they get them supplied, yet they as quickly forget the mercy which they had received, and thus God gets few returns of gratitude for his kindness. To make men, therefore, deeply sensible of his favours, he is induced to suffer them often to be in want, and then to supply them in such a way, as to prove that their supply has come immediately from the hand of their bountiful Father.

Verse 11. How is it that ye do not understand] We are not deficient in spiritual knowledge, because we have not had sufficient opportunities of acquainting ourselves with God; but because we did not improve the advantages we had. How deep and ruinous must our ignorance be, if God did not give line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little! They now perceived that he warned them against the superstition of the Pharisees, which produced hypocrisy, pride, envy, &c. and the false doctrine of the Sadducees, which denied the existence of a spiritual world, the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, and the providence of God.

Verse 13. Cæsarea Philippi] A city, in the tribe of Naphthali, near to mount Libanus, in the province of Iturea. Its ancient name was Dan, Gen. xiv. 14. afterwards it was called Lais, Judg. xviii. 7. But Philip the tetrarch, having rebuilt and beautified it, gave it the name of Cæsarea, in honour of Tiberius Cæsar, the reigning emperor: but to distinguish it from another Cæsarea, which was on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, and to perpetuate the fame of him who rebuilt it, it was called Cæsarea Philippi, or Cæsarea of Philip.

When Jesus came] Ελθων δε ο Ιησους—when Jesus was coming. Not, when Jesus came, or was come, for Mark expressly mentions that it happened εν τη οδω, in the way to Cæsarea Philippi, chap. viii. 27. and he is Matthew's best interpreter.—WAKEFIELD.

Whom do men say] He asked his disciples this question, not because he was ignorant what the people thought and spoke of him: but to have the opportunity in getting an express declaration of their faith from themselves, to confirm and strengthen them in it: but see on Luke ix. 20; Some, John the Baptist, &c. By this and other passages we learn, that the Pharisaic doctrine of the Metempsychosis, or transmigration of souls, was pretty general; for it was upon this ground that they believed that the soul of the Baptist, or of Elijah, Jeremiah, or some of the Prophets, had come to a new life, in the body of Jesus.

Verse 16. Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.] Every word here is emphatic—a most concise, and yet comprehensive confession of faith.

The Christ, or Messiah, points out his divinity, and shews his office—the Son—designates his person: on this account it is, that both are joined together so frequently in the New Covenant. Of the living God—Του Θεου, του ζωντος, literally of God, the Living One. The C. Bezæ has for Του ζωντος the Living One, Του σωζοντος the Saviour, and the Cant. Dei Salvatoris, Of God the Saviour.

Living—a character applied to the Supreme Being, not only to distinguish him from the dead idols of Paganism, but also to point him out as the source of life, present, spiritual, and eternal. Probably there is an allusion here to the great name יהוה Yeve, or Yehovah; which properly signifies being or existence.

Verse 17. Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona] Or Simon, son of Jonah; so Bar-jonah should be translated, and so it is rendered by our Lord, John i. 43. Flesh and blood—i. e. MAN:—no human being hath revealed this; and though the text is literal enough, yet every body should know that this is a Hebrew periphrasis for man; and the literal translation of it here, and in Gal. 1. 16. has misled thousands, who suppose that flesh and blood, signify carnal reason, as it is termed; or the unregenerate principle in man. Is it not evident from our Lord's observation, that it requires an express revelation of God in a man's soul, to give him a saving acquaintance with Jesus Christ; and that not even the miracles of our Lord, wrought before the eyes, will effect this? the darkness must be removed from the heart by the Holy Spirit, before a man can become wise unto salvation.

Verse 18. Thou art Peter] This was the same as if he had said, I acknowledge thee for one of my disciples—for this name was given him by our Lord when he first called him to the Apostleship. See John i. 42.

Peter, πετρος, signifies a rock, and our Lord, whose constant custom it was to rise to heavenly things through the medium of earthly, takes occasion from the name, the metaphorical meaning of which was strength and stability, to point out the solidity of the confession, and the stability of that cause which should be founded on THE CHRIST, the SON of the LIVING GOD.

Upon this very rock, επι ταυτη τη πετρα—this true confession of thine—that I am THE MESSIAH, that am come to reveal and communicate THE LIVING GOD, that the dead lost world may be saved—upon this very rock, myself, thus confessed (alluding probably to Psal. cxviii. 22. The STONE which the builders rejected, is become the HEAD-STONE of the CORNER: and to Isai. xxviii. 16. Behold I lay a STONE in Zion for a FOUNDATION)—will I build my Church μου την εκκλησιαν, my assembly, or congregation, i. e. of persons who are made partakers of this precious faith. That Peter is not designed in our Lord's words, must be evident to all who are not blinded by prejudice. Peter was only one of the builders in this sacred edifice, Eph. ii. 20. who, himself tells us, (with the rest of the believers) was built on this living foundation stone: 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5. therefore Jesus Christ did not say, on thee, Peter, will I build my Church, but changes immediately the expression, and says, upon that very rock, επι ταυτη τη πετρα, to shew that he neither addressed Peter, nor any other of the Apostles. So, the supremacy of Peter, and the infallibity of the Church of Rome, must be sought in some other Scripture, for they certainly are not to be found in this. On the meaning of the word Church, see at the conclusion of this chapter.

The gates of Hell, πυλαι Αδου, i. e. the machinations and powers of the invisible world. In ancient times the gates of fortified cities were used to hold councils in; and were usually places of great strength. Our Lord's expression means, that neither the plots, stratagems, nor strength of Satan and his angels, should ever so far prevail as to destroy the sacred truths in the above confession. Sometimes the gates are taken for the troops which issue out from them—we may firmly believe, that though hell should open her gates, and vomit out her Devil and all his angels to fight against Christ and his saints, ruin and discomfiture must be the consequence on their part; as the arm of the Omnipotent must prevail.

Verse 19. The keys of the kingdom] By the kingdom of heaven, we may consider the true Church, that house of God to be meant, and by the keys, the power of admitting into that house, or of preventing any improper person from coming in. In other words, the doctrine of salvation, and the full declaration of the way in which God will save sinners: and who they are that shall be finally excluded from heaven; and on what account. When the Jews made a man a Doctor of the Law, they put into his hand the key of the closet in the temple, where the sacred books were kept, and also tablets to write upon; signifying by this, that they gave him authority to teach, and to explain the Scriptures to the people.—Martin. This prophetic declaration of our Lord, was literally fulfilled to Peter, as he was made the first instrument of opening, i. e. preaching the doctrines of the kingdom of heaven to the Jews, Acts ii. 41. and to the Gentiles, Acts x. 44—47. xi. 1. xv. 7.

Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth] This mode of expression was frequent among the Jews: they considered that every thing that was done upon earth according to the order of God, was at the same time done in heaven: hence they were accustomed to say, that when the priest, on the day of atonement, offered the two goats upon earth, the same were offered in heaven. As one goat therefore is permitted to escape on earth, one is permitted to escape in heaven: and when the priest casts the lots on earth, the priest also casts the lots in heaven. See Sohar. Levit. fol. 26. and see Lightfoot and Schoetgen. These words will receive considerable light from Levit. xiii. 3. & 23. The priest shall look upon him (the leper) and pronounce him unclean. Heb. וטמא אתו vetimè otho, he shall pollute him, i. e. shall declare him polluted from the evidences mentioned before, and in ver. 23. The priest shall pronounce him clean וטהרו הכהן vetiharo hacohen, the priest shall cleanse him, i. e. declare he is clean from the evidences mentioned in the verse. In the one case the priest declared the person, infected with the leprosy, and unfit for civil society: and in the other, that the suspected person was clean, and might safely associate with his fellows in civil or religious assemblies. The disciples of our Lord, from having the keys, i. e. the true knowledge of the doctrine of the kingdom of heaven, should be able at all times to distinguish between the clean and the unclean, and pronounce infallible judgment: and this binding and loosing, or pronouncing fit or unfit for fellowship with the members of Christ, being always according to the doctrine of the gospel of God, should be considered as proceeding immediately from heaven, and consequently as divinely ratified.

That binding and loosing were terms in frequent use among the Jews, and that they meant bidding, and forbidding, granting and refusing, declaring lawful or unlawful, &c. Dr. Lightfoot, after having given numerous instances, thus concludes:

"To these may be added, if need were, the frequent, (shall I say?) or infinite use of the phrases, אסור ומותר Bound and Loosed, which we meet with thousands of times over. But from these allegations the reader sees abundantly enough both the frequency and the common use of this phrase, and the sense of it also; namely, first, that it is used in doctrine, and in judgments, concerning things allowed or not allowed in the law. Secondly, that to bind is the same with, to forbid, or to declare forbidden. To think that Christ, when he used the common phrase, was not understood by his hearers, in the common and vulgar sense, shall I call it a matter of laughter, or of madness?

"To this, therefore, do these words amount: When the time was come wherein the Mosaic Law, as to some part of it, was to be abolished, and left off, and as to another part of it, was to be continued and to last for ever, he granted Peter, here, and to the rest of the Apostles, chap. xviii. 18. a power to abolish or confirm what they thought good, and as they thought good; being taught this, and led by the Holy Spirit, as if he should say, whatsoever ye shall bind in the Law of MOSES that is forbid, it shall be forbidden, the divine authority confirming it; and whatsoever ye shall loose, that is, permit, or shall teach, that it is permitted and lawful, shall be lawful and permitted. Hence they bound, that is forbad, circumcision to the Believers; eating of things offered to idols, of things strangled and of blood for a time, to the Gentiles; and that which they bound on earth, was confirmed in heaven. They loosed, that is, allowed purification to Paul, and to four other brethren, for the shunning of scandal, Acts xxi. 24. and in a word, by these words of Christ it was committed to them, the Holy Spirit directing, that they should make decrees concerning religion, as to the use or rejection of Mosaic rites and judgments, and that either for a time, or for ever.

"Let the word be applied by way of paraphrase to the matter that was transacted at present with Peter. 'I am about to build a Gentile Church,' saith Christ, 'and to thee, O Peter, do I give the keys of the kingdom of heaven, that thou mayest first open the door of faith to them; but if thou askest by what rule that Church is to be governed, when the Mosaic rule may seem so improper for it, thou shalt be so guided by the Holy Spirit, that whatsoever of the Law of Moses thou shalt forbid them, shall be forbidden; whatsoever thou grantest them, shall be granted, and that under a sanction made in heaven.' Hence, in that instant, when he should use his keys, that is, when he was now ready to open the gate of the gospel to the Gentiles, Acts x. he was taught from heaven, that the consorting of the Jew with the Gentile, which before had been bound, was now loosed; and the eating of any creature convenient for food, was now loosed, which before had been bound; and he in like manner looses both these.

"Those words of our Saviour, John xx. 23. Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted to them, for the most part are forced to the same sense with these before us, when they carry quite another sense. Here the business is of doctrine only, not of persons; there of persons, not of doctrine. Here of things lawful or unlawful in religion, to be determined by the Apostles; there of persons obstinate or not obstinate, to be punished by them, or not to be punished.

"As to doctrine, the Apostles were doubly instructed. 1. So long sitting at the feet of their Master, they had imbibed the evangelical doctrine.

"2. The Holy Spirit directing them, they were to determine concerning the legal doctrine and practice, being completely instructed and enabled in both, by the Holy Spirit descending upon them. As to the persons, they were endowed with a peculiar gift, so that the same spirit directing them if they would retain, and punish the sins of any, a power was delivered into their hands of delivering to Satan, of punishing with diseases, plagues, yea, death itself, which Peter did to Ananias and Sapphira; Paul to Elymas, Hymeneus, and Philetus, &c."

After all these evidences and proofs of the proper use of these terms, to attempt to press the words into the service long assigned them by the Church of Rome, would, to use the words of Dr. Lightfoot, be "a matter of laughter or of madness." No church can use them in the sense thus imposed upon them, which was done merely to serve secular ends; and least of all can that very church, that thus abuses them.

Verse 20. Then charged he his disciples] Διεστειλατο, he strictly charged them. Some very good MSS. have επετιμησεν, he severely charged—comminatus est,—he threatened. These are the readings of the Cod. Bezæ, both in the Greek and Latin.

word Jesus is omitted by 54 MSS. some of which are not only of the greatest authority, but also of the greatest antiquity. It is omitted also by the Syriac, later Persic, later Arabic, Sclavonic, 6 copies of the Itala, and several of the Fathers. The most eminent critics approve of this omission, and Griesbach has left it out of the text in both his editions. I believe the insertion of it here to be wholly superfluous and improper: for the question who is this Jesus? Peter answers, he is, ὁ Χριστος, the Messiah. The word Jesus is obviously improper. What our Lord says here refers to Peter's testimony in ver. 16. Thou art the Christ—Jesus here says, Tell no man that I am the Christ, i. e. the MESSIAH; as the time for his full manifestation was not yet come—and he was not willing to provoke the Jewish malice or the Roman envy, by permitting his disciples to announce him as the Saviour of a lost world. He chose rather to wait, till his resurrection and ascension had set this truth in the clearest light, and beyond the power of successful contradiction.

Verse 21. From that time forth began Jesus, &c.] Before this time our Lord had only spoken of his death in a vague and obscure manner, see chap. xii. 40. because he would not afflict his disciples with this matter sooner than necessity required: but now, as the time of his crucifixion drew nigh, he spoke of his sufferings and death in the most express and clear terms. Three sorts of persons, our Lord intimates, should be the cause of his death and passion; the elders, the chief priests, and the Scribes. Pious Quesnel takes occasion to observe from this, that Christ is generally persecuted by these three descriptions of men: rich men who have their portion in this life: ambitious and covetous ecclesiastics, who seek their portion in this life: and conceited scholars, who set up their wisdom against the wisdom of God, being more intent on criticising words, than in providing for the salvation of their souls. The spirit of Christianity always enables a man to bear the ills of life with patience, to receive death with joy; and to expect by faith, the resurrection of the body, and the life of the world to come.

Verse 22. Then Peter took him]—Προσλαβομενος—took him up—suddenly interrupted him, as it were calling him to order—see Wakefield. Some versions give προσλαβομενος the sense of calling him aside. The word signifies also to receive in a friendly manner—to embrace; but Mr. W.'s translation agrees better with the scope of the place. A man like Peter, who is of an impetuous spirit, and decides without consideration, upon every subject, must of necessity be often in the wrong.

Be it far from thee, Lord] Ιλεως σοι Κυριε. Be merciful to thyself, Lord: see the marg. So I think the original should be rendered. Peter knew that Christ had power sufficient to preserve himself from all the power and malice of the Jews; and wished him to exert that in his own behalf, which he had often exerted in the behalf of others. Some critics of great note think the expression elliptical, and that the word Θεος God, is necessarily understood as if Peter had said, God be merciful to thee! but I think the marginal reading is the sense of the passage. The French, Italian, and Spanish render it the same way. Blind and ignorant man is ever finding fault with the conduct of God. Human reason cannot comprehend the incarnation of the Almighty's fellow, (Zech. xiii. 7.) nor reconcile the belief of his divinity with his sufferings and death. How many Peters are there now in the world, who are in effect saying, this cannot be done unto thee—thou didst not give thy life for the sin of the world—it would be injustice to cause the innocent to suffer thus for the guilty—But what saith God? His soul shall be made an offering for sin—he shall taste death for every man—the iniquities of us all were laid upon him—Glorious truth! may the God who published it, have eternal praises!

Verse 23. Get thee behind me, Satan] Υπαγε οπισω μου σατανα. Get behind me, thou adversary. This is the proper translation of the Hebrew word שטן Satan, from which the Greek word is taken. Our blessed Lord certainly never designed that men should believe he called Peter, DEVIL, because he, through erring affection, had wished him to avoid that death which he predicted to himself. This translation, which is literal, takes away that harshness which before appeared in our Lord's words.

Thou art an offence unto me] Σκανδαλον μου ει—Thou art a stumbling-block in my way, to impede me in the accomplishment of the great design.

Thou savourest not] That is, dost not relish, ου φρονεις, or, thou dost not understand or discern the things of God—thou art wholly taken up with the vain thought that my kingdom is of this world. He who opposes the doctrine of the atonement is an adversary and offence to Christ, though he be as sincere in his profession as Peter himself was. Let us beware of false friendships. Carnal relatives, when listened to, may prove the ruin of those whom, through their mistaken tenderness, they wish to save. When a man is intent on saving his own soul, his adversaries are often those of his own household.

Verse 24. Will come after me] i. e. to be my disciple. This discourse was intended to shew Peter and the rest of the disciples the nature of his kingdom; and that the honour that cometh from the world, was not to be expected by those who followed Christ.

The principles of the Christian life are, First. To have a sincere desire to belong to Christ. If any man be WILLING to be my disciple, &c. Secondly. To renounce self-dependance, and selfish pursuits.—Let him deny HIMSELF. Thirdly. To embrace the condition, which God has appointed, and bear the troubles and difficulties he may meet with in walking the Christian road.—Let him take up HIS CROSS. Fourthly. To imitate Jesus, and do and suffer all in his spirit.—Let him FOLLOW ME.

Let him deny himself] Απαρνησασθω, may well be interpreted, Let him deny, or renounce himself fully—in all respects—perseveringly. It is a compounded word, and the preposition απο abundantly increases the meaning. A follower of Christ will need to observe it in its utmost latitude of meaning, in order to be happy here, and glorious hereafter. A man's self is to him the prime cause of most of his miseries. See the note on Mark viii. 34.

Verse 25. For whosoever will save his life] That is, shall wish to save his life—at the expence of his conscience, and casting aside the cross, he shall lose it—the very evil he wished to avoid, shall overtake him; and he shall lose his soul into the bargain. See then how necessary it is to renounce one's self! But whatsoever a man loses in this world, for his steady attachment to Christ and his cause, he shall have amply made up to him in the eternal world.

Verse 26. Lose his own soul] Or, lose his life, την ψυχην αυτου. On what authority many have translated the word ψυχη, in the 25th verse, life, and in this verse, soul, I know not: but am certain it means life in both places. If a man should gain the whole world, its riches, honours, and pleasures, and lose his life, what would all these profit him, seeing they can only be enjoyed during life? But if the words be applied to the soul, they shew the difficulty—the necessity—and importance of salvation. The world, the Devil, and a man's own heart are opposed to his salvation; therefore it is difficult. The soul was made for God, and can never be united to him, nor be happy till saved from sin: therefore it is necessary. He who is saved from his sin, and united to God, possesses the utmost felicity that the human soul can enjoy either in this, or the coming world: therefore, this salvation is important. See also the note on Luke ix. 25.

Verse 27. For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father] This seems to refer to Dan. vii. 13, 14. "Behold one like the Son of man came—to the ancient of days—and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people and nations and languages should serve him." This was the glorious Mediatorial kingdom which Jesus Christ was now about to set up, by the destruction of the Jewish nation and polity, and the diffusion of his Gospel through the whole world. If the words be taken in this sense, the angels or messengers may signify the apostles and successors in the sacred ministry, preaching the Gospel in the power of the Holy Ghost. It is very likely that the words do not apply to the final judgment, to which they are generally referred; but to the wonderful display of God's grace and power after the day of Pentecost.

Verse 28. There be some—which shall not taste of death] This verse seems to confirm the above explanation, as our Lord evidently speaks of the establishment of the Christian Church after the day of Pentecost, and its final triumph after the destruction of the Jewish polity; as if he had said, "Some of you, my disciples, shall continue to live until these things take place." The destruction of Jerusalem, and the Jewish œconomy, which our Lord here predicts, took place about forty-three years after this: and some of the persons now with him, doubtless survived that period, and witnessed the extension of the Messiah's kingdom; and our Lord told them these things before, that when they came to pass, they might be confirmed in the faith, and expect an exact fulfilment of all the other promises and prophecies which concerned the extension and support of the kingdom of Christ.

To his kingdom, or in his kingdom. Instead of βασιλεια, kingdom, four MSS. later Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic, Saxon, and one copy of the Itala, with several of the primitive Fathers, read δοξη, glory: and to this is added, του πατρος αυτου, of his Father, by three MSS. and the versions mentioned before. This makes the passage a little more conformable to the passage already quoted from Daniel: and it must appear very clearly, that the whole passage speaks not of a future judgment, but of the destruction of the Jewish polity; and the glorious spread of Christianity in the earth, by the preaching of Christ crucified by the Apostles and their immediate successors in the Christian Church.

1. The disciples, by being constantly with their Master, were not only guarded against error, but were taught the whole truth: we should neglect no opportunity of waiting upon God —while Jesus continues to teach, our ear and heart should be open to receive his instructions. That what we have already received may be effectual, we must continue to hear, and pray on. Let us beware of the error of the Pharisees! they minded only external performances, and those things by which they might acquire esteem and reputation among men; thus, humility and love, the very soul of religion, were neglected by them—they had their reward—the approbation of those who were as destituute of vital religion as themselves.—Let us beware also of the error of the Sadducees, who, believing no other felicity but what depended on the good things of this world, became the flatterers and slaves of those who could bestow them, and so, like the Pharisees, had their portion only in this life. All false religions, and false principles conduct to the same end, however contrary they appear to each other. No two sects could be more opposed to each other than the Sadducees and Pharisees, yet their doctrines lead to the same end—they are both wedded to this world, and separated from God in the next.

2. From the circumstance mentioned in the conclusion of this chapter, we may easily see the nature of the kingdom and reign of Christ, it is truly spiritual and divine; having for its object the present holiness and future happiness of mankind. Worldly pomp, as well as worldly maxims, were to be excluded from it. Christianity forbids all worldly expectations, and promises blessedness to those alone who bear the cross, leading a life of mortification and self-denial. Jesus Christ has left us an example that we should follow his steps. How did he live?—What views did he entertain?—In what light did he view worldly pomp and splendor? These are questions which the most superficial reader may, without difficulty, answer to his immediate conviction. And has not Christ said that the disciple is not ABOVE the Master? If HE humbled himself, how can he look upon those who, professing faith in his name, are conformed to the world and mind earthly things? These disciples affect to be above their Lord; and as they neither bear his cross, nor follow him in the regeneration, they must look for another heaven than that in which he sits at the right hand of God. This is an awful subject, but how few of those, called Christians, lay it to heart!

3. The term CHURCH, in Greek, εκκλησια, occurs for the first time, in ver. 18. of this chapter. The word simply means an assembly or congregation, the nature of which is to be understood from connecting circumstances; for the word εκκλησια, as well as the terms congregation and assembly may be applied to any concourse of people, good or bad; gathered together for lawful or unlawful purposes. Hence, it is used, Acts xix. 32. for the mob, or confused rabble, gathered together against Paul, εκκλησια συγκεχυμενη, which the town-clerk distinguished ver. 39, from a lawful assembly, εννομῳ εκκλησια. The Greek word εκκλησια, seems to be derived from εκκαλεω, to call out of, or from, i. e. an assembly gathered out of a multitude; and must have some other word joined to it, to determine its nature, viz. the Church of God; the congregation collected by God, and devoted to his service. The Church of Christ; the whole company of Christians wheresoever found; because by the preaching of the Gospel, they are called out of the spirit and maxims of the world, to live according to the precepts of the Christian religion. This is sometimes called the Catholic or universal Church, because constituted of all the professors of Christianity in the world, to whatever sects or parties they may belong; and hence the absurdity of applying the term Catholic, which signifies universal, to that very small portion of it, the Church of Rome. In primitive times, before Christians had any stated buildings, they worshipped in private houses; the people that had been converted to God, meeting together in some one dwelling-house of a fellow convert, more convenient and capacious than the rest; hence the church that was in the house of Aquila and Priscilla, Rom. xvi. 3, 5. and 1 Cor. xvi. 19. and the church that was in the house of Nymphas, Col. iv. 15. Now, as these houses were dedicated to the worship of God, each was termed κυριου οικος kuriou oikos, the house of the Lord; which word in process of time, became contracted into κυριοικ kurioik, and κυριακη, and kuriake; and hence kirk of our northern neighbours, and cynic kirik, of our Saxon ancestors, from which, by corruption, changing the hard Saxon c into ch, we have made the word church. This term, though it be generally used to signify the people worshipping in a particular place, yet by a metonymy, the container being put for the contained, we apply, as it was originally, to the building which contains the worshipping people.

In the proper use of this word there can be no such thing as THE church, exclusively—there may be A church, and the CHURCHES, signifying a particular congregation, or the different assemblies of religious people: and hence, the Church of Rome, by applying it exclusively to itself, abuses the term, and acts as ridiculously, as it does absurdly. Church is very properly defined in the 19th article of the Church of England, to be "a congregation of faithful men, in the which the pure word of God is preached, and the sacraments duly ministered, according to Christ's ordinance."

NOTES ON CHAP. XVII.

Verse 1. After six days] Mark ix. 2. has the same number; but Luke says, ix. 28. after eight days: the reason of this difference seems to be the following: Matthew and Mark reckon the days from that mentioned in the preceding chapter, to that mentioned in this. Luke includes both days as well as the six intermediate; hence, the one makes eight, the other six, without any contradiction.

Peter, James and John] He chose those, that they might be witnesses of his Transfiguration: two or three witnesses being required by the scripture to substantiate any fact. Eminent communications of the Divine favour prepare for, and entitle to great services, and great conflicts. The same three were made witnesses of his agony in the garden, chap. xxvi. 37.

A high mountain] This was one of the mountains of Galilee, but whether mount Tabor or not, is uncertain. Some think it was Mount Hermon. St. Luke says, Christ and his disciples went up into the mountain to pray, chap. ix. 28.

Verse 2. Was transfigured] That fulness of the God-head, which dwelt bodily in Christ, now shone forth through the human nature, and manifested to his disciples not only that Divinity which Peter had before confessed, chap. xvi. 16. but also the glorious resurrection body, in which they should exist in the presence of God to eternity.

White as the light] But the Cod. Bezæ, some of the ancient Versions, and several of the Fathers read ως χιων, as snow; and this is the reading in Mark ix. 3.

Verse 3. Moses and Elias] Elijah came from heaven in the same body which he had upon earth, for he was translated, and did not see death, 2 Kings, ii. 11. And the body of Moses was probably raised again, as a pledge of the resurrection; and as Christ is to come to Judge the quick and the dead, for we shall not all die, but all shall be changed, 1 Cor. xv. 51. he probably gave the full representation of this in the person of Moses, who died, and was thus raised to life, (or appeared now as he shall appear when raised from the dead in the last day;) and in the person of Elijah, who never tasted death. Both their bodies exhibit the same appearance, to shew, that the bodies of glorified saints are the same, whether the person had been translated, or whether he had died. It was a constant and prevalent tradition among the Jews, that both Moses and Elijah should appear in the times of the Messiah, and to this very tradition the disciples refer, ver. 10.

We may conceive that the Law in the person of Moses, the great Jewish legislator; and the Prophets in the person of Elijah, the chief of the prophets, came now to do homage to Jesus Christ, and to render up their authority into his hands; as he was the END of the Law, and the grand subject of the predictions of the prophets. This appears more particularly from what St. Luke says, chap. ix. 31. that Moses and Elijah conversed with our Lord on his death, which he was about to accomplish (πληρουν to fulfil,) because in it, all the rites, ceremonies and sacrifices of the Law, as well as the predictions of the prophets, were fulfilled.

Verse 4. Peter said—let us make, &c.] That is, when he saw Moses and Elijah ready to depart from the mount, Luke ix. 33. he wished to detain them that he might always enjoy their company with that of his Lord and Master, still supposing that Christ would set up a temporal kingdom upon earth.

Verse 5. A bright cloud overshadowed them] Or as six MSS. and Ephraim read it, a cloud of light, νεφελη φωτος; which reading GRIESBACH has admitted into the text. As a bright cloud, or a cloud of light, could not overshadow, or cast any kind of shade, the word επισκιασει should be translated, surrounded them. A cloud was frequently the symbol of the Divine presence, but such a cloud had always something very remarkable in its appearance. Ezekiel, chap. i. 4. represents it as a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself, and a brightness about it, and out of the midst thereof, as the colour of amber out of the midst of the fire, and in ver. 28. he tells us, that this was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. See also Exod. xvi. 10. xl. 33, &c. Ezek. xliii. 2. and 1 Chron. v. 14. But it was generally in a thick, dark cloud, that God manifested himself under the Law; see Exod. xix. 9. and xx. 21. This might be designed as emblematical of the Old Covenant, which was but the shadow of the good things which were to come, Heb. x. 1. and the cloud of light mentioned here, the emblem of that glorious display of God in his Gospel, by which life and immortality were brought to light, 2 Tim. 1. 10.

This is my beloved Son] Ουτος εστιν ο υιος μου ο αγαπητος, εν ω ευδοκησα, This is my Son, the beloved one, in whom I have delighted, or, been well pleased. God adds his testimony of approbation to what was spoken of the sufferings of Christ by Moses and Elijah; thus shewing, that the sacrificial œconomy of the Old Covenant was in itself of no worth, but as it referred to the grand atonement which Jesus was about to make; therefore he says, In him HAVE I delighted, (ευδοκησα) intimating that it was in him alone, as typified by those sacrifices, that he HAD delighted through the whole course of the legal administration; and that it was only in reference to the death of his Son, that he accepted the offerings and oblations made to him under the Old Covenant. Hear HIM. The disciples wished to detain Moses and Elijah that they might hear them: but God shews that the Law which had been in force, and the Prophets which had prophesied until now, must all give place to Jesus, and he alone must now be attended to as the Way, the Truth, and the Life; for no man could now come unto the Father but through him. This voice seems also to refer to that prediction in Deut. xviii. 15. The Lord shall raise up a Prophet like unto me, HIM SHALL YE HEAR. Go no more to the Law, nor to the Prophets, to seek for a coming Messiah; for behold he IS come! hear and obey him, and him only.

This Transfiguration must have greatly confirmed the disciples in the belief of a Future State, and in the doctrine of the Resurrection; they saw Moses and Elijah still EXISTING, though the former had been gathered to his fathers upwards of 1400 years; and the latter had been translated nearly 900.

Verse 6. Fell on their face] Dismayed by the voice, and dazzled by the glory of the cloud. So Daniel, chap. viii. 17. and Saul of Tarsus, Acts ix. 4.

Verse 7. Jesus came and touched them] Exactly parallel to this account is Dan. viii. 18. I was in a deep sleep, i. e. (a trance) on my face towards the ground; but he TOUCHED me, and set me upright. From Jesus alone are we to expect divine communications, and by his power only are we able to bear, and improve them. It is very likely that this Transfiguration took place in the night, which was a more proper season to shew forth its glory, than the day time, in which a part of the splendor must necessarily be lost by the presence of the solar light. Besides, St. Luke, chap. ix. 37. expressly says, that it was on the next day after the Transfiguration, that our Lord came down from the mount.

Verse 9. Tell the vision to no man] See the note on chap. xvi. 20. and farther observe, that as this Transfiguration was intended to shew forth the final abolition of the whole Ceremonial Law; it was necessary that a matter which could not fail to irritate the Jewish rulers and people, should be kept secret, till Jesus had accomplished vision and prophecy by his death and resurrection.

The whole of this emblematic transaction appears to me to be intended to prove, 1st. The reality of the world of Spirits, and the immortality of the soul. 2dly. of Christ, and the glory that should follow. 4thly. The establishment of the mild, light-bringing, and life-giving Gospel of the Son of God. And 5thly. That as the Old Jewish Covenant, and Mediatorship had ended, Jesus was now to be considered as the sole Teacher, the only availing offering for sin, and the grand Mediator between God and man.

Verse 10. His disciples] Instead of HIS disciples, some MSS. with the Coptic, Armenian, Vulgate, all the Itala except two, and Origen, read simply, οι μαθηται, THE disciples i. e. those only who had been with him on the mount, Peter, James and John.

Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?] As the disciples saw that Elijah returned to heaven, knowing the tradition of the elders, and the prophesy on which the tradition was founded, Mal. iv. 5, 6. Behold I send you Elijah the Prophet, before the great and terrible day of the Lord shall come; and he shall turn the hearts, &c. It was natural enough for them to inquire what the meaning of the tradition, and the intention of the prophecy were.

Verse 11. Elias—shall first come and restore all things.] Or, will reform, αποκαταστησει; this word our Lord quotes from the Septuagint; who render the Hebrew והשיב לבאבות veheshéb leb aboth âl banim, he will cause the heart of the fathers to turn to the children, by ος αποκαταστησει καρδιαν πατρος προς υιον, who will convert or restore the heart of the father to the son. We are not therefore to understand the version of the Septuagint quoted by our Lord, in any other sense than the Hebrew will allow. No fanciful restoration of all men, devils and damned spirits, is spoken of as either being done, or begun by the ministry of John; but merely that he should preach a doctrine, tending to universal reformation of manners, and should be greatly successful: see Mat. iii. 1—7. and especially Luke iii. 3—15. where we find that a general reformation had taken place, 1. among the common people; 2. among the tax-gatherers; and 3. among the soldiers. And as John announced the coming Christ, who was to baptize with the Holy Ghost, i. e. to enlighten, change and purify the heart, that the reform might be complete, both outward and inward, he may be said, in the strictest sense of the word, to have fulfilled the prophecy: and that he was the Elijah mentioned by Malachi, the words of Gabriel to the virgin Mary prove; Luke i. 17. And he (John) shall go before him (Christ) in the spirit and power of Elijah, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, &c. and that his ministry was powerfully effectual for this purpose, we have already seen.

Verse 12. Knew him not] Or, ουκ επεγνωσαν αυτον, They have not acknowledged him. That is, the Jewish rulers have not acknowledged him, did not receive him as the forerunner of the Messiah. But it appears that all the rest acknowledged him as such; and some, from the power and demonstration of his preaching, were inclined to think he was more, even the Messiah himself: see Luke iii. 15.

Verse 13. Then the disciples understood] When he spoke of the sufferings of this prophetic Elijah, and also of his own, which had been the subject of the conversation on the mount, during the Transfiguration; they clearly apprehended that he spoke of John the Baptist.

Verse 14. When they were come to the multitude] It appears that a congregation had been collected during our Lord's stay on the mount; how great must have been the desire of these people to hear the words of Christ! The assembly is self collected, and no delay on the preacher's side discourages them—they continue to wait for him: in the present day how rare is this zeal! how few by the most pathetic invitation can be brought together, even at the most convenient times, to hear the same doctrines, and to get their souls healed by the same wonder-working Christ!

Kneeling down to him] Or falling at his knees, γονυπετων. The ancients consecrated the EAR to Memory; the FOREHEAD to Genius; the RIGHT HAND to Faith, and the KNEES to Mercy; hence those who entreated favour, fell at and touched the knees of the person whose kindness they supplicated.—See Wakefield's Commentary, and see the note on Exod. ix. 29. where the subject is largely explained.

Verse 15. My son—is lunatick] Σεληνιαζεται. One who was most affected with his disorder at the change and full of the moon. See on chap. iv. 24. But this lunacy was occasioned by a Dæmon, see ver. 18. and Mark ix. 17. Luke ix. 38. In this case, the Devil intended to hide himself under the appearance of a natural disorder, that no supernatural means might be resorted to for his expulsion.—See a remarkable account on Luke ix. 39.

Falleth ofttimes into the fire, and oft into the water.] The paroxysms of his disorder frequently recurred, and among his numerous falls, some were into the fire, and some into the water: so that on this account, his life was in continual danger. Those who are under the influence of the Devil, are often driven to extremes in every thing. Such are often driven into the fire of presumption, or the waters of despair. Satan takes advantage of our natural temper, state of health, and outward circumstances to plague and ruin our souls.

Verse 16. Thy disciples—could not cure him.] No wonder, when the cure must be effected by supernatural agency, and they had not faith enough to interest the power of God in their behalf, ver. 20. A spiritual disorder must have a spiritual remedy: natural means, in such cases, signify just—nothing.

Verse 17. O faithless and perverse generation!] These and the following words may be considered as spoken, 1. To the disciples, because of their unbelief, ver. 20. 2. To the father of the possessed, who should have brought his son to Christ. 3. To the whole multitude, who were slow of heart to believe in him as the Messiah, notwithstanding the miracles which he wrought.—See KYPKE.

Perverse, διεστραμμενη, signifies 1. such as are influenced by perverse opinions, which hinder them from receiving the truth: and, 2. such as are profligate in their manners.—KYPKE. This last expression could not have been addressed to the disciples, who were certainly saved from the corruption of the world; and whose minds had been lately divinely illuminated by what passed at and after the Transfiguration: but at all times the expression was applicable to the Jewish people.

Verse 18. Jesus rebuked the devil] Deprived him of all power to torment the child; and obliged him to abandon his present usurped habitation.

There are some souls whose cure God reserves to himself alone, and to whom all the applications of his ministers appear to be utterly ineffectual. He sometimes does all without them, that they may know they can never do any good without him. QUESNEL.

Verse 19. Why could not we cast him out?] They were confounded at their want of success—but not at their want of faith, which was the cause of their miscarriage! When the ministers of the Gospel find their endeavours, with respect to some places or persons, ineffectual; they should come by private prayer, to Christ, humble themselves before him, and beg to be informed whether some evil in themselves have not been the cause of the unfruitfulness of their labours.

Verse 20. Because of your unbelief] Are we preachers of the Gospel? Do the things of God rest upon our minds with a deep and steady conviction? Can we expect that a doctrine which we do not, from conviction, credit ourselves, can be instrumental in our hands of begetting faith in others? So we preached, and so ye believed. The word preached, generally begets in the people the same spirit which the preacher possesses. Instead of απιστιαν, unbelief, the famous Vatican MS. and Cod. Cyprius, six others, Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, and Arabic, Origen and Chrysostom read ολιγοπιστιαν littleness of faith. The disciples had some faith, but not enough—they believed, but not fully.

As a grain of mustard seed] Some eminent critics think this a proverbial expression, intimating a GREAT DEGREE of faith, because removing mountains, which St. Paul, 1 Cor. xiii. 2. attributes to ALL FAITH, i. e. the greatest possible degree of faith, is attributed here by our Lord, to that faith which is as a grain of mustard seed. However this may be, there can be no doubt that our Lord means, as BISHOP PEARCE well remarks, a thriving and increasing faith; which like the grain of mustard seed, from being the least of seeds, Verse 21. This kind goeth not out but by prayer, &c.] Τουτο το γενος, this kind, some apply to the faith which should be exercised on the occasion, which goeth not out doth not exert itself, but by prayer and fasting; but this interpretation is, in my opinion, far from solid. However, there is great difficulty in the text. The whole verse is wanting in the famous Vatican MS. one of the most ancient and most authentic perhaps in the world; and in another one of Colbert's written in the 11th or 12th century. It is wanting also in the Coptic, Ethiopic, Syriac hieros, and in one copy of the Itala. But all the MSS. acknowledge it in the parallel place, Mark ix. 29. only the Vatican MS. leaves out νηστια, fasting. I strongly suspect it to be an interpolation; but if it be, it is very ancient, as Origen, Chrysostom, and others of the primitive Fathers, acknowledge it. But while candour obliges me to acknowledge that I cannot account for the fact here alleged, that a certain class or genus of Dæmons cannot be expelled but by prayer and fasting, while others may be ejected without them; I can give a sense to the passage, which all my readers will easily understand, viz. that there are certain evil propensities in some persons which, pampering the flesh, tends to nourish and strengthen; and that self-denial and fasting, accompanied by prayer to God, are the most likely means not only to mortify such propensities, but also to destroy them. For other remarkable circumstances relative to this case, see the notes on Mark ix. 17, &c.

Verse 22. They abode in Galilee] Lower Galilee, where the city of Capernaum was.

The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men] Μελλει —παραδιδοσθαι εις χειρας—The Son of man is about to be delivered into the hands, &c. I am fully of the mind of two eminent critics, Grotius and Wakefield, that παραδιδοσθαι should be here translated, delivered, or delivered up, not betrayed: and that the agency in this case, should be referred to God, not to Judas. Jesus was delivered up, by the counsel of God, to be an atonement for the sin of the world. See Acts iv. 37 and 28. Against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, to do what thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done. Herod and Pontius Pilate—were gathered together.

Verse 23. They were exceeding sorry.] Since the conversation on the mount with Moses and Elijah, Peter, James, and John could have no doubt that their Lord and Master must suffer; and that it was for this end he came into the world; but while they submitted to the counsel of God, their affection for him caused them to feel exquisite distress.

Verse 24. They that received tribute] This was not a tax to be paid to the Roman government; but a tax for the support of the temple. The Law, Exod. xxx. 13. obliged every male among the Jews to pay half a shekel yearly, for the support of the temple; and this was continued by them wherever dispersed, till after the time of Vespasian, see Josephus, WAR, book vii. c. 6. who ordered it afterwards to be paid into the Roman treasury. The word in the Text, which is generally translated tribute—τα διδραχμα, signifies the didrachma, or two drachms. This piece of money was about the value of two Attic drachms, each equal to fifteen pence of our money. The didrachma of the Septuagint, mentioned Exod. xxx. 13. was twice as heavy as the Attic, for it was equal to a whole shekel, this being the value of that piece of money at Alexandria, the place where the Septuagint translation was made; for the half shekel mentioned in the above passage, they render ημισυ του διδραχμου, the half of a didrachma.

Verse 25. He saith, Yes.] From this reply of Peter, it is evident that our Lord customarily paid all taxes, tributes, &c. which were common among the people wherever he came. The children of God are subject to all civil laws in the places where they live—and should pay the taxes levied on them by public authority: and though any of these should be found unjust, THEY rebel not, as their business is not to reform the politics of nations, but the morals of the world.

kings of the earth [a] take custom or tribute? of their own children, or of strangers?

27 Notwithstanding, [b] lest we should offend them, go thou to the sea, and cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find [c] a piece of money: that take, and give unto them for me and thee.

[c] Or, a stater. It is half an ounce of silver, in value 2*s*. 6*d*. after 5*s*. the ounce.

Verse 26. Then are the children free.] As this money is levied for the support of that temple, of which I am Lord, then I am not obliged to pay the tax; and my disciples, like the priests that minister, should be exempted from the necessity of paying.

Verse 27. Lest we—offend them] Be a stumbling-block to the priests, or rulers of the Jews, I will pay the tribute,—go thou to the sea—cast a hook, and take the first fish—thou shalt find a piece of money, στατηρα, a stater. This piece of money was equal in value to four drachms, or two shekels, (five shillings of our money) and consequently was sufficient to pay the tribute for our Lord and Peter, which amounted to about half-a-crown each. If the stater was in the mouth or belly of the fish before, who can help admiring the wisdom of Christ that discovered it there? If it was not before in the mouth of the fish, who can help admiring the power of Christ, that impelled the fish to go where the stater had been lost in the bottom of the sea, take it up, come towards the shore where Peter was fishing, and, with the stater in its mouth, or stomach, catch hold of the hook that was to draw it out of the water? But suppose there was no stater there, which is as likely as otherwise, then Jesus created it for the purpose, and here his Omnipotence was shewn; for to make a thing exist that did not exist before, is an act of unlimited power, however small the thing itself may be.

The account of the Transfiguration, the peculiar case of the lunatic, with his cure, and the miracle wrought to pay the tribute money, render this one of the most interesting and instructive chapters in the New Testament.

1. To what has already been said on the subject of the Transfiguration, nothing need be added: I have given that sense to it which the circumstances of the case, the construction of the words, and the analogy of Faith warrant. That others have understood the whole transaction differently, is readily granted. Some of the foreign critics, who are also called Divines, have stripped it, by their mode of interpretation, of all its strength, use, and meaning. With them it is thus to be understood:—"Jesus, with his disciples Peter, James, and John, went by night into a mountain, for the purpose of prayer and meditation; while thus engaged, the animal spirits of the disciples were overcome by watching and fatigue, and they fell asleep—in this sleep they dreamed, or Peter only dreamed, that he saw his Master encompassed with a glorious light, and that Moses and Elijah were conversing with him. That early in the morning, just as the sun was rising, there happened some electric or thunder-like explosions, (a thing not unfrequent near some mountains) by which the disciples were suddenly awoke; that Peter, whose mind was strongly impressed with his dream, seeing the rising sun shine gloriously upon his Master, and his strongly impressed senses calling to remembrance his late vision, he for a moment imagined he saw, not only the glory of which he had dreamed, but the persons also—Moses and Elijah, still standing on the mount with Christ; that not being as yet sufficiently awake, finding the images impressed on his imagination fleeting away with his returning exercise of reason, he cried out, before he was aware, Lord! it is good for us to be here, let us make three tabernacles, &c. but in a short time, having recovered the regular use of his senses, he perceived that it was a dream; and having told it to our Lord and his brother disciples, lest the Jews might take occasion of jealousy from it, he was desired to tell the vision to no man." This is the substance of that strange explanation given by those learned men, to this extraordinary transaction; a mode of interpretation only calculated to support that system, which makes it an important point to deny and decry all supernatural and miraculous influence, and to explain away all the spirituality of the New Testament. Whatever ingenuity may be in this pretended elucidation, every unprejudiced person must see that it can never be brought to accord with the letter, and concomitant circumstances of this most remarkable case.

2. The cure of the deaf and dumb lunatic, has been treated by the same critics, in nearly the same way, and for the same obvious design, namely, to exclude from the world, all supernatural agency; and could they succeed in this, of what value, or, indeed, utility, could the whole New Testament be to mankind? We might be well astonished to find such a history, with such a great variety of curious, and apparently interesting circumstances:—a wondrous person, labouring, preaching, suffering, dying, &c. &c. without having scarcely any thing in view, but a sort of merely moral reformation of the outward man! Truly, this "Is like an ocean into tempest toss'd,

To waft a feather, or to drown a fly."

But the truth of God's miraculous interpositions, the miracles of the New Testament, dæmoniacal possessions and influence, the atonement, the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, the regeneration of the corrupted human heart, &c. &c. must not be given up to please a certain description of persons, who have no commerce with God themselves, and cannot bear that others should either have or pretend to it.

3. The miracle wrought for the paying of the temple tribute money, is exceedingly remarkable. The note on ver. 27. brings this particularly to view. To what is there said, it may be added, that our Lord seems to have wrought this miracle, for the following purposes: 1. More forcibly to impress the minds of his disciples, and his followers in general, with the necessity and propriety of being subject to all the laws of the different states, kingdoms, &c. wheresoever the providence of God might cast their lot.

2. To shew forth his own unlimited power and knowledge, that they might be fully convinced that he knew all things, even to the most minute, and could do whatsoever he pleased, and that both his wisdom and power were continually interested in behalf of his true disciples.

3. To teach all believers a firm trust and reliance on Divine Providence, the sources of which can never be exhausted; and which, directed by infinite wisdom and love, will make every provision essentially requisite for the comfort, and support of life. How many of the poor followers of Christ have been enabled to discern his kind hand even in the means furnished them to discharge the taxes laid on them by the State! The profane and the unprincipled may deride, and mock on, but the people of God know it to be their duty and their interest to be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake; and while his grace and providence render this obedience in things both spiritual and secular, possible, his love, which their hearts feel, renders their duty their delight. The accomplishment of such ends as these, is worthy both of the wisdom and benevolence of Christ.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. At the same time] Or hour; but ὥρα is frequently used to signify some particular time: however, instead of ὥρα, three MSS. all the Itala, but four, and Origen, read ἡμέρα day. Origen says both readings were extant in MSS. in his time.

Who is the greatest] Could these disciples have viewed the kingdom of Christ in any other light than that of a temporal one? Hence they wished to know whom he would make his prime minister—whom his general—whom his chief chancellor—whom supreme judge, &c. &c. Is it he who first became thy disciple, or he who is thy nearest relative, or he who has most frequently entertained thee, or he who is the oldest, merely as to years? Could this inquiry have proceeded from any but the nine disciples, who had not witnessed our Lord's Transfiguration? Peter, James, and John, were surely more spiritual in their views! And yet how soon did even these forget that his kingdom was not of this world! See Mark x. 35, &c. John xviii. 10, &c. The disciples having lately seen the keys delivered to Peter, and found that he, with James and John, had been privileged with being present at the Transfiguration, it is no wonder if a measure of jealousy and suspicion began to work in their minds. From this inquiry we may also learn, that the disciples had no notion of Peter's supremacy; nor did they understand, as the Roman Catholics will have it, that Christ had constituted him their head, either by the conversation mentioned chap. xvi. 18, 19. or by the act mentioned in the conclusion of the preceding chapter. Had they thought that any such superiority had been designed, their present question must have been extremely impertinent. Let this be observed.

Verse 2. A little child] But this child could walk, for he called him to him. Nicephorus says, this was Ignatius, who was afterwards bishop of Antioch, and suffered martyrdom under, and by command of, the Roman emperor Trajan, in the 107th year of our Lord. But this good father, is not much to be depended on, being both weak and credulous.

Verse 3. Except ye be converted] Unless ye be saved from those prejudices which are at present so baneful to your nation, (seeking a temporal and not a spiritual kingdom) unless ye be clothed with the spirit of humility, ye cannot enter into the spirit, design, and privileges of my spiritual and eternal kingdom. The name of this kingdom should put you in mind of its nature.—1. The KING is heavenly; 2. His SUBJECTS are heavenly minded; 3. Their COUNTRY is heavenly, for they are strangers and pilgrims upon earth; 4. The GOVERNMENT of this kingdom is wholly spiritual and divine. See on ch. iii. 2.

And become as little children] i. e. Be as truly without worldly ambition, and the lust of power, as little children are, who act among themselves as if all were equal.

Verse 4. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself] So great is the disparity between the kingdom of Christ and the kingdoms of this world, that there is no way of rising to honours in the former, but by humility of mind, and continual self-abasement.

The same is greatest] Thus our Lord shews them, that they were all equal, and that there could be no superiority among them, but what must come from the deepest humility: he intimates also, that wherever this principle should be found, it would save its possesor from seeking worldly honours or earthly profits, and from seeking to be a ruler over his brethren, or a lord in God's heritage.

Verse 5. One such little child] As our Lord in the preceding verses considers a little child an emblem of a genuine disciple, so by the term in this verse, he means a disciple only. "Whosoever will receive, i. e. shew unto such a child-like, unambitious disciple of mine, any act of kindness for my sake, I will consider it as done to myself."

Verse 6. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones] But on the contrary, whosoever shall cause one of the least of those who believe in me to be stumbled—to go into the spirit of the world, or give way to sin,—such an one shall meet with the most exemplary punishment.

Let those who act the part of the Devil, in tempting others to sin, hear this declaration of our Lord, and tremble.

A millstone] Μυλος ονικος, an ass's millstone, because in ancient times, before the invention of wind and water mills; the stones were turned sometimes by slaves, but commonly by asses or mules.

Drowned in the depth of the sea.] It is supposed that in Syria, as well as in Greece, this mode of punishing criminals was practised; especially in cases of parricide, and when a person was devoted to destruction for the public safety, as in cases of plague, famine, &c. That this was the custom in Greece, we learn from the Scholiast on the Equites of Aristophanes. Οταν γαρ καταποντουν τινας, βαρος απο των τραχηλων εκρεμων. When a person was drowned, they hung a weight, (υπερβολον λιθον, Suidas) a vast stone about his neck. See the ancient Scholia upon the Equites, lin. 1360. and Suidas, in υπερβολον λιθον. We find also that it was a positive institute of the ancient Hindoo law. "If a woman," says the precept, "cause any person to take poison, sets fire to any person's house, or murders a man, then the magistrate having bound a stone to her neck, shall drown her."—Halhead's Code of Gentoo laws, 4to. edition, page 306.

Verse 7. Woe!] or, alas! ουαι. It is the opinion of some eminent critics, that this word is ever used by our Lord to express sympathy and concern.

Because of offences] Scandals, stumbling-blocks, persecutions, &c.

For it must needs be that offences come] Αναγκη γαρ εστι ελθειν τα σκανδαλα, for the coming of offences is unavoidable. Such is the wickedness of men, such their obstinacy, that they will not come unto Christ that they may have life, but desperately continue deceiving and being deceived. In such a state of things, offences, stumbling-blocks, persecutions, &c. are unavoidable.

Woe to that man] He who gives the offence, and he who receives it, are both exposed to ruin.

Verses 8 and 9. If thy hand, &c.] See the notes on chap. v. 29, 30.

Verse 10. One of these little ones] One of my simple, loving, humble disciples.

Their angels—always behold] Our Lord here not only alludes to, but in my opinion, establishes the notion received by almost all nations, viz. That every person has a guardian angel, and that these have always access to God, to receive orders relative to the management of their charge. See Psal. xxxiv. 8. Heb. i. 14.

Always behold the face] Hence, among the Jews, the angels were stiled מלכי פנים, malakey panim, angels of the face, and Michael is said to be שר הפנים, sar ha-panim, the prince of the face. This is an allusion to the privilege granted by eastern monarchs to their chief favourites; a privilege which others were never permitted to enjoy. The seven princes of Media and Persia, who were the chief favourites, and privy-counsellors of Ahasuerus, are said to see the king's face. Esth. i. 14.; see also 2 Kings xxv. 19. and Jerem. li. 25. Our Lord's words give us to understand, that humble hearted, child-like disciples, are objects of his peculiar care, and constant attention. The clause, εν ουρανοις, in the heavens, is wanting in several MSS. Versions and Fathers.

Verse 11. For the Son of man, &c.] This is added as a second reason, why no injury should be done to his followers. "The Son of man, has so loved them, as to come into the world to lay down his life for them."

That which was lost] Απολωλος. In Rev. ix. 11. Satan is called Απολλυων, Apolluon, the destroyer, or, him who lays waste. This name bears a near relation to that state in which our Lord tells us he finds all mankind,—lost, desolated, ruined. So it appears that Satan and men have the nearest affinity to each other—as, the destroyer and the destroyed,—the desolator and the desolated,—the loser and the lost. But the Son of man came to save the lost. Glorious news! may every lost soul feel it! This verse is omitted by five MSS. two Versions, and three of the Fathers; but of its authenticity there can be no doubt, as it is found in the parallel place, Luke xix. 10. on which verse there is not a single various reading found in any of the MSS. that have ever been discovered, nor in any of the ancient Versions.

Verse 12. Doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains] So our common translation reads the verse; others, Doth he not leave the ninety and nine UPON THE MOUNTAINS, and go, &c. This latter reading appears to me to be the best; because in Luke xv. 4. it is said, he leaveth the ninety and nine IN THE DESERT. The allusion, therefore, is to a shepherd feeding his sheep on the mountains, in the desert; not seeking the lost one ON the mountains.

Leaving the ninety and nine, and seeking the ONE strayed sheep:—This was a very common form of Speech among the Jews, and includes no mystery, though there are some who imagine that our Lord refers to the angels who kept not their first estate, and that they are in number to men, as NINETY-NINE are to ONE. But it is likely that our Lord in this place only alludes to his constant solicitude to instruct, heal, and save those simple people of the sea coasts, country villages, &c. who were scattered abroad, as sheep without a shepherd, (ch. ix. 36.) the Scribes and Pharisees paying no unto you, He rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray.

14 Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

15 ¶ Moreover [a] if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, [b] thou hast gained thy brother.

16 But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in [c] the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established.

attention to their present, or eternal well-being. This may be also considered as a lesson of instruction and comfort to backsliders.—How hardly does Christ give them up!

Verse 13. He rejoiceth more] It is justly observed by one on this verse, that it is natural for a person to express unusual joy at the fortunate accomplishment of an unexpected event.

Verse 14. It is not the will of your Father] If any soul be finally lost, it is not because God's will or counsel was against its salvation, or that a proper provision had not been made for it; but that though light came into the world, it preferred darkness to light, because of its attachment to its evil deeds.

Verse 15. If thy brother] Any who is a member of the same religious society, sin against thee, 1. Go and reprove him alone,—it may be in person; if that cannot be so well done, by thy messenger; or in writing (which in many cases is likely to be the most effectual.) Observe, our Lord gives no liberty to omit this, or to exchange it for either of the following steps. If this do not succeed,

Verse 16. 2. Take with thee one or two more] Men whom he esteems, who may then confirm and enforce what thou sayest; and afterwards, if need require, bear witness of what was spoken. If even this do not succeed, then, and not before,

Verse 17. 3. Tell it unto the church] Lay the whole matter before the congregation of Christian believers, in that place of which he is a member, or, before the minister and elders, as the representatives of the Church or assembly; if all this avail not, then,

Let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican.] To whom thou art, as a Christian, to owe earnest and persevering good will, and acts of kindness; but have no religious communion with him, till, if he have been convicted, he acknowledge his fault. Whosoever follows this threefold rule, will seldom offend others, and never be offended himself. J. WESLEY.

Reproving a brother who had sinned, was a positive command under the Law. See Lev. xix. 17. And the Jews have a saying, that one of the causes of the ruin of their nation was, "No man reproved another."—On the word Church, see at the end of chap. xvi.

Verse 18. Whatsoever ye shall bind, &c.] Whatever determinations ye make in conformity to these directions for your conduct to an offending brother, will be accounted just, and ratified by the Lord. See on ch. xvi. 19. and to what is there said, the following observations may be profitably added.

Οσα εαν δησητε—και οσα εαν λυσητε. Binding and loosing, in this place, and in Matt. xvi. 19. is generally restrained by Christian interpreters, to matters of discipline and authority. But it is as plain as the sun, by what occurs in numberless places dispersed throughout the Mishna, and from thence commonly used by the later Rabbins, when they treat of ritual subjects, that binding signified, and was commonly understood by the Jews at that time, to be a declaration that any thing was unlawful to be done; and loosing signified on the contrary, a declaration that any thing may be lawfully done. Our Saviour spoke to his disciples, in a language which they understood, so that they were not in the least at a loss to comprehend his meaning; and its being obsolete to us, is no manner of reason why we should conclude that it was obscure to them. The words bind and loose, are used in both places in a declaratory sense of things, not of persons. It is ὁ and ὅσα, in the neuter gender, both in chap. xvi. and here in this: i. e. Whatsoever thing or things ye shall bind or loose. Consequently, the same commission which was given at first to St. Peter alone, (ch. xvi. 19.) was afterwards enlarged to all the Apostles. St. Peter had made a confession, that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God. His confession of the divinity of our Lord, was the first that ever was made by man; to him, therefore, were given the keys of the kingdom of Heaven, i. e. God made choice of him among all the Apostles, that the Gentiles should first, by his mouth, hear and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

19 [a] Again I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth, as touching any thing that they shall ask, [b] it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.

the word of the Gospel, and believe. He first opened the kingdom of heaven to the Gentiles, when he preached to Cornelius. It was open to the Jews all along before; but if we should suppose that it was not, yet to them also did St. Peter open the kingdom of heaven, in his sermon at the great Pentecost. Thus, then, St. Peter exercised his two keys; that for the Jews at the great Pentecost; and that for the Gentiles, when he admitted Cornelius into the Church. And this was the reward of his first confession, in which he owned Jesus to be the promised Messiah. And what St. Peter loosed, i. e. declared as necessary to be believed and practised by the disciples here, was ratified above. And what he declared unlawful to be believed and practised, (i. e. what he bound,) was actually forbidden by God himself.

"I own myself obliged to Dr. Lightfoot for this interpretation of the true notion of binding and loosing. It is a noble one, and perfectly agrees with the ways of speaking then in use among the Jews. It is observable, that these phrases of binding and loosing occur no where in the New Testament, but in St. Matthew, who is supposed to have written his Gospel first in Hebrew, from whence it was translated into Greek, and then the force and use of the expression will better appear. Dr. Wotton's Miscell. Discourses, vol. i. p. 309, &c. &c.

"The phrases to bind and to loose were Jewish, and most frequent in their writers. It belonged only to the teachers among the Jews, to bind and to loose. When the Jews set any apart to be a Preacher, they used these words, 'Take thou liberty to teach what is BOUND and what is LOOSE." Strype's Preface to the Posthumous Remains of Dr. Lightfoot, page 38.

Verse 19. Again I say unto you] The word αμην verily, is added here, in ninety-eight MSS. (many of which are of the greatest antiquity and importance) seven editions, all the Arabic, the Slavonic, and several of the Itala. The taking in or leaving out such a word, may appear to some a matter of indifference; but as I am fully convinced Jesus Christ never spoke a useless or a needless word, my maxim is, to omit not one syllable that I am convinced (from such authority as the above) he has ever used, and to take in nothing that he did not speak. It makes the passage much more emphatic—Again, VERILY I say unto you, &c.

If two of you shall agree] Συμφωνησωσιν, symphonize or harmonize. It is a metaphor taken from a number of musical instruments set to the same key, and playing the same tune: here, it means a perfect agreement of the hearts, desires, wishes, and voices, of two or more persons praying to God. It also intimates that as a number of musical instruments, skilfully played, in a good concert, are pleasing to the ears of men, so a number of persons united together in warm, earnest, cordial prayer, is highly pleasing in the sight and ears of the Lord. Now this conjoint prayer refers, in all probability, to the binding and loosing in the preceding verse; and thus we see what power faithful prayer has with God!

It shall be done for them] What an encouragement to pray! even to two, if there be no more disposed to join in this heavenly work.

Verse 20. For where two—are gathered together in my name] There are many sayings among the Jews almost exactly similar to this, such as, Wherever even two persons are sitting in discourse concerning the Law, the Divine presence is among them.—See much more in Schoetgen. And the following, among the ancient Hindoos, is like unto it: "When Brahma, the Lord of creation, had formed mankind, and at the same time appointed his worship, he spoke and said, 'With this worship pray for increase, and let it be that on which ye shall depend for the accomplishment of all your wishes. With this remember God, that God may remember you. Remember one another, and ye shall obtain supreme happiness. God being remembered in worship, will grant you the enjoyment of your wishes: he who enjoyeth what hath been given unto him by God, and offereth not a portion unto him, is even as a thief. Know that good works come from Brahma, whose nature is incorruptible; wherefore, the omnipresent Brahma, IS PRESENT IN THE WORSHIP."—See the Bagvat Geeta, p. 45, 46.

In my name] Seems to refer particularly to a public profession of Christ and his Gospel.

There am I in the midst] None but God could say these words, to say them with truth, because God alone is every where present, and these words refer to his omnipresence. Wherever—suppose millions of assemblies were collected in the same moment, in different places of the creation, (which is a very possible case) this promise states, that Jesus is in each of them. Can any, therefore, say these words, except that God who fills both heaven and earth? But Jesus says these words: ergo—Jesus is God. Let it be observed, that Jesus is not among them to spy out their sins, or to mark down the imperfections of their worship; but to enlighten, strengthen, comfort, and save them.

Verse 21. Till seven times?] Though seven was a number of perfection among the Hebrews, and often meant much more than the units in it imply; yet it is evident that Peter uses it here in its plain literal sense, as our Lord's words sufficiently testify. It was a maxim among the Jews, never to forgive more than thrice: Peter enlarges this charity more than one half; and our Lord makes even his enlargement septuple. see ver. 22. Revenge is natural to man, i. e. man is naturally a vindictive being, and, in consequence, nothing is more difficult to him than forgiveness of injuries.

Verse 22. Seventy times seven.] There is something very remarkable in these words, especially if collated with Gen. iv. 24. where the very same words are used—"If any person kill LAMECH, he shall be avenged seventy times seven." The just God punishes sin in an exemplary manner. Sinful man, who is exposed to the stroke of divine justice, should be abundant in forgiveness, especially as the merciful only shall find mercy. See the note on chap. v. 7. and on vi. 14, 15. The sum seventy times seven makes four hundred and ninety. Now an offence, properly such, is that which is given wantonly, maliciously and without ANY PROVOCATION. It is my opinion, that let a man search ever so accurately, he will not find, that he has received, during the whole course of his life, four hundred and ninety such offences. If the man who receives the offence, has given any cause for it, in that case, the half of the offence, at least, towards his brother, ceases.

Verse 23. Therefore is the kingdom] In respect to sin, cruelty and oppression, God will proceed in the kingdom of heaven (the dispensation of the Gospel) as he did in former times; and every person shall give an account of himself to God. Every sin is a debt contracted with the justice of God; men are all God's own servants, and the day is at hand in which their Master will settle accounts with them, inquire into their work, and pay them their wages. Great Judge! what an awful time must this be, when with multitudes nothing shall be found but sin and insolvency!

By servant in the text, we are to understand, a petty king, or tributary prince; for no hired servant could possibly owe such a sum as is here mentioned.

Verse 24. Ten thousand talents.] Μυριων ταλαντων, a myriad of talents, the highest number known in Greek arithmetical notation. An immense sum, which if the silver talent be designed amounts to 4,500,000 sterling; but if the gold talent be meant, which is by far the most likely, then the amount is 67,500,000 sterling, a sum equal to the annual revenue of the British empire! See the note on Exod. xxv. 34. The margin above is incorrect.

Verse 25. He had not to pay] That is, not being able to pay. As there could not be the smallest probability that a servant, wholly dependant on his master, who was now absolutely insolvent, could ever pay a debt he had contracted, of more than 67 millions! so is it impossible for a sinner, infinitely indebted to Divine Justice, ever to pay a mite out of the talent.

Commanded him to be sold—his wife—children, &c.] Our Lord here alludes to an ancient custom among the Hebrews, of selling a man and his family, to make payment of contracted debts. See Exod. xxii. 3. Lev. xxv. 39, 47. 2 Kings iv. 1. This custom passed from among the Jews to the Greeks and Romans.

Verse 26. Fell down and worshipped him] Προσεκυνει αυτω, crouched as a dog before him, with the greatest deference, submission and anxiety.

Have patience with me] Μακροθυμησον επ' εμοι, be long minded towards me—give me longer space.

The means which a sinner should use to be saved, are, 1. Deep humiliation of heart—he fell down. 2. Fervent prayer. 3. Confidence in the mercy of God—have patience. 4. A firm purpose to devote his soul and body to his Maker—I will pay thee all. A sinner may be said, according to the œconomy of grace, to pay all, when he brings the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus to the throne of justice, by faith; thus offering an equivalent for the pardon he seeks, and paying all he owes to divine justice, by presenting the blood of the Lamb.

Verse 27. Moved with compassion] Or with tender pity. This is the source of salvation to a lost world, the tender pity, the eternal mercy of God.

Verse 28. A hundred pence] Rather denarii. The denarius was a Roman coin, worth about seven-pence halfpenny English. The original word should be retained, as our word penny does not convey the seventh part of the meaning. A hundred denarii would amount to about 3*l*. 2*s*. 6*d*. British, or, if reckoned as some do, at seven-pence three farthings, the sum would be 3*l*. 4*s* 7*d*.

Took him by the throat] Κρατησας αυτον επνιγε. There is no word I am acquainted with, which so fully expresses the meaning of the original επνιγε, as the Anglo-saxon term throttle: it signified (like the Greek) to half choak a person, by seizing his throat.

Verse 29. Fell down at his feet] This clause is wanting in several ancient MSS. Versions, and Fathers. Several printed editions also have omitted it; Griesbach has left it out of the text.

Pay thee all.] Παντα, all is omitted by a multitude of MSS. Versions, and Fathers.

Verse 30. And he would not, &c] To the unmerciful, God will shew no mercy; this is an eternal purpose of the Lord, which never can be changed. God teaches us what to do to a fellow sinner, by what HE does to US. Our fellow-servant's debt to us, and ours to God, are as one hundred denarii, to ten thousand talents! When we humble ourselves before him, God freely forgives us all this mighty sum! and shall we exact from our brother, recompence for the most trifling faults? Reader, if thou art of this unmerciful, unforgiving cast, read out the chapter.

"All the souls that are, were forfeit once,
And he who might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If HE, who is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? Oh! think on that,
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.—
Tho' justice be thy plea, consider this
That in the course of justice, none of us
Should see Salvation: we do pray for mercy;
And that same prayer, doth teach us all to render
The deeds of Mercy.—"

Verse 31. His fellow-servants saw what was done] An act of this kind is so dishonourable to all the followers of Christ, and to the spirit of his Gospel; that through the respect they owe to their Lord and Master, and through the concern they feel for the prosperity of his cause, they are obliged to plead against it at the throne of God.

Verse 32. His lord, after that he had called him] Alas! how shall he appear?—Confounded. What shall he answer?—He is speechless!

Verse 33. Shouldest not thou also have had compassion] Ουκ εδει και σε, Did it not become thee also? What a cutting reproach! It became ME to shew mercy, when thou didst earnestly entreat me, because I am MERCIFUL. It became thee also to have shewn mercy, because thou wert so deep in debt thyself, and hadst obtained mercy.

Verse 34. Delivered him to the tormentors] Not only continued captivity is here intended, but the tortures to be endured in it. If a person was suspected of fraud, as there was reason for in such a case as that mentioned here, he was put to very cruel tortures among the Asiatics, to induce him to confess. In the punishments of China, a great variety of these appear; and probably there is an allusion to such torments in this place. Before, he and all that he had, were only to be sold. Now, as he has increased his debt, so he has increased his punishment; he is delivered to the tormentors, to the horrors of a guilty conscience, and to a fearful looking for a fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. But if this refers to the day of judgment, then the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched, are the tormentors.

Verse 35. So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you] The goodness and indulgence of God towards us, is the pattern we should follow in our dealings with others. If we take man for our exemplar we shall err, because our copy is a bad one; and our lives are not likely to be better than the copy we imitate. Follow Christ, be merciful as your Father who is in heaven is merciful. You cannot complain of the fairness of your copy. Reader, hast thou a child or servant, who has offended thee, and humbly asks forgiveness? Hast thou a debtor, or a tenant who is insolvent, and asks for a little longer time? And hast thou not forgiven that child or servant? Hast thou not given time to that debtor or tenant? How, then, canst thou ever expect to see the face of the just and merciful God? Thy child is banished, or kept at a distance; thy debtor is thrown into prison, or thy tenant sold up: yet the child offered to fall at thy feet; and the debtor or tenant, utterly insolvent, prayed for a little longer time, hoping God would enable him to pay thee all; but to these things thy stony heart and seared conscience paid no regard! O monster of ingratitude! Scandal to human nature, and reproach to God! if thou canst, go hide thyself—even in hell, from the face of the Lord!

Their trespasses.] These words are properly left out by GRIESBACH, and other eminent critics, because they are wanting in some of the very best MSS. most of the Versions, and by one of the chief of the Fathers. The words are evidently an interpolation; the construction of them is utterly improper; and the concord false.

In our common method of dealing with insolvent debtors, we in some sort imitate the Asiatic customs: we put them in prison, and all their circumstances there are so many tormentors; the place, the air, the company, the provision, the accommodations, all, all destructive to comfort, to peace, to health, and to every thing that humanity can devise. If the person be poor, or comparatively poor, is his imprisonment likely to lead him to discharge his debt? His creditor may rest assured that he is now farther from his object than ever; the man had no other way of discharging the debt, but by his labour; that is now impossible, through his confinement, and the creditor is put to a certain expence towards his maintenance. How foolish is this policy! And how much do such laws stand in need of revision and amendment. Imprisonment for debt, in such a case as that supposed above, can answer no other end than the gratification of the malice, revenge, or inhumanity of the creditor. Better sell all that he has, and, with his hands and feet untied, let him begin the world afresh. Dr. Dodd very feelingly inquires here, "Whether rigour in exacting temporal debts, in treating without mercy such as are unable to satisfy them—whether this can be allowed to a Christian, who is bound to imitate his God and Father? To a debtor, who can expect forgiveness only on the condition of forgiving others? To a servant who should obey his Master? and to a criminal, who is in daily expectation of his judge and final sentence?" Little did he think, when he wrote this sentence, that himself should be a melancholy proof, not only of human weakness, but of the relentless nature of those laws by which property, or rather money is guarded. The unfortunate Dr. Dodd was hanged for forgery, in 1777, and the above note was written only seven years before!

The unbridled and extravagant appetites of men, sometimes require a rigour even beyond the law, to suppress them. While, then, we learn lessons of humanity from what is before us, let us also learn lessons of prudence, sobriety, and moderation. The parable of the two debtors is blessedly calculated to give this information.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIX.

Verse 1. Beyond Jordan.] Or, by the side of Jordan. Matthew begins here to give an account of Christ's journey, (the only one he mentions) to Jerusalem, a little before the pass over, at which he was crucified. See Mark x. 1. Luke ix. 51.

Jesus came from Galilee (which lay to the north of Judea) into the coasts of Judea; and from thence, in his way to Jerusalem, he went through Jericho, (chap. xx. 17, 29.) which lay at the distance of sixty furlongs, or seven miles and a half from Jordan to the western side of it. See Joseph. WAR, book iv. chap. 8. sect. 3. It seems, therefore, most probable, that the course of Christ's journey, led him by the side of the river Jordan, not beyond it. That the Greek word περαν, especially with a genitive case as here, has sometimes this signification; see on John vi. 22. see also Bp. Pearce.

Verse 2. Great multitudes followed him] Some to be instructed—some to be healed—some through curiosity—and some to ensnare him.

Verse 3. Tempting him] Trying what answer he would give to a question which, however decided by him, would expose him to censure.

Is it lawful—for every cause?] Instead of αιτιαν, fault, cause, reason, three MSS. and the Coptic version read αμαρτιαν, sin or transgression: this was probably the original reading—the first syllable being lost, αρτιαν alone would remain, which a subsequent transcriber would suppose to be a mistake for αιτιαν, and so wrote it: hence this various reading. What made our Lord's situation at present so critical in respect to this question was: At this time there were two famous divinity and philosophical schools among the Jews, that of SHAMMAI, and that of HILLEL. On the question of divorce, the school of Shammai maintained, that a man could not legally put away his wife, exept for whoredom. The school of Hillel taught, that a man might put away his wife for a multitude of other causes, and when she did not find grace in his sight; i. e. when he saw any other woman that pleased him better. See the case of Josephus, mentioned in the note on chap. v. 30. and Calmet's Comment, Vol. I. part ii. p. 379. By answering the question, not from Shammai or Hillel, but from Moses, our blessed Lord defeated their malice, and confounded their devices.

Verse 4. He which made them at the beginning] When Adam and Eve were the first of human kind.

Made them male and female] Merely through the design of matrimonial union, that the earth might be thus peopled. To answer a case of conscience, a man should act as Christ does here; pay no regard to that which the corruption of manners has introduced into divine ordinances, but go back to the original will, purpose, and institution of God. Christ will never accommodate his morality to the times, nor to the inclinations of men. What was done at the beginning, is what God judged most worthy of his glory, most profitable for man, and most suitable to nature.

Verse 5. For this cause] Being created for this very purpose, that they might glorify their Maker in a matrimonial connection. A man shall leave, (καταλειψει, wholly give up) both father and mother—the matrimonial union being more intimate and binding than even paternal or filial affection:—and shall be closely united, προσκολληθησεται, shall be firmly cemented to his wife. A beautiful metaphor, which most forcibly intimates that nothing but death can separate them: as a well glued board will break sooner in the whole wood, than in the glued joint. So also the Hebrew word דבק dabak implies.

And they twain shall be one flesh?] Not only meaning, that they should be considered as one body; but also, as two souls in one body, with a complete union of interests, and an indissoluble partnership of life and fortune, comfort and support, desires and inclinations, joys and sorrows. Farther it appears to me, that the words in Gen. ii. 24. לבשר אחד lebasar achad, for one flesh, which our Lord literally translates, mean also, that children compounded as it were of both, should be the product of the matrimonial connection. Thus, they two (man and woman) shall be for the producing of one flesh, the very same kind of human creature with themselves. See the note on Gen. ii. 24.

Verse 6. What therefore God hath joined together] Συνεζευξεν, yoked together, as oxen in the plough, where each must pull equally, in order to bring it on. Among the ancients, when persons were newly married, they put a yoke upon their necks, or chains upon their arms, to shew that they were to be one, closely united, and pulling equally together in all the concerns of life. See KYPKE in loco.

The finest allegorical representation of the marriage union I have met with, is that antique gem representing the marriage of Cupid and Psyche, in the collection of the Duke of Marlborough: it may be seen also among Baron Stoch's gems, and casts or copies of it in various other collections. 1. Both are represented as winged, to shew the alacrity with which the husband and wife should help, comfort, and support each other; preventing as much as possible the expressing of a wish or want on either side, by fulfilling it before it can be expressed. 2. Both are veiled, to shew that modesty is an inseparable attendant on pure matrimonial connexions. 3. Hymen or Marriage goes before them with a lighted torch, leading them by a chain, of which each has a hold, to shew that they are united together, and are bound to each other, and that they are led to this by the pure flame of love, which at the same instant both enlightens and warms them. 4. This chain is not iron nor brass (to intimate that the marriage union is a state of thraldom or slavery) but it is a chain of pearls; to shew that the union is precious, beautiful and delightful. 5. They hold a dove, the emblem of conjugal fidelity, which they appear to embrace affectionately, to shew that they are faithful to each other, not merely through duty, but by affection, and that this fidelity contributes to the happiness of their lives. 6. A winged Cupid, or love, is represented as having gone before them, preparing the nuptial feast; to intimate that active affections, warm and cordial love are to be to them a continual source of comfort and enjoyment; and that this is the entertainment they are to meet with at every step of their affectionate lives. 7. Another Cupid or genius of love, comes behind, and places on their heads a basket of ripe fruits; to intimate, that a matrimonial union of this kind, will generally be blest with children who shall be as pleasing to all their senses, as ripe and delicious fruits to the smell and taste. 8. The genius of love that follows them, has his wings shrivelled up, or the feathers all curled, so as to render them utterly unfit for flight; to intimate, that love is to abide with them, that there is to be no separation in affection, but that they are to continue to love one another with pure hearts fervently. Thus love begins and continues this sacred union; as to end, there can be none, for God hath yoked them together.

A finer or more expressive set of emblems has never, I believe, been produced even by modern refined taste and ingenuity. This group of emblematical figures is engraved upon an onyx by Tryphon, an ancient Grecian artist. A fine drawing was made of this by Cypriani, and was engraved both by Bartolozzi and Sherwin. See one of these plates in the second volume of Bryant's Analysis of Ancient Mythology, page 392.

Verse 7. Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement?] It is not an unusual case for the impure and unholy to seek for a justification of their conduct from the law of God itself; and to wrest Scripture to their own destruction. I knew a gentleman so called, who professed deep reverence for the Sacred Writings, and, strange as it may appear, was outwardly irreproachable in every respect but one; that was, he kept more women than his wife. This man frequently read the Bible, and was particularly conversant with those places that spoke of or seemed to legalize the polygamy of the patriarchs!

A writing of divorcement] See the form of it in the note on chap. v. 31.

Verse 8. Moses because of the hardness of your hearts] It is dangerous to tolerate the least evil, though prudence itself may require it: because toleration, in this case, raises itself insensibly into permission, and permission soon sets up for command. Moses perceived that if divorce were not permitted, in many cases, the women would be exposed to great hardships through the cruelty of their husbands: for so the word σκληροκαρδια, is understood in this place by some learned men.

From the beginning it was not so.] The Jews named the books of the Law from the first word in each. Genesis they always term Bereshith, בראשית, which is the first word in it, and signifies In the beginning. It is probable that our Lord speaks in this way here, in Bereshith it was not so, intimating that the account given in Genesis is widely different. There was no divorce between Eve and Adam; nor did he or his family practise polygamy. But our Lord, by the beginning, may mean the original intention or design.

Verse 9. Except it be for fornication] See on chap. v. 33.

away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.

10 His disciples say unto him, [a] If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry.

b 1 Cor. 7. 2, 7, 9, 17.——c 1 Cor. 7. 32, 34. & 9. 5, 15.

The decision of our Lord must be very unpleasant to these men; the reason why they wished to put away their wives was, that they might take others whom they liked better; but our Lord here declares that they could not be remarried while the divorced person was alive: and that those who did marry, during the life of the divorced person, were adulterers; and heavy judgments were denounced, in their Law, against such: and as the question was not settled by the schools of Shammai and Hillel, so as to ground national practice on it; therefore they were obliged to abide by the positive declaration of the Law, as it was popularly understood, till these eminent schools had proved the word had another meaning. The grand subject of dispute between the two schools, mentioned above, was the word in Deut. xxiv. 1. When a man hath taken a wife—and she find no grace in his sight, because of some UNCLEANNESS, ערות eruath:—this the school of Shammai held to mean whoredom or adultery; but the school of Hillel maintained that it signified any corporeal defect, which rendered the person deformed, or any bad temper which made the husband's life uncomfortable. Any of the latter a good man might bear with; but it appears that Moses permitted the offended husband to put away the wife on these accounts, merely to save her from cruel usage.

In this discourse, our Lord shews that marriage (except in one case) is indissoluble, and should be so. 1st. By Divine institution, ver. 4. 2dly, By express commandment, ver. 5. 3dly, Because the married couple become one and the same person, ver. 6. 4thly, By the example of the first pair, ver. 8; and, 5thly, Because of the evil consequent on separation, ver. 9. The importance of this subject will, I hope, vindicate, or excuse the length of these notes.

Verse 10. If the case of the man] Του ανθρωπου, of a husband, so I think the word should be translated here. The Codex Bezæ, Armenian, and most of the Itala, have του ανδρος, which, perhaps, more properly signifies a husband, though both words are used in this sense.

Our word husband comes from the Anglo-saxon, hus and band: the bond of the house, anciently spelt housebond, so in my old MS. Bible. It is a lamentable case when the husband, instead of being the bond and union of the family, scatters and ruins it by dissipation, riot, and excess.

It is not good to marry.] That is, if a man have not the liberty to put away his wife when she is displeasing to him. God had said Gen. ii. 18. it is not good for man to be alone, i. e, unmarried. The disciples seem to say, that if the husband have not the power to divorce his wife when she is displeasing to him, it is not good for him to marry. Here was a flat contradiction to the decision of the Creator. There are difficulties and trials in all states; but let marriage and celibacy be weighed fairly, and I am persuaded the former will be found to have fewer than the latter. However, before we enter into an engagement, which nothing but death can dissolve, we had need to act cautiously; carefully consulting the will and word of God. Where an unbridled passion, or a base love of money lead the way, marriage is sure to be miserable.

Verse 11. All—cannot receive this saying] A very wise answer, and well suited to the present circumstances of the disciples. Neither of the states is condemned. If thou marry, thou dost well—this is according to the order, will and commandment of God. But if thou do not marry (because of the present necessity, persecution, worldly embarrassments, or bodily infirmity) thou dost better. See 1 Cor. vii. 25.

Verse 12. Eunuchs] Ευνουχος, from ευνην εχειν, to have the care of the bed, or bedchamber: this being the principal employment of eunuchs in the Eastern countries, particularly in the apartments of queens and princesses. These are they whom our Lord says are made eunuchs by men, merely for the above purpose.

So born from their mother's womb] Such as are naturally incapable of marriage, and consequently should not contract any.

For the kingdom of heaven's sake.] I believe our Lord here alludes to the case of the ESSENES, one of the most holy and pure sects among the Jews. These abstained from all commerce with women, hoping thereby to acquire a greater degree of purity, and be better fitted for the kingdom of God: children they had none of their own, but constantly adopted those of poor people, and brought them up in their own way. PHILO, JOSEPHUS and PLINY have largely described this very singular sect; and Dean PRIDEAUX, with his usual fidelity and perspicuity, has given the substance of what each has said. CONNECT. vol. iii. p. 483, &c. Edit. 1725. The made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

13 ¶ [a] Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them.

14 But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for [b] of such is the kingdom of heaven.

15 And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence.

account is very interesting, and well worthy the attention of every Christian. Among the Rabbins we find these different kinds of eunuchs, not only mentioned, but circumstantially described, סריס חמה saris chamah, eunuchs of the sun, i. e. eunuchs by the hand of God; men born impotent. סריס אדם saris Adam, eunuchs of men, those who were castrated. And they add a third sort: those who make themselves eunuchs, abstain from marriage, &c. that they may give themselves up to the study of the Divine Law. See many examples in Schoetgen.

He that is able to receive] Χωρειν χωρειτω. These words are variously translated: he who can take, let him take it; comprehend, let him comprehend it; admit, let him admit it. The meaning seems to be, let the man who feels himself capable of embracing this way of life, embrace it, but none can do it but he to whom it is given, who has it as a gift from his mother's womb.

The great ORIGEN understanding the latter clause of this verse (which I have applied to the Essenes) literally, O human weakness! went, and literally fulfilled it on himself!

Verse 13. Then were there brought unto him little children] These are termed by Luke, chap. xviii. 15. τα βρεφη, infants, very young children; and it was on this account, probably, that the disciples rebuked the parents, thinking them too young to receive good. See on Mark x. 16.

That he should put his hands] It was a common custom among the Jews to lay their hands on the heads of those whom they blessed, or for whom they prayed. This seems to have been done by way of dedication or consecration to God—the person being considered as the sacred property of God ever after. Often God added a testimony of his approbation, by communicating some extraordinary influence of the Holy Spirit. This rite has been long practised among Christians, when persons are appointed to any sacred office. But this consecration of children to God, seems to have grown out of use. It is no wonder that the great mass of children are so wicked, when so few are put under the care of Christ by humble, praying, believing parents. Let every parent that fears God, bring up his children in that fear; and by Baptism, let each be dedicated to the Holy Trinity. Whatever is solemnly consecrated to God, abides under his protection and blessing.

Verse 14. Of such is the kingdom of heaven,] Or, the kingdom of heaven is composed of such. This appears to be the best sense of the passage, and utterly ruins the whole inhuman diabolic system of what is called non-elect infants' damnation; a doctrine which must have sprung from Moloch, and can only be defended by a heart in which he dwells. A great part of God's kingdom is composed of such, literally: and those only who resemble little children shall be received into it; see on chap. xviii. 3. Christ loves little children because he loves simplicity and innocence; he has sanctified their very age by passing through it himself—the Holy Jesus was once a little child.

Verse 15. He—departed thence.] That is, from that part of Judea which was beyond Jordan, ver. 1. and then went to Jericho, see chap. xx. 29.

Verse 16. One came] Instead of εις one, several MSS. the Slavonic Version and Hillary read, νεανισκος τις a certain young man.

Good, &c.] Much instruction may be had from seriously attending to the conduct, spirit, and question of this person 1. He came running, (Mark x. 17.) for he was deeply convinced of the importance of his business, and seriously determined to seek so as to find.

2. He kneeled, or caught him by the knees, thus evidencing his humility, and addressing himself only to Mercy. See chap. xvii. 14.

3. He came in the spirit of a disciple, or scholar, desiring to be taught a matter of the utmost importance to him—good Teacher.

4. He came in the spirit of obedience; he had worked hard to no purpose, and he is still willing to work, provided he can have a prospect of succeeding—What good thing shall I do?

5. His question was the most interesting and important that any soul can ask of God—How shall I be saved?—

αγαθον. This important reading is found in BDL. three others, the Coptic, Sahidic, Armenian, Ethiopic, latter Syriac, Vulgate, Saxon; all the Itala but one. Origen, Eusebius, Cyril, Dionysius Areop. Antiochus, Novatian, Jerom, Augustin, and Juvencus. Erasmus, Grotius, Mill and Bengel, approve of this reading. This authority appears so decisive to Griesbach, that he has received this reading into the text of his second edition, which in the first he had interlined. And instead of None is good but the one God, he goes on to read, on nearly the same respectable authorities, εις εστιν ο αγαθος, There is one who is good. Let it be observed also that in the 16th verse, instead of διδασκαλε αγαθε, good teacher, διδασκαλε only, is read by BDL. one other, one Evangelistarium, the Ethiopic, three of the Itala, Origen and Hilary. The whole passage therefore may be read thus: O Teacher! what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, Why dost thou question me concerning that good thing? There is one that is good, (Or he who is good is one) But if thou art willing to enter into that life, keep the commandments. This passage, as it stood in the common editions, has been considered by some writers, as an incontrovertible proof against the Divinity or godhead of Christ. A very learned person, in his note on this place, thus concludes concerning it: "Therefore our Saviour cannot be GOD: and the notion of, I know not what, a Trinity in Unity, THREE Gods in ONE, is here proved beyond all controversy, by the unequivocal declaration of JESUS CHRIST HIMSELF, to be ERRONEOUS and IMPOSSIBLE." Not so. One of the greatest critics in Europe, not at all partial to the Godhead of Christ, has admitted the above readings into his text, on evidence which he judged to be unexceptionable. If they be the true readings, they destroy the whole doctrine built on this text: and indeed the utmost that the enemies of the Trinitarian doctrine can now expect from their formidable opponents, concerning this text, is to leave it neuter.

Keep the commandments.] From this we may learn that God's great design in giving his Law to the Jews, was to lead them to the expectation and enjoyment of eternal life. But as all the Law referred to Christ, and he became the end of the Law for righteousness (justification) to all that believe, so he is to be received, in order to have the end accomplished, which the Law proposed.

Verse 18. Thou shalt do no murder, &c.] But some say these commandments are not binding on us—vain deceived men! Can a murderer, an adulterer, a thief and a liar enter into eternal life? No. The God of purity and justice has forbidden it. But we are not to keep these commandments in order to purchase eternal life. Right. Neither Jesus Christ nor his genuine messengers say, you are. To save your souls, Christ must save you from your sins, and enable you to walk before him in newness of life.

Verse 19. Honour thy father and thy mother] Σου thy, is omitted by almost every MS. of respectability.

Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.] Self-love, as it is generally called, has been grievously declaimed against, even by religious people, as a most pernicious and dreadful evil. But they have not understood the subject, on which they spoke. They have denominated that intense propensity which unregenerate men feel to gratify their carnal appetites and vicious passions, self-love: whereas it might be more properly termed self-hatred, or self-murder. If I am to love my neighbour as myself, and this "love worketh no ill to its neighbour," then self-love, in the sense in which our Lord uses it, is something excellent. It is properly a disposition essential to our nature, and inseparable from our being, by which we desire to be happy, by which we seek the happiness we have not, and rejoice in it when we possess it. In a word, it is a uniform wish of the soul to avoid all evil, and to enjoy all good. Therefore, he who is wholly governed by self-love, properly and scripturally speaking, will devote his whole soul to God, and earnestly and constantly seek all his peace, happiness and salvation in the enjoyment of God. But self-love cannot make me happy. I am only the subject which receives the happiness, but am not the object that constitutes this happiness; for it is that object, properly speaking, that I love, and love not only for its own sake, but also for the sake of the happiness which I enjoy through it. "No man," saith the Apostle, "ever hated his own flesh." But he that sinneth against God wrongeth his own soul, both of present and eternal salvation; and is so far from being governed by self-love, that he is the implacable enemy of his best and dearest interests in both worlds.

Verse 20. All these have I kept] I have made these precepts the rule of my life. There is a difference worthy of notice between this and our Lord's word. He says, ver. 17. τηρησον keep, earnestly, diligently, as with watch and ward; probably referring not only to the letter but to the spirit. The young man modestly says, all these (εφυλαξα) have I observed; I have paid attention to, and endeavoured to regulate my conduct by them. I have kept them in custody.

From my youth] Several MSS. Versions, and Fathers, leave out things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?

21 Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, [a] go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me.

22 But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions.

23 ¶ Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, That [b] a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

24 And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

25 When his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?

26 But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, a Ch. 6. 20. Luke 12. 33. & 16. 9. Acts 2. 45. & 4. 31, 35. 1 Tim 6. 18, 19.

b Ch. 13. 22. Mark 10. 24. 1 Cor. 1. 26. 1 Tim. 6. 9, 10.

these words. Grotius and Mill approve of the omission, and Griesbach leaves them in the text with a note of suspicion. Perhaps the young man meant no more than that he had in general observed them, and considered them of continual obligation.

What lack I yet?] He felt a troubled conscience, and a mind unassured of the approbation of God; and he clearly perceived that something was wanting to make him truly happy.

Verse 21. If thou wilt be perfect] Τελειος ειναι, to be complete; to have the business finished, and all hinderances to thy salvation removed, go and sell that thou hast—go and dispose of thy possessions, to which it is evident his heart was too much attached, and give to the poor—for thy goods will be a continual snare to thee if thou keep them, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven—the loss, if it can be called such, shall be made amply up to thee in that eternal life about which thou inquirest—and come and follow me—be my disciple, and I will appoint thee to preach the kingdom of God to others. This was the usual call which Christ gave to his disciples. See Matt. iv. 19. viii. 22. ix. 9. Mark ii. 14.; and it is pretty evident from this, that he intended to make him a preacher of his salvation. How many, by their attachment to filthy lucre, have lost the honour of becoming or continuing ambassadors for the Most High. See on Mark x. 21.

Verse 22. Went away sorrowful] Men undergo great agony of mind while they are in suspence, between the love of the world and the love of their souls. When the first absolutely predominates, then they enjoy a factitious rest through a false peace: when the latter has the upper hand, then they possess true tranquillity of mind, through that peace of God that passeth knowledge.

He had great possessions.] And what were these in comparison of peace of conscience, and mental rest—besides, he had unequivocal proof that these contributed nothing to his comfort, for he is now miserable even while he possesses them! And so will every soul be, who puts worldly good in the place of the supreme God. See on Mark x. 22.

Verse 23. A rich man shall hardly enter] That is, into the spirit and privileges of the gospel in this world, and through them into the kingdom of glory. Earthly riches are a great obstacle to salvation; because it is almost impossible to possess them, and not to set the heart upon them—and they who love the world, have not the love of the Father in them. 1 John ii. 15. To be rich, therefore, is in general a great misfortune: but what rich man can be convinced of this? It is only God himself who, by a miracle of mercy, can do this. Christ himself affirms the difficulty of the salvation of a rich man, with an oath, verily, but who of the rich either hears or believes him!

Verse 24. A camel] Instead of καμηλον, camel, six MSS. read καμιλον, cable, a mere gloss inserted by some who did not know that the other was a proverb common enough among the people of the East.

There is an expression similar to this in the Koran. "The impious, who in his arrogance shall accuse our doctrine of falsity, shall find the gates of heaven shut: nor shall he enter there till a camel shall pass through the eye of a needle. It is thus that we shall recompense the wicked."—Al KORAN. Surat vii. ver. 37.

It was also a mode of expression common among the Jews, and signified a thing impossible. Hence this proverb. A camel in Media dances in a kabe; a measure which held about three pints. Again, No man sees a palm tree of gold, nor an elephant passing through the eye of a needle. Because these are impossible things. "Rabbi Shesheth answered Rabbi Amram, who had advanced an absurdity, Perhaps thou art one of the Pambidithians who can make an elephant pass through the eye of a needle: that is, says the Aruch, 'who speak things impossible." See Lightfoot and Schoetgen on this place.

Go through] But instead of διελθειν, about eighty MSS. with several Versions and Fathers, have εισελθειν, to enter in, but the difference is of little importance in an English translation; though of some consequence to the elegance of the Greek text.

Verse 25. Who then can be saved?] The question of the disciples seemed to intimate that most people were rich, and that therefore scarcely any could be saved. They certainly must have attached a different meaning to what constitutes a rich man, to what we in general do. Who is a rich man in our Lord's sense of the word? This is a very important question, and has not, that I know of, been explicitly answered. A rich man, in my opinion, is not one, who has so many hundreds or thousands more than some of his neighbours; but is one who gets more than is necessary to supply all his own wants, and those of his household, and keeps the residue still to himself; though the poor are starving through lack of the necessaries of life. In a word, he is a man who gets all he can, saves all he can, and keeps all he has gotten. Speak, reason! Speak, conscience! (for God has already spoken) Can such a person enter into the kingdom of God? ALL. NO!!!

Verse 26. With men this is impossible] God alone can take the love of the world out of the human heart. Therefore the salvation of the rich is represented as possible only to him: and indeed the words seem to intimate, that it requires more than common exertions of Omnipotence to save a rich man.

Verse 27. We have forsaken all] "A poor all," says one, "a parcel of rotten nets." No matter— they were their ALL, whether rotten or sound—besides they were the all they got their bread by; and such an all as was quite sufficient for that purpose: and let it be observed, that that man forsakes much who reserves nothing to himself, and renounces all expectations from this world, taking God alone for his portion. See chap. iv. 20.

To forsake all, without following Christ, is the virtue of a philosopher. To follow Christ in profession, without forsaking all, is the state of the generality of Christians. But to follow Christ and forsake all, is the perfection of a Christian.

What shall we have therefore?] Τι αρα εσται ημιν, what REWARD shall we get? This Kypke proves to be the meaning of the words from some of the best Greek writers.

Verse 28. Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, &c. The punctuation which I have observed here, is that which is followed by the most eminent critics: the regeneration is thus referred to the time when Jesus shall sit on the throne of his glory, and not to the time of following him, which is utterly improper.

The regeneration, παλιγγενεσια. Some refer this to the time in which the new heavens and the new earth shall be created, and the soul and body united. The Pythagoreans termed that παλιγγενεσια, when, according to their doctrine of the transmigration or metempsychosis, the soul entered into a new body, and got into a new state of being. Clement, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, calls the restoration of the world, after the deluge, by the same name.

Judging, the twelve tribes] From the parallel place, Luke xxii. 28—30. it is evident that sitting on thrones, and judging the twelve tribes, means simply obtaining eternal salvation, and the distinguishing privileges of the kingdom of glory, by those who continued faithful to Christ in his sufferings and death.

Judging, κρινοντες. Kypke has shewn that κρινεσθαι is to be understood in the sense of governing, presiding, holding the first or most distinguished place. Thus, Gen. xlix. 16. Dan shall JUDGE his people, i. e. shall preside in, or rule over them; shall occupy a chief place among the tribes. It is well known that the Judges among the Jews were moderators, captains, chief, or head men. The sense therefore of our Lord's words appears to be, that these disciples should have those distinguished seats in glory, which seem to belong peculiarly to the first confessors and martyrs. See 1 Thess. iv. 14. & 16. and particularly Rev. xx. 4—6.

The last quoted passage brings into view the doctrine of the Millennium, when Jesus, after having formed the new heavens, and the new earth, shall reign here gloriously among his ancients 365,000 years; for the thousand years referred to above, are certainly prophetical years; in which, it is well known, each day stands for a year.

Others of no mean note, are of opinion that the regeneration means the conversion of men by the preaching of the gospel— that sitting on twelve thrones, signifies the state of eminent dignity to which the Apostles should be raised—and that judging the twelve tribes of Israel, means no more than exercising authority in the Church, and dispensing laws to the people of God. But I confess I do not see the propriety of this application of the terms, as the following verse seems to fix the meaning mentioned above.

Verse 29. Shall receive a hundredfold] Viz. in this life, in value, though perhaps not in kind: and in the world to come everlasting life. A glorious portion for a persevering believer! The fullness of GRACE here, and the fullness of GLORY hereafter! See on Mark x. 30.

Verse 30. But many that are first, &c.] The Jews, who have been the first and most distinguished people of God, will in general reject the gospel of my grace, and be consequently rejected by me. The Gentiles, who have had no name among the living, shall be brought to the knowledge of the truth, and become the first, the chief and most exalted people of God. That this prediction of our Lord has been literally fulfilled, the present state of the Christian and Jewish Churches sufficiently proves. To illustrate this fully, and to demonstrate that the Jews and Gentiles were now put on an equal footing by the gospel, our Lord speaks the following parable, which has been unhappily divided from its connection, by making it the beginning of a new chapter.

CHAPTER XX.

The similitude of the householder hiring labourers into his vineyard, to shew that the Gentiles should be preferred to the Jews, according to what was hinted at the close of the last chapter, 1—16. On the way going up to Jerusalem he predicts his sufferings and death, 17—19. The mother of Zebedee's children requests dignities for her sons, 20, 21. Christ, by his answer, shews that sufferings, not worldly honours, are to be the lot of his most faithful followers, and that seats in glory can be given only to those who are prepared for them, 22, 23. From this our Lord takes occasion to teach the necessity of humility, and to shew that those who wished to be chief, must be servants of all, 24—28. On his coming to Jericho, he restored sight to two blind men, who being restored, follow him, 29—34.

NOTES ON CHAP. XX.

Verse 1. For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man—a householder] The very commencement of this chapter shews it to be connected with the preceding. The manner of God's proceeding under the gospel dispensation resembles a householder, who went out at day-break, αμα πρωι together with the morning; as the light began to go out of its chambers in the East, so he went out of his bed-room to employ labourers, that they might cultivate his vineyard. This was what was called among the Jews and Romans, the first hour; answering to six o'clock in the morning.

To hire labourers] Some workmen, των εργατων—for he had not got all that were necessary, because we find him going out at other hours to hire more.

Verse 2. A penny] A Roman coin, as noted before, chap. xviii. 28, worth about seven-pence halfpenny or seven-pence three farthings of our money, and equal to the Greek drachma. This appears to have been the ordinary price of a day's labour at that time. See Tobit, chap. v. 14. In 1351 the price of labour was regulated in this country by parliament; and it is remarkable, that "corn-weeders and hay-makers, without meat, drink, or other courtesy demanded," were to have one penny per day! In 1314 the pay of a chaplain to the Scotch Bishops, who were then prisoners in England, was three halfpence per day. See Fleetwood's Chronicon Precios. p. 123. 129. This was miserable wages, though things at that time were so cheap that 24 eggs were sold for a penny, p. 72. a pair of shoes for four-pence, p. 71. a fat goose for two-pence halfpenny, p. 72. a hen for a penny, p. 72. eight bushels of wheat for two shillings, and a fat ox for six shillings and eight-pence! Ibid. In 1336, wheat per quarter, 2*s.* a fat sheep, 6*d.* fat goose, 2*d.* and a pig, 1*d.* page 75.

Verse 3. The third hour] Nine o'clock in the morning.

Market-place] Where labourers usually stood till they were hired. I have often seen labourers standing in the market-places of large towns in these countries, waiting to be employed.

4 And said unto them; Go ye also into the vineyard, [a] and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way.

5 Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise.

6 And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle?

7 They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.

8 So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first.

9 And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny.

10 But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny.

11 And when they had received it, they murmured against the good man of the house, 12 Saying, These last [b] have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day.

13 But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny?

14 Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last, even as unto thee.

b Or, have continued one hour only.——c Rom. 9. 21.

Verse 5. The sixth hour] Twelve o'clock. Ninth hour—three o'clock in the afternoon.

Verse 6. Eleventh] Five o'clock in the evening, when there was only one hour before the end of the Jewish day, which, in matters of labour, closed at six.

Verse 7. No man hath hired us.] This was the reason why they were all the day idle.

And whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive] Ye may expect payment in proportion to your labour, and the time ye spend in it; but this clause is wanting in some of the best MSS. Versions and Fathers.

Verse 8. When the even was come] Six o'clock, the time they ceased from labour, and the workmen came to receive their wages.

Steward] Επιτροπος. A manager of the household concerns under the master. The Rabbinical writers use the very same word in Hebrew letters, for the same office, אפיטרופוס epitropos. See Kypke.

Verse 11. They murmured] The Jews made the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles a pretence why they should reject that gospel; as they fondly imagined they were, and should be the sole objects of the divine approbation. How they murmured because the Gentiles were made partakers of the kingdom of God, see Acts xi. 1, &c. and xv. 1, &c.

There are many similitudes of this kind among the Jews, where the principal part even of the phraseology of our Lord's parable may be found. Several of them may be seen in Schoetgen. Our Lord, however, as in all other cases, has greatly improved the language, scope, design, and point of the similitude. He was in all cases, an eminent master of the sentences.

Verse 13. Friend, I do thee no wrong] The salvation of the Gentiles can in itself become no impediment to the Jews: there is the same Jesus both for the Jew and for the Greek. Eternal life is offered to both through the blood of the cross; and there is room enough in heaven for all.

Verse 15. Is it not lawful for me] As eternal life is the free gift of God, he has a right to give it in whatever proportions, at whatever times, and on whatever conditions he pleases.

Is thine eye evil] An evil eye among the Jews meant a malicious, covetous, or envious person.

Most Commentators have different methods of interpreting this parable. Something was undoubtedly designed by its principal parts, besides the scope and design mentioned at the conclusion of the last chapter. The following, which is taken principally from the very pious Quesnel, may render it as useful to the reader, as any thing else that has been written on it.

The Church is a vineyard, because it is a place of labour, where no man should be idle. Each of us is engaged to labour in this vineyard to work out our salvation through him who worketh in us to will and to perform. Life is but a day, whereof childhood, or the first use of reason, is the day-break or first hour, verse 1. in which we receive the first CALL.

The promise of the kingdom of glory is given to all those who are workers together with him, ver. 2.

The second call is in the time of youth, which is most commonly idle, or only employed in dissipation and worldly cares, ver. 3.

The third call is at the age of manhood.

The fourth, in the decline of life, ver. 5.

The fifth, when sickness and the infirmities of life press upon us. How many are there in the world who are just ready to leave it, before they properly consider for what end they were brought into it. Still idle, still unemployed in the things which concern their souls; though eternal life is offered to them, and hell moving from beneath to meet them! ver. 6.

Others consider the morning the first dawn of the gospel; and the first call to be the preaching of John Baptist.

The second call, the public preaching of our LORD: and that of the Apostles when they got an especial commission to the Jews, cap. x. 5, 6. together with that of the seventy disciples mentioned, Luke x. 1.

The third call, which was at mid-day, represents the preaching of the fulness of the gospel after the ascension of Christ, which was the meridian of evangelic glory and excellence.

The fourth call, represents the mission of the Apostles to the various Synagogues of the Jews in every part of the world where they were scattered; the history of which is particularly given in the Acts of the Apostles.

The fifth call, or eleventh hour, represents the general call of the Gentiles into the Church of Christ, when the unbelieving Jews were finally rejected. What makes this interpretation the more likely is, that the persons who are addressed at ver. 7. say, No man hath hired us, i. e. We never heard the voice of a Prophet announcing the true God, nor of an Apostle preaching the Lord Jesus, until now. The Jews could not use this as an argument for their carelessness about their eternal interests.

Verse 16. So the last shall be first, and the first last] The GENTILES, who have been long without the true God, shall now enjoy all the privileges of the new covenant; and the Jews, who have enjoyed these from the beginning, shall now be dispossessed of them; for, because they have rejected the Lord, he also hath rejected them.

Many are called, &c.] This clause is wanting in BL. one other: and in the Coptic and Sahidic Versions. Bishop PEARCE thinks it is an interpolation from chap. xxii. 14. The simple meaning seems to be: As those who did not come at the invitation of the householder to work in the vineyard, did not receive the denarius or wages; so those who do not obey the call of the gospel, and believe in Christ Jesus, shall not inherit eternal life.

This place seems to refer to the ancient Roman custom of recruiting their armies. Among this celebrated people, no one was forced to serve his country in a military capacity; and it was the highest honour to be deemed worthy of thus serving it. The youth were instructed, almost from their cradle, in military exercises. The Campus Martius was the grand field in which they were disciplined: there, they accustomed themselves to leaping, running, wrestling, bearing burdens, fencing, throwing the javelin, &c. and when, through these violent exercises, they were all besmeared with dust and sweat, in order to refresh themselves, they swam twice or thrice across the Tyber! Rome might at any time have recruited her armies by volunteers from such a mass of well-educated hardy soldiers; but she thought proper, to use the words of the Abbé Mably, that the honour of being chosen to serve in the wars, should be the reward of the accomplishments shewn by the citizens in the Campus Martius, that the soldier should have a reputation to save; and that the regard paid him, in choosing him to serve, should be the pledge of his fidelity and zeal to discharge his duty. The age of serving in the army, was from seventeen to forty-five, and the manner in which they were chosen, was the following:

After the creation of consuls, they every year named twenty-four military tribunes, part of whom must have served five years at least, and the rest eleven. When they had divided among them the command of the four legions to be formed, the consuls summoned to the capitol, or Campus Martius, all the citizens who, by their age, were obliged to bear arms. They drew up by tribes, and lots were drawn to determine in what order every tribe should present its soldiers. That which was the first in order, chose the four citizens who were judged the most proper to serve in the war; and the six tribunes who commanded the first legion, chose one of these four, whom they liked best. The tribunes of the second and third legions likewise made their choice one after another; and he that remained, entered into the fourth legion. A new tribe presented other four soldiers, and the second legion chose first. The third and fourth legions had the same advantage in their turns. In this manner, each tribe successively chose four soldiers, till the legions were complete. They next proceeded to the creation of subaltern officers, whom the tribunes chose from among the soldiers of the greatest reputation. When the legions were thus completed, the citizens who had been called, but not chosen, returned to their repective employments, and served their country in other capacities. None can suppose that these were deemed useless, or that because not now chosen to serve their country in the field, they were proscribed from the rights and privileges of citizens, much less destroyed, because others were found better qualified to serve their country at the post of honour and danger. Thus many are called by the preaching of the gospel, but few are found who use their advantages salem took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them, in such a way as to become extensively useful in the church—and many in the church militant behave so ill, as never to be admitted into the church triumphant. But what a mercy that those who appear now to be rejected may be called in another muster, enrolled, serve in the field, or work in the vineyard. How many millions does the long-suffering of God lead to repentance!

Verse 17. And Jesus going up] From Jericho to Jerusalem. ch. xix. 15.

Verse 18. The Son of man shall be betrayed] Or, will be delivered up. This is the third time that our Lord informed his disciples of his approaching sufferings and death. This was a subject of the utmost importance, and it was necessary they should be well prepared for such an awful event.

Verse 19. Deliver him to the Gentiles to mock] This was done by Herod and his Roman soldiers. See Luke xxiii. 11.

To scourge, and to crucify] This was done by Pilate the Roman governor. The punishment of the cross was Roman, not Jewish; but the chief priests condemned him to it, and the Romans executed the sentence. How little did they know that they were, by this process, jointly offering up that sacrifice which was to make an atonement for the Gentiles and for the Jews; an atonement for the sin of the whole world. How often may it be literally said, The wrath of man shall praise thee!

Verse 20. The mother of Zebedee's children] This was Salome.

Verse 21. Grant that these my two sons] James and John See Mark xv. 40. In the preceding chapter, ver. 28. our Lord had promised his disciples, that they should sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes. Salome, probably hearing of this, and understanding it literally, came to request the chief dignities in this new government, for her sons; and it appears it was at their instigation that she made this request, for Mark, chap. x. 35. informs us, that these brethren themselves made the request, i. e. they made it through the medium of their mother.

One on thy right hand, and the other on (THY) left] I have added the pronoun in the latter clause on the authority of almost every MS. and version of repute.

That the sons of Zebedee wished for ecclesiastical, rather than secular honours, may be thought probable, from the allusion that is made here to the supreme dignities in the great Sanhedrin. The prince of the Sanhedrin (HANASI) sat in the midst of two rows of senators or elders; on his right hand sat the person termed AB, [the father of the Sanhedrin); and on his left hand the CHACHAM, or sage. These persons transacted all business in the absence of the president. The authority of this council was at some periods very great, and extended to a multitude of matters both ecclesiastical and civil. These appear to have been the honours which James and John sought. They seem to have strangely forgot the lesson they had learnt from the transfiguration.

Verse 22. Ye know not what ye ask.] How strange is the infatuation in some parents, which leads them to desire worldly or ecclesiastical honours for their children. He must be much in love with the cross, who wishes to have his child a minister of the gospel; for if he be such as God approves of in the work, his life will be a life of toil and suffering; he will be obliged to sip, at least, if not to drink largely of the cup of Christ. We know not what we ask, when, in getting our children into the CHURCH, we take upon ourselves to answer for their CALL to the sacred office, and for the salvation of the souls that are put under their care. Blind parents! rather let your children beg their bread, than thrust them into an office to which God has not called them; and in which they will not only ruin their own souls, but be the means of damnation to hundreds; for if God has not sent them, they shall not profit the people at all.

And to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized &c.] This clause in this and the next verse, is wanting in BDL, two others (7 more in ver. 23.) Coptic, Sahidic Æthiopic, Mr. WHEELOCK's Persic, Vulgate, Saxon, and all the Itala except two. Grotius, Mill, and Bengel, think it should be omitted, and Griesbach has left it out of the Text in both his editions. It is omitted also by Origen, Epiphanius, Hilary, Jerom, Ambrose, and Juvencus. According to the rules laid down by critics, to appreciate a false or true reading, this clause cannot be considered as forming a part of the sacred text. It may be asked, Does not, drink of my cup, convey the same idea? Does the clause add any thing to the perspicuity of the passage? And though found in many good MSS. is not the balance of evidence in point of antiquity against it? Baptism among the Jews, as it was performed in the coldest weather, and the persons were kept under water for some time, was used not only to express death, but the most cruel kind of death. See Lightfoot. As to the term cup, it was a common figure, by which they expressed calamities, judgments, desolation, &c.

They say unto him, We are able.] Strange blindness! YOU can? No, one drop of this cup would sink you into utter ruin, unless upheld by the power of God. However, the man whom God has appointed to the work he will preserve in it.

Verse 23. Is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father.] The common translation, in which the words, it shall be given to them, are interpolated by our translators, utterly changes and destroys the meaning of the passage. It represents Christ (in opposition to the whole Scriptures) as having nothing to do in the dispensing of rewards and punishments; whereas, our Lord only intimates, that, however partial he may be to these two brethren, yet seats in glory can only be given to those who are fitted for them. No favour can prevail here; the elevated seat is for him who is filled with the fulness of God. The true construction of the words is this—to sit on my right hand and on my left, is not mine to give, except to them for whom it is prepared of my Father. According to the prediction of Christ, these brethren did partake of his afflictions: James was martyred by Herod, Acts xii. 2. and John was banished to Patmos, for the testimony of Christ, Rev. i. 9.

Verse 24. When the ten heard it they were moved] The ambition which leads to spiritual lordship, is one great cause of murmurings and animosities in religious societies; and has proved the ruin of the most flourishing Churches in the universe.

Verse 25. Exercise dominion—and—exercise authority upon them.] They tyrannized and exercised arbitrary power over the people. This was certainly true of the governments in our Lord's time, both in the east and in the west. I have endeavoured to express, as nearly as possible, the meaning of the two Greek verbs, κατακυριευουσιν, and κατεξουσιαζουσιν, and those who understand the genius of the language will perceive, that I have not exhausted their sense, however some may think that no emphasis was intended, and that these compound verbs are used for the simple κυριευειν and εξουσιαζειν. See Wakefield and Rosenmuller.

The government of the Church of Christ is widely different from secular governments. It is founded in humility and brotherly love; it is derived from Christ, the great Head of the Church, and is ever conducted by his maxims and spirit. When political matters are brought into the Church of Christ, both are ruined. The Church has more than once ruined the State; the State has often corrupted the Church: it is certainly for the interests of both to be kept separate. This has already been abundantly exemplified in both cases, and will continue so to be, over the whole world, wherever the church and state are united in secular matters.

Verse 26. It shall not be so among you] Every kind of lordship and spiritual domination over the Church of Christ, like that exercised by the Church of Rome, is destructive and anti-christian.

Your minister] Or, deacon, διακονος: I know no other word which could at once convey the meaning of the original, and make a proper distinction between it and δουλος, or servant, in ver. 27. The office of a deacon, in the primitive Church, was to serve in the agapæ, or love feasts, to distribute the bread and wine to the communicants; to proclaim different parts and times of worship in the churches; and to take care of the widows, orphans, prisoners, and sick, who were provided for out of the revenues of the church. Thus we find it was the very lowest ecclesiastical office. Deacons were first appointed by the Apostles, Acts vi. 1—6. they had the care of the poor, and preached occasionally.

Verse 27. Your servant] Δουλος, the lowest secular office, as deacon was the lowest ecclesiastical office: δουλος is often put for slave.

From these directions of our Lord, we may easily discern what sort of a spirit his ministers should be of. 1. A minister of Christ is not to consider himself a lord over Christ's flock 2. He is not to conduct the concerns of the Church with an imperious spirit. 3. He is to reform the weak after Christ's example, more by loving instruction, than by reproof or censure. 4. He should consider, that true apostolic greatness consists in serving the followers of Christ with all the powers and talents he possesses. 5. That he should be ready, if required, to give up his life unto death, to promote the salvation of men.

Verse 28. A ransom for many.] Λυτρον αντι πολλων, or, a ransom instead of many,—one ransom, or atonement instead of the many prescribed in the Jewish law. Mr. Wakefield contends for the above translation, and with considerable show of reason and probability.

The word λυτρον is used by the Septuagint, for the Hebrew פדיון, pidion, the ransom paid for a man's life, see Exod. xxi. 30. Num. iii. 49, 51. and λυτρα is used Num. xxxv. 31. where a satisfaction (Hebrew כפר copher, an atonement) for the life of a murderer is refused. The original word is used by Lucian in exactly the same sense, who represents Ganymede promising to sacrifice a ram to Jupiter, λυτρον υπερ εμου as a ransom for himself, provided he would dismiss him.

The whole Gentile world, as well as the Jews, believed in vicarious sacrifices. Virgil Æn. v. 85. has nearly the same words as those in the text. "UNUM PRO MULTIS dabitur CAPUT,"—One man must be given for many. Jesus Christ laid down his life as a ransom for the lives and souls of the children of men. In the Codex Bezæ, and in most of the Itala, the Saxon, and one of the Syriac, Hilary, Leo Magnus, and Juvencus, the following remarkable addition is found—"But seek ye to increase from a little, and to be lessened from that which is great. Moreover, when ye enter into a house, and are invited to sup, do not recline in the most eminent places, lest a more honourable than thou come after, and he who invited thee to supper, come up to thee and say, Get down yet lower; and thou be put to confusion. But if thou sit down in the lowest place, and one inferior to thee come after, he who invited thee to supper, will say unto thee, Go and sit higher: now this will be advantageous to thee." This is the largest addition found in any of the MSS. and contains not less than sixty words in the original, and eighty-three in the Anglo-Saxon. It may be necessary to remark, that Mr. Marshall, in his edition of the Gothic and Saxon Gospels, does not insert these words in the text, but gives it p. 496 of his observations. This addition is at least as ancient as the fourth century, for it is quoted by Hilary, who did not die till about A.D. 367.

Verse 30. Two blind men] Mark, chap. x. 46. and Luke xviii. 35. mention only one blind man, Bartimeus. Probably he was mentioned by the other Evangelists, as being a person well known before and after his cure. Blindness of heart, is a disorder of which men seldom complain, or from which they desire to be delivered; and it is one property of this blindness, to keep the person from perceiving it, and to persuade him that his sight is good.

Sitting by the way side] In the likeliest place to receive alms, because of the multitudes going and coming between Jerusalem and Jericho.

Cried out] In the midst of judgments God remembers mercy. Though God had deprived them, for wise reasons, of their eyes, he left them the use of their speech. It is never ill with us, but it might be much worse; let us, therefore, be submissive and thankful.

Have mercy on us] Hearing that Jesus passed by, and not knowing whether they should ever again have so good an opportunity of addressing him, they are determined to call, and call earnestly. They ask for mercy, conscious that they deserve nothing, and they ask with faith—Son of David, acknowledging him as the promised Messiah.

Verse 31. The multitude rebuked them] Whenever a soul begins to cry after Jesus for light and salvation, the world the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David.

32 And Jesus [a] stood still, and called them, and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you?

33 They say unto him, [b] Lord, that our eyes may be opened.

and the devil join together to drown its cries, or force it to be silent. But let all such remember, Jesus is now passing by: that their souls must perish everlastingly, if not saved by him, and they may never have so good an opportunity again. While there is a broken and a contrite heart, let it sigh its complaints to God, till he hear and answer.

They cried the more] When the world and the devil begin to rebuke in this case, it is a proof that the salvation of God is nigh, therefore, let such cry out a great deal the more.

Verse 32. Jesus stood] "The cry of a believing penitent," says one, "is sufficient to stop the most merciful Jesus, were he going to make a new heaven and a new earth: for what is all the irrational part of God's creation in worth, when compared with the value of one immortal soul?" See on Mark x. 50.

What will ye that I shall do] Christ is at all times infinitely willing to save sinners: when the desire of the heart is turned towards him, there can be little delay in the salvation. What is thy wish? If it be a good one, God will surely fulfil it.

Verse 33. That our eyes may be opened.] He who feels his own sore, and the plague of his heart, has no great need of a prompter in prayer. A hungry man can easily ask bread; he has no need to go to a book to get expressions to state his wants in; his hunger tells him he wants food, and he tells this to the person from whom he expects relief. Helps to devotion, in all ordinary cases, may be of great use; in extraordinary cases they can be of little importance; the afflicted heart alone can tell its own sorrows, with appropriate pleadings.

Verse 34. So Jesus had compassion on them] Σπλαγχνισθεις, he was moved with tender pity. The tender pity of Christ met the earnest cry of the blind men, and their immediate cure was the result.

They followed him.] As a proof of the miracle that was wrought, and of the gratitude which they felt to their benefactor. For other particulars of this miraculous cure, see the notes on Mark x. 46, &c.

Reader, whosoever thou art, act in behalf of thy soul, as these blind men did in behalf of their sight, and thy salvation is sure. Apply to the Son of David, lose not a moment, he is passing by, and thou art passing into eternity, and probably wilt never have a more favourable opportunity than the present. Lord increase thy earnestness and faith!

have derived its name from the fig-trees which grew there; בית beeth, signifying a region as well as a house, and פג phag, a green fig.

Verse 2. Ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt] Asses and mules were in common use in Palestine: horses were seldom to be met with. Our blessed Lord takes every opportunity to convince his disciples that nothing was hidden from him; he informs them of the most minute occurrence, and manifested his power over the heart, in disposing the owner to permit the ass to be taken away.

Verse 3. The Lord, (the proprietor of all things) hath need of them] Jesus is continually humbling himself, to shew us how odious pride is, in the sight of God: but in his humility he is ever giving proofs of his Almighty power, that the belief of his divinity may be established.

Verse 4. All this was done] The word all, in this clause, is omitted by some MSS. Versions, and Fathers.

Which was spoken] The Spirit of God, which predicted those things that concerned the Messiah, took care to have them literally fulfilled: 1. to shew the truth of prophecy in general; and, 2. to designate Christ as the person intended by that prophecy. See the note on chap. ii. 23.

Verse 5. Tell ye the daughter of Sion] The quotation is taken from Zech. ix. 9. but not in the precise words of the prophet.

This entry into Jerusalem, has been termed the triumph of Christ. It was indeed the triumph of humility over pride and worldly grandeur; of poverty over affluence; and of meekness and gentleness over rage and malice.

He is coming now meek, full of kindness and compassion to those who were plotting his destruction! He comes to deliver up himself into their hands; their king comes to be murdered by his subjects, and to make his death a ransom price for their souls!

Verse 7. And put on them their clothes] Thus acknowledging him to be their king, for this was a custom observed by the people when they found that God had appointed a man to the kingdom. When Jehu sat with the captains of the army, and Elisha the prophet came, by the order of God, to anoint him king over Israel, as soon as he came out of the inner chamber into which the prophet had taken him to anoint him, and they knew what was done, every man took his garment, and spread it under him on the top of the steps, and blew the trumpets, saying, "Jehu is king." 2 Kings ix. 13.

And they set him thereon.] Και επεκαθισεν επανω αυτων, and he sat upon them: but instead of επανω αυτων, upon THEM, the Codex Bezæ, seven copies of the Itala, some copies of the Vulgate, and some others, read επ' αυτον upon him, i. e. the colt. This is most likely to be the true reading; for we can scarcely suppose that he rode upon both by turns, this would appear childish; or that he rode upon both at once, for this would be absurd. Some say he sat on both; for "the ass that was tied up, was an emblem of the Jews bound under the yoke of the Law; and the colt that had not been tied, represented the Gentiles who were not under the Law; and that Jesus Christ's sitting on both represented his subjecting the Jews and the Gentiles to the sway of his evangelical sceptre." He who can receive this saying, let him receive it.

Verse 8. Cut down branches from the trees] Carrying palm and other branches, was emblematical of victory and success. See 1 Mac. xiii. 51. 2 Mac. x. 7. and Rev. vii. 9.

The Rabbins acknowledge that the prophecy in Zechariah refers to the Messiah; so Rab. Tancum, and Yalcut Rubeni has a strange story about the ass. "This ass is the colt of that ass which was created in the twilight of the sixth day. This is the ass which Abraham found when he went to sacrifice his son. This is the ass on which Moses rode when he went to Egypt: and this is the ass on which the Messiah shall ride." Some of the Jews seem to think that the Zebra is intended; for according to Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 98. when Shapoor, king of Persia, said to Rabbi Samuel: "You say your Messiah will come upon an ass: I will send him a noble horse." To which the Rabbi replied, "You have not a horse with a hundred spots (query streaks) like his ass." See Lightfoot and Schoetgen.

Verse 9. Hosanna to the son of David] When persons applied to the king for help, or for a redress of grievances, they used the word hosanna, or rather from the Hebrew הושיעה נא HOSHIAH NA? Save now, or save, we beseech thee; redress our grievances, and give us help from oppression! Thus both the words and actions of the people prove that they acknowledged Christ as their king, and looked to him for deliverance. How easily might he have assumed the sovereignty at this time, had he been so disposed! For instances of the use of this form of speech, see 2 Sam. xiv. 4. 2 Kings vi. 26. Psal. cxviii. 25.

Son of David] A well known epithet of the Messiah. He who cometh in the name, &c. He who comes in the name and authority of the Most High.

Hosanna in the highest.] Either meaning, let the heavenly hosts join with us in magnifying this august Being, or, let the utmost degrees of hosannas, of salvation, and deliverance, be communicated to thy people! Probably there is an allusion here to the custom of the Jews in the feast of tabernacles. During the first seven days of that feast, they went once round the altar, each day, with palm and other branches in their hands, singing HOSANNA: but on the eighth day of that feast they walked seven times round the altar, singing the hosanna, and this was termed the hosanna rabba: the GREAT hosanna, i. e. assist with the greatest succour. Probably answering to the τοις υψιστοις of the Evangelist, for on this day they beg the most speedy and powerful help against their enemies, and likewise pray for a prosperous and fruitful year. See STEHLIN's Jewish Traditions, vol. ii. p. 322.

Verse 10. All the city was moved] Or, the whole city was in motion. Εσεισθη, was in a tumult—they saw and heard plainly that the multitude had proclaimed Christ king, and Messiah. Who is this? Who is accounted worthy of this honour?

Verse 11. This is Jesus THE PROPHET] Ο προφητης, THAT prophet whom Moses spoke of, Deut. xviii. 18. I will raise them up a prophet—like unto thee, &c. Every expression of the multitude plainly intimated that they fully received our blessed Lord as the promised Messiah.—How strange is it that these same people (if the creatures of the high priest be not only intended) should, about five days after, change their hosannas for, Away with him! crucify him! crucify him! How fickle is the multitude! Even when they get right, there is but little hope that they will continue so long.

Verse 12. Jesus went into the temple of God, &c.] "Avarice," says one, "covered with the veil of religion, is one of those things on which Christ looks with the greatest indignation in his Church. Merchandize of holy things, simoniacal presentations, fraudulent exchanges, a mercenary spirit in sacred functions; ecclesiastical employments obtained by flattery, service, or attendance, or by any thing which is instead of money: collations, nominations, and elections made through any other motive than the glory of God; these are all fatal and damnable profanations, of which those in the temple were only a shadow." QUESNEL.

Money changers] Persons who furnished the Jews and proselytes who came from other countries, with the current coin of Judea, in exchange for their own.

Verse 13. My house shall be called the house of prayer] This is taken from Isai. lvi. 7.

But ye have made it a den of thieves.] This is taken from Jerem. vii. 11.

Our Lord alludes here to those dens and caves in Judea, in which the public robbers either hid or kept themselves fortified.

They who are placed in the Church of Christ to serve souls, and do it not, and they who enjoy the revenues of the church, and neglect the service of it, are thieves and robbers in more senses than one.

Our Lord is represented here as purifying his temple; and this we may judge he did in reference to his true temple, the Church, to shew that nothing that was worldly or unholy should have any place among his followers, or in that heart in which he should condescend to dwell. It is marvellous that these interested vile men did not raise a mob against him: but it is probable they were overawed by the Divine power, or seeing saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna to the son of David; they were sore displeased, 17 ¶ And he left them, and went out of the city into [b] Bethany; and he lodged there.

the multitudes on the side of Christ, they were afraid to molest him. I knew a case something similar to this which did not succeed so well. A very pious clergyman of my acquaintance, observing a woman keeping a public standing to sell nuts, gingerbread, &c. at the very porch of his church, on the Lord's day, "desired her to remove thence, and not defile the house of God, while she profaned the Sabbath of the Lord." She paid no attention to him. He warned her the next Sabbath, but still to no purpose. Going in one Lord's day to preach, and finding her still in the very entrance, with her stall, he overthrew the stall, and scattered the stuff into the street. He was shortly after summoned to appear before the royal court, which, to its eternal reproach, condemned the action, and fined the man of God in a considerable sum of money!

Verse 14. The blind and the lame came] Having condemned the profane use of the temple, he now shews the proper use of it. It is a house of prayer, where God is to manifest his goodness and power in giving sight to the spiritually blind; and feet to the lame. The church or chapel in which the blind and the lame are not healed, has no Christ in it, and is not worthy of attendance.

Verse 15. The chief priests—were sore displeased] Or were incensed. Incensed at what? At the purification of the profaned temple. This was a work they should have done themselves; but for which they had neither grace nor influence; and their pride and jealousy will not suffer them to permit others to do it. Strange as it may appear, the priesthood itself, in all corrupt times, has been ever the most forward to prevent a reform in the church. Was it because they were conscious that a reformer would find them no better than money-changers in, and profaners of the house of God, and that they and their system must be overturned, if the true worship of God were restored? Let him who is concerned answer this to his conscience.

Verse 16. Out of the mouth of babes] The eighth Psalm, out of which these words are quoted, is applied to Jesus Christ in three other places in the New Covenant, 1 Cor. xv. 27. Ephes. i. 22. Heb. ii. 6. Which proves it to be merely a prophetic psalm, relating to the Messiah.

It was a common thing among the Jews for the children to be employed in public acclamations; and thus they were accustomed to hail their celebrated Rabbins. This shouting of the children was therefore no strange thing in the land: only they were exasperated, because a person was celebrated, against whom they had a rooted hatred. As to the prophecy that foretold this, they regarded it not. Some imagine that babes and sucklings in the prophecy have a much more extensive meaning, and refer also to the first preachers of the gospel of Christ.

Verse 17. And he left them (καταλιπων, finally leaving them) and went—into Bethany; and he lodged there.] Bethany was a village about two miles distant from Jerusalem, by Mount Olivet, John xi. 18. and it is remarkable that from this day till his death, which happened about six days after, he spent not one night in Jerusalem, but went every evening to Bethany, and returned to the city each morning. See Luke xxi. 37. xxii. 39. John viii. 1, 2. They were about to murder the Lord of Glory, and the true light, which they had rejected, is now departing from them.

Lodged there.] Not merely to avoid the snares laid for him by those bad men, but to take away all suspicion of his affecting the regal power. To the end of this verse is added by the Saxon ⁊ lærþe hi þaꝛ be Lobeꝛ ꝛice, And taught them of the kingdom of God. This same reading is found in some MSS. Missals, and one copy of the Itala. It appears also in Wickliff, and my old folio English MS. Bible, and taugt hem of the kyngdom of God; and in two MS. copies of the Vulgate, in my possession; one, duodecimo, very fairly written, in 1300, the other a large folio, probably written in the 11th or 12th century, in which the words are, IBIQUE docebat eos de regno Dei. AND THERE he taught them concerning the kingdom of God.

Verse 18. Now in the morning, as he returned into the city] Which was his custom from the time he wholly left Jerusalem, spending only the day time teaching in the temple; see ver. 17. This was probably on Thursday, the 12th day of the month Nisan. He hungred—Probably neither he, nor his disciples, had any thing but what they got from public charity; and the hand of that, seems to have been cold at this time.

Verse 19. He saw a fig tree in the way] Επι της οδου, By the road side. As this fig tree was by the way side, it was no private property; and on this account our Lord, or any other he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig tree withered away.

20 [a] And when the disciples saw it, they marvelled, saying, How soon is the fig tree withered away!

21 Jesus answered and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, [b] If ye have faith, and [c] doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, [d] but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; it shall be done.

25 The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men? And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him?

traveller, had a right to take of its fruit. For a full explanation of this difficult passage, relative to this emblematic fig tree, see on Mark xi. 13, &c.

Let no fruit grow on thee] Can a professor who affords Christ nothing but barren words and wishes, expect any thing but his malediction? When the soul continues in unfruitfulness, the influences of grace are removed, and then the tree speedily withers from the very root.

Verse 20. How soon is the fig tree withered away!] We often say to our neighbours, "How suddenly this man died! Who could have expected it so soon?" But who takes warning by these examples? What we say to-day of OTHERS, may be said to-morrow of OURSELVES. Be ye also ready! Lord, increase our faith!

Verse 21. If ye have faith, and doubt not] See on chap. xvii. 20. Removing mountains, and rooting up of mountains, are phrases very generally used to signify the removing or conquering great difficulties; getting through perplexities. So, many of the Rabbins are termed rooters up of mountains, because they were dextrous in removing difficulties, solving cases of conscience, &c. In this sense our Lord's words are to be understood. He that has faith, will get through every difficulty and perplexity, mountains shall become mole-hills or plains before him. The saying is neither to be taken in its literal sense, nor is it hyperbolical: it is a proverbial form of speech, which no Jew could misunderstand, and with which no Christian ought to be puzzled.

Verse 22. All things—ye shall ask in prayer, believing] In order to get salvation, there must be 1. a conviction of the want of it: this begets 2. prayer, or warm desires, in the heart: then 3. the person asks, i. e. makes use of words expressive of his wants and wishes: 4. believes the word of promise, relative to the fulfilment of his wants: and 5. receives, according to the merciful promise of God, the salvation which his soul requires.

Verse 23. By what authority doest thou these things? The things which the chief priests allude to, were his receiving the acclamations of the people as the promised Messiah, his casting the traders out of the temple, and his teaching the people publicly in it.

Who gave thee this authority?] Not them: for, like many of their successors, they were neither teachers nor cleansers; though they had the name and the profits of the place.

Verse 24. I also will ask you one thing] Our Lord was certainly under no obligation to answer their question: he had already given them such proofs of his divine mission, as could not possibly be exceeded, in the miracles which he wrought before their eyes, and before all Judea: and as they would not credit him on this evidence, it would have been in vain to have expected their acknowledgment of him, on any profession he would make.

Verse 25. The baptism of John] Had John a divine commission or not, for his baptism and preaching? Our Lord here takes the wise in their own cunning. He knew the estimation John was in among the people; and he plainly saw, that if they gave any answer at all, they must convict themselves: and so they saw, when they came to examine the question. See ver. 25, 26.

the people; [a] for all hold John as a prophet.

27 And they answered Jesus, and said, we cannot tell. And he said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

28 ¶ But what think ye? A certain man had two sons; and he came to the first, and said, Son, go work to day in my vineyard.

29 [b] He answered and said, I will not: but afterward he repented, and went.

30 And he came to the second, and said likewise. And he answered and said, I go, sir: and went not.

31 Whether of them twain did the will of his father? They say unto him, The first. Jesus saith unto them, [c] Verily I say unto you, That the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you.

32 For [d] John came unto you in the way of righteousness, and ye believed him not: but the publicans and the harlots believed him:

Verse 27 We cannot tell.] Simplicity gives a wonderful confidence and peace of mind; but double dealing causes a thousand inquietudes and trouble. Let a man do his utmost to conceal in his own heart, the evidence he has of truth and innocence, to countenance his not yielding to it; God, who sees the heart, will, in the light of the last day produce it as a witness against him, and make it his judge.

We cannot tell, said they; which in the words of truth should have been, We will not tell, for we will not have this man for the Messiah: because, if we acknowledge John as his forerunner, we must, of necessity, receive Jesus as the Christ.

They who are engaged against the truth, are abandoned to the spirit of falsity, and scruple not at a lie. Pharisaical pride, according to its different interests, either pretends to know every thing, or affects to know nothing. Among such, we may meet with numerous instances of arrogance and affected humility. God often hides from the wise and prudent, what he reveals unto babes: for when they use their wisdom only to invent the most plausible excuses for rejecting the truth when it comes to them, it is but just that they should be punished with that ignorance, to which, in their own defence, they are obliged to have recourse.

Verse 28. A certain man had two sons] Under the emblem of these two sons, one of whom was a libertine, disobedient, and insolent, but who afterwards thought on his ways, and returned to his duty; and the second, a hypocrite, who promised all, and did nothing: our Lord points out on the one hand, the tax-gatherers and sinners of all descriptions, who, convicted by the preaching of John and that of Christ, turned away from their iniquities and embraced the Gospel; and on the other hand, the Scribes, Pharisees, and self-righteous people, who, pretending a zeal for the law, would not receive the salvation of the gospel.

Verse 29. I will not] This is the general reply of every sinner to the invitations of God: and in it, the Most High is treated without ceremony or respect. They only are safe, who persist not in the denial.

Verse 30. I go, sir] This is all respect, complaisance, and professed obedience; but he went not: he promised well, but did not perform. What a multitude of such are in the world! professing to know God, but denying him in their works. Alas! what will such professions avail, when God comes to take away the soul?

Verse 31. The publicans and the harlots] In all their former conduct they had said NO. Now they yield to the voice of truth when they hear it, and enter into the kingdom, embracing the salvation brought to them in the gospel. The others, who had been always professing the most ready and willing obedience, and who pretended to be waiting for the kingdom of God, did not receive it when it came, but rather chose, while making the best professions, to continue members of the synagogue of Satan.

Verse 32. John came unto you in the way of righteousness] Proclaiming the truth, and living agreeably to it. Or, John came unto you who are in the way of righteousness. This seems rather to be the true meaning and construction of this passage. The Jews are here distinguished from the Gentiles. The former were in the way of righteousness, had the revelation of God, and the ordinances of justice established among them: the latter were in the way of unrighteousness, without the divine revelation, and iniquitous in all their conduct: John came to both, preaching the doctrine of repentance, and proclaiming Jesus the Christ. To say that it was John who came in the way of righteousness, and that to him the words refer, is, in my opinion, saying nothing; for this was necessarily implied: as he professed to come from God, he must not only preach righteousness, but walk in it.

It is very difficult to get a worldly-minded and self-righteous man brought to Christ. Examples signify little to him. Urge the example of an eminent saint, he is discouraged at and ye, when ye had seen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him.

33 ¶ Hear another parable: There was a certain housholder, [a] which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine-press in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and [b] went into a far country.

34 And when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, [c] that they might receive the fruits of it.

35 [d] And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another.

36 Again, he sent other servants more than the first: and they did unto them likewise.

it. Shew him a profligate sinner converted to God, him he is ashamed to own and follow: and as to the conduct of the generality of the followers of Christ, it is not striking enough to impress him. John, and Christ, and the Apostles preach; but to multitudes, all is in vain.

Verse 33. There was a certain housholder] Let us endeavour to find out a general and practical meaning for this parable. A housholder—the Supreme Being. The family—the Jewish nation. The vineyard—the city of Jerusalem. The fence—the divine protection. The wine-press—the law and sacrificial rites. The tower—the temple, in which the divine presence was manifested. The husbandmen—the priests and doctors of the law. Went from home—entrusted the cultivation of the vineyard to the priests, &c. with the utmost confidence; as a man would do, who had the most trusty servants, and was obliged to absent himself from home for a certain time. Our Lord takes this parable from Isai. v. 1, &c. but whether our blessed Redeemer quote from the law, the prophets, or the Rabbins, he reserves the liberty to himself, to beautify the whole, and render it more pertinent.

Some apply this parable also to Christianity, thus: The master or father—our blessed Lord. The family—professing Christians in general. The vineyard—the true Church, or assembly of the faithful. The hedge—the true faith, which keeps the sacred assembly enclosed and defended from the errors of heathenism and false Christianity. The wine-press—the atonement made by the sacrifice of Christ, typified by the sacrifices under the Law. The tower—the promises of the divine presence and protection. The husbandmen—the apostles and all their successors in the ministry. The going from home—the ascension to heaven. But this parable cannot go on all fours in the Christian cause, as any one may see. In the case of the husbandmen especially, it is inapplicable; unless we suppose our Lord intended such as those inquisitorial Bonners, who always persecuted the true ministers of Christ, and consequently Christ himself in his members; and to these may be added the whole train of St. Bartholomew EJECTORS, and all the fire and faggot men of a certain Church, who think they do God service by murdering his saints. But let the persecuted take courage, Jesus Christ will come back shortly and then he will miserably destroy those wicked men: indeed he has done so already to several, and let out his vineyard to more faithful husbandmen.

Digged a wine press] Ωρυξε ληνον. St. Mark has υπολήνιον, the pit under the press, into which the liquor ran, when squeezed out of the fruit by the press.

Verse 34. He sent his servants] Prophets, which, from time to time, he sent to the Jewish nation to call both priests and people back to the purity of his holy religion.

Receive the fruits of it.] Alluding to the ancient custom of paying the rent of a farm in kind; that is, by a part of the produce of the farm. This custom anciently prevailed in most nations: and still prevails in the highlands of Scotland, and in some other places. The Boldon book, a survey made of the state of the bishoprick of Durham in 1183, shews how much of the rents was paid in cows, sheep, pigs, fowls, eggs, &c. the remaining part being made up, chiefly by manual labour.

Verse 35. Beat one] Εδειραν, took his skin off, flayed him: probably alluding to some who had been excessively scourged.

Killed another, &c.] Rid themselves of the true witnessess of God by a variety of persecutions.

Verse 36. Other servants] There is not a moment in which God does not shower down his gifts upon men, and require the fruit of them: various instruments are used to bring sinners to God. There are prophets, apostles, pastors, teachers, some with his gift after this manner, and some after that. The true disciples of Christ have been persecuted in all ages and the greatest share of the persecution has fallen upon the ministers of his religion; for there have always been good and bad husbandmen, and the latter have persecuted the former.

More than the first] Or, more honourable, so I think πλειονας should be translated; for as the fulness of the time approached, each prophet more clearly and fully pointed out the coming Christ.

Our translation, which says, more than the first, conveys no meaning at all. Πλειον has the meaning I have given it above, in chap. vi. 25. πλειον της τροφης, of MORE VALUE than food, and in Num. xxii. 15. πλειους και εντιμοτερους, persons higher in dignity and office.

39 [c] And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him.

40 When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen?

Verse 37. Last of all he sent—his son] This requires no comment. Our Lord plainly means himself.

They will reverence] Εντραπησονται, they will reflect upon their conduct, and blush for shame, because of it, when they see my son. So the Syriac and Persic.

Verse 38. Said among themselves] Alluding to the conspiracies which were then forming against the life of our blessed Lord, in the councils of the Jewish elders and chief priests. See chap. xxvii. 1.

Verse 39. Cast him out of the vineyard] Utterly rejected the counsel of God against themselves; and would neither acknowledge the authority of Christ, nor submit to his teaching. What a strange and unaccountable case is this; a sinner, to enjoy a little longer his false peace, and the gratification of his sinful appetites, rejects Jesus, and persecutes that gospel which troubles his sinful repose.

Verse 41. He will miserably destroy those wicked men] So, according to this Evangelist, our Lord caused them to pass that sentence of destruction upon themselves, which was literally executed about forty years after. But Luke relates it differently: according to him, they said, μη γενοιτο, God forbid. The Codex Leicestrensis omits οι λεγουσιν, they say; so that the following words appear to be spoken by our Lord. Michaelis supposes, that in the Hebrew original the word was ויאמר waiomer, he said; for which the Greek translator might have read ויאמרו waiomeru, they said.

Verse 42. The stone] R. Solom. Jarchi, on Micah v. says this stone means the Messiah, אבן משיח: Abarbanel is of the same opinion. This seems to have been originally spoken of David, who was at first rejected by the Jewish rulers, but was afterwards chosen by the Lord to be the great ruler of his people Israel. The quotation is taken from Psal. cxviii. 22.

As the church is represented in Scripture under the name of the temple and house of God, in allusion to the temple of Jerusalem, which was a type of it, 1 Cor. iii. 16. Heb. iii. 6. 1 Pet. ii. 5. so Jesus Christ is represented as the foundation on which this edifice is laid, 1 Cor. iii. 11. Eph. ii. 20, 21.

The builders] The chief priests and elders of the people, with the doctors of the law.

Rejected] An expression borrowed from masons, who, finding a stone, which being tried in a particular place, and appearing improper for it, is thrown aside, and another taken; however, at last, it may happen that the very stone which had been before rejected, may be found the most suitable as the head stone of the corner.

This passage, as applied by our Lord to himself, contains an abridgment of the whole doctrine of the gospel.

1. The Lord's peculiar work is astonishingly manifested in the mission of Jesus Christ.

2. He, being rejected and crucified by the Jews, became an atonement for the sin of the world.

3. He was raised again from the dead, a proof of his conquest over death and sin, and a pledge of immortality to his followers.

4. He was constituted the foundation on which the salvation of mankind rests, and the corner stone which unites Jews and Gentiles, beautifies, strengthens, and completes the whole building, as the head stone, or uppermost stone in the corner, does the whole edifice.

tion of all his followers, and the glory of man. This was done by the Lord, and is marvellous in our eyes.

Verse 44.—The 44th verse should certainly come before ver. 43, otherwise the narration is not consecutive. Verse 42. The stone which the builders rejected, is become head of the corner, &c. Ver. 44. Whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken, &c. This is an allusion to the punishment of stoning among the Jews. The place of stoning was twice as high as a man; while standing on this, one of the witnesses struck the culprit on the loins, so that he fell over this scaffold; if he died by the stroke and fall, well; if not, the other witness threw a stone upon his heart, and despatched him. The stone thrown on the culprit was, in some cases, as much as two men could lift up. Tract Sanhed. and Bab. Gemara, and Lightfoot. See also the note on John viii. 7.

He, whether Jew or Gentile, who shall not believe in the Son of God, shall suffer grievously in consequence; but on whomsoever the stone (Jesus Christ) falls in the way of judgment, he shall be ground to powder, λικμησει αυτον—it shall make him so small, as to render him capable of being dispersed as chaff by the wind. This seems to allude, not only to the dreadful crushing of the Jewish state by the Romans, but also to that general dispersion of the Jews through all the nations of the world, which continues to the present day. This whole verse is wanting in the Codex Bezæ, one other, five copies of the Itala, and Origen; but it is found in the parallel place, Luke xx. 18. and seems to have been quoted from Isai. viii. 14, 15. He shall be for a STONE of STUMBLING, and for a ROCK OF OFFENCE to both the houses of Israel—and many among them shall STUMBLE and FALL, and be BROKEN.

Verse 43. Therefore say I] Thus shewing them, that to them alone the parable belonged—The kingdom of God shall be taken from you—the Gospel shall be taken from you, and given to the Gentiles, who will receive it, and bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

Bringing forth the fruits] As in verse 34 an allusion is made to paying the landlord in kind, so here the Gentiles are represented as paying God thus. The returns which he expects for his grace, are, the fruits of grace; nothing can ever be acceptable in the sight of God, that does not spring from himself.

Verse 45. The chief priests—perceived that he spake of them.] The most wholesome advice passes for an affront with those who have shut their hearts against the truth. When that which should lead to repentance, only kindles the flame of malice and revenge, there is but little hope of the salvation of such persons.

Verse 46. They sought to lay hands on him, they feared the multitude] Restraining and preventing grace is an excellent blessing, particularly where it leads to repentance and salvation; but he who abstains from certain evils only through fear of scandal or punishment, has already committed them in his heart, and is guilty before God. The intrepidity of our Lord is worthy of admiration and imitation; in the very face of his most inveterate enemies, he bears a noble testimony to the truth, reproves their iniquities, denounces the divine judgments, and, in the very teeth of destruction, braves danger and death! A true minister of Christ fears nothing but God, when his glory is concerned: a hireling fears every thing, except Him, whom he ought to fear.

This last journey of our Lord to Jerusalem, is a subject of great importance; it is mentioned by all the four Evangelists, and has been a subject of criticism and cavil to some unsanctified minds. He has been accused of "attempting by this method, to feel how far the populace were disposed to favour his pretensions in establishing himself as a king in the land, or at least, by his conduct in this business, he gave much cause for popular seditions." Every circumstance in the case, refutes this calumny. 1. His whole conduct had proved that his kingdom was not of this world, and that he sought not the honour that cometh from man. 2. He had in a very explicit manner foretold his own premature death, and particularly at this time. 3. It is evident from what he had said to his disciples, that he went up to Jerusalem at this time, for the express purpose of being sacrificed, and not of erecting a secular kingdom. 4. All the time he spent now in Jerusalem, which was about five days, he spent in teaching, precisely in the same way he had done for three years past; nor do we find that he uttered one maxim dissimilar to what he formerly taught, or said a word calculated to produce any sensation on the hearts of the populace, but that of piety towards God: and in the parable of the man and his two sons, the husbandmen and the vineyard, he spoke in such a way to the rulers of the people, as to shew that he knew they were plotting his destruction; and that far from fleeing from the face of danger, or strengthening his party against his enemies, he was come to wait at the foot of the altar till his blood should be poured out for the sin of the world! 5. Had he affected any thing of a secular kind, he had now the fairest opportunity to accomplish his designs. The people had already received him as Jesus the prophet; now they acknowledge him as the Christ or MESSIAH, and sing the hosannah to him, as immediately appointed by heaven to be their deliverer. 6. Though with the character of the Messiah, the Jews had connected that of secular royalty, and they now, by spreading their clothes in the way, strewing branches, &c. treat him as a royal person, and one appointed to govern the kingdom; yet of this he appears to take no notice, farther than to shew that an important prophecy was thus fulfilled: he went as usual into the temple, taught the people pure and spiritual truths, withdrew at night from the city, lodged in private at mount Olivet, and thus most studiously and unequivocally shewed, that his sole aim was to call the people back to purity and holiness, and prepare them for that kingdom of righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, which he was about, by his passion, death, resurrection, ascension, and the mission of the Holy Spirit, to set up in the earth. 7. Could a person who worked such miracles as he was in the daily habit of working, miracles which proved he possessed unlimited power and unerring wisdom, need subterfuges, or a colouring for any design he wished to accomplish? He had only to put forth that power essentially resident in himself, and all resistance to his will must be annihilated. In short, every circumstance of the case shews at once the calumny and absurdity of the charge. But, instead of lessening, or rendering suspicious this or any other part of our Lord's conduct, it shews the whole in a more luminous and glorious point of view; and thus the wrath of man praises him. 8. That he was a king, that he was born of a woman, and came into the world for this very purpose, he took every occasion to declare; but all these declarations shewed that his kingdom was spiritual: he would not even interfere with the duty of the civil magistrate to induce an avaricious brother to do justice to the rest of the family, Luke xii. 13. when, probably, a few words from such an authority, would have been sufficient to have settled the business; yet, to prevent all suspicion, and to remove every cause for offence, he absolutely refused to interfere, and took occasion from the very circumstance to declaim against secular views, covetousness, and worldly ambition! O how groundless does every part of his conduct prove this charge of secular ambition to be!

Such was the spirit of the Master, such must be the spirit of the disciple. He that will reign with Christ, must be humbled and suffer with him. This is the royal road. The love of the world, in its power and honours, is as inconsistent with the spirit of the gospel, as the love of the grossest vice. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. Reader, take occasion from this refuted calumny, to imitate thy Lord in the spirituality of his life, to pass through things temporal so as not to lose those that are eternal, that thou mayest reign with him in the glory of his kingdom. Amen.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXII.

Verse 2. The kingdom of heaven] In Bereshith Rabba, sect. 62. fol. 60. there is a parable very similar to this, and another still more so in Sohar. Levit. fol. 40. But these Rabbinical parables are vastly ennobled by passing through the hands of our Lord. It appears from Luke, chap. xiv. 15, &c. that it was at an entertainment that this parable was originally spoken. It was a constant practice of our Lord to take the subjects of his discourses from the persons present, or from the circumstances of times, persons, and places. See chap. xvi. 6. John iv. 7—10. vi. 26, 27. vii. 37. A preacher that can do so, can never be at a loss for text or sermon.

A marriage for his son] A marriage feast, so the word γαμους properly means. Or a feast of inauguration, when his son was put in possession of the government, and thus he and his new subjects became married together. See 1 Kings i. 5—9, 19, 25, &c. where such a feast is mentioned.

From this parable it appears plain, 1. That the KING, means the great God. 2. His SON, the Lord Jesus. 3. The MARRIAGE, his incarnation, or espousing human nature, by prepared my dinner: [c]my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage.

5 But they made light of it, [b] and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandize:

6 And the remnant took his servants, [c] and entreated them spitefully, and slew them.

7 But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and he sent forth [d] his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city.

8 Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not [e] worthy.

9 Go ye therefore into the highways, and as taking it into union with himself. 4. The MARRIAGE FEAST, the œconomy of the gospel, during which men are invited to partake of the blessings purchased by, and consequent on the incarnation and death of our blessed Lord. 5. By those who HAD BEEN bidden, or invited, ver. 3. are meant the Jews in general, who had this union of Christ with human nature, and his sacrifice for sin pointed out by various rites, ceremonies, and sacrifices under the law; and who, by all the prophets, had been constantly invited to believe in, and receive the promised Messiah. 6. By the SERVANTS, we are to understand the first preachers of the gospel, proclaiming salvation to the Jews. JOHN the Baptist, and the seventy disciples, (Luke x. 1.) may be here particularly intended. 7. By the OTHER SERVANTS, ver. 4. the apostles seem to be meant, who, though they were to preach the gospel to the whole world, yet were to begin at JERUSALEM, (Luke xxiv. 47.) with the first offers of mercy. 8. By their making light of it, &c. ver. 5. is pointed out their neglect of this salvation, and their preferring secular enjoyments, &c. to the kingdom of Christ. 9. By injuriously using some, and slaying others of his servants, ver. 6. is pointed out the persecution raised against the apostles by the Jews, in which some of them were martyred. 10. By sending forth his troops, ver. 7. is meant the commission given to the Romans against Judea; and burning up their city, the total destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, the son of Vespasian, which happened about forty-one years after.

On this parable it is necessary to remark, 1. That man was made at first in union with God. 2. That sin entered in, and separated between God and man. 3. That as there can be no holiness but in union with God, and no heaven without holiness, therefore he provided a way to reconcile and reunite man to himself. 4. This was effected by Christ's uniting himself to human nature, and giving his Spirit to those who believe. 5. That as the marriage union is the closest, the most intimate, solemn, and excellent, of all the connections formed among mortals, and that they who are thus united in the Lord are one flesh; so, that mystical union which is formed between God and the soul through Jesus Christ, by the Eternal Spirit, is the closest, most intimate, solemn, and excellent, that can be conceived; for he who is thus joined unto the Lord is one spirit. 6. This contract is made freely: no man can be forced to it, for it is a union of will to will, heart to heart; and it is by willing and consenting, that we come unto God through his Son. 7. That if this marriage do not take place here, an eternal separation from God, and from the glory of his power, shall be the fearful consequence. 8. That there are three states in which men run the risk of living without God, and losing their souls. 1st. That of a soft, idle, voluptuous life, wherein a man thinks of nothing but quietly to enjoy life, conveniences, riches, private pleasures, and public diversions. They made light of it. 2dly. That of a man wholly taken up with agricultural or commercial employments, in which the love of riches, and application to the means of acquiring them, generally stifle all thoughts of salvation. One went to his own field, and another to his traffic. 3dly. That of a man who is openly unjust, violent, and outrageously wicked, who is a sinner by profession, and not only neglects his salvation, but injuriously treats all those who bring him the gospel of reconciliation. Seizing his servants, they treated them injuriously, &c.

Verse 4. Fatlings] Τα σιτιστα· properly, fatted rams or wethers, 2 Sam. vi. 13. 1 Chron. xv. 26.

Verse 7. But when the king] HIMSELF: or, this very king. I have added εκεινος on the authority of nine of the most ancient MSS. and nearly one hundred others; the later Syriac, six copies of the Itala, and some of the Fathers. Several printed editions have it, and Griesbach has received it into the text.

Verse 8. Were not worthy.] Because they made light of it, and would not come; preferring earthly things to heavenly blessings. Among the Mohammedans, refusal to come to a marriage feast, when invited, is considered a breach of the law of God. HEDAYAH, vol. iv. p. 91. It was probably considered in this light among all the oriental nations. This observation is necessary, in order to point out more forcibly, the iniquity of the refusal mentioned in the text. A man may be said to be worthy of, or fit for, this marriage feast, when, feeling his wretchedness and misery, he comes to God in the way appointed, to get an entrance into the holiest, by the blood of Jesus.

10 So those servants went out into the highways, and [a] gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good: and the wedding was furnished with guests.

11 And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man [b] which had not on a wedding garment:

Verse 9. Go ye therefore into the highways] Διεξοδους των οδων, cross or by-paths; the places where two or more roads met in one, leading into the city, where people were coming together from various quarters of the country. St. Luke adds hedges, to point out the people to whom the Apostles were sent, as either miserable vagabonds, or the most indigent poor, who were wandering about the country, or sitting by the sides of the ways and hedges, imploring relief. This verse points out the final rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. It was a custom among the Jews, when a rich man made a feast, to go out and invite in all destitute travellers. See in Rab. Beracoth, fol. 43.

As many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.] God sends his salvation to every soul, that all may believe and be saved.

Verse 10. Gathered together all—both bad and good] By the preaching of the gospel, multitudes of souls are gathered into what is generally termed the visible church of Christ. This church is the FLOOR, where the wheat and the chaff are often mingled, chap. iii. 12. The FIELD, where the bastard wheat and the true grain grow together, chap. xiii. 26, 27. The NET, which collects of all kinds both good and bad, chap. xiii. 48. The HOUSE, in which the wise and foolish are found, chap. xxv. 1, &c. And the FOLD, in which there are both sheep and goats, chap. xxv. 33, &c.

Verse 11. When the king came] When God shall come to judge the world.

Wedding garment] Among the Orientals, long white robes were worn at public festivals; and those who appeared on such occasions with any other garments, were esteemed not only highly culpable, but worthy of punishment. Our Lord seems here to allude to Zeph. i. 7, 8. The Lord hath prepared a SACRIFICE, he hath BIDDEN his guests. And it shall come to pass in the day of the Lord's sacrifice, that I will PUNISH the princes, and the KING'S CHILDREN, and ALL SUCH as are clothed with STRANGE APPAREL. The person who invited the guests, prepared such a garment for each, for the time being; and with which he was furnished on his application to the ruler of the feast. It was this which made the conduct of the person mentioned in the text inexcusable; he might have had a proper marriage garment, if he had applied for it.

To afford accidental guests clothing suitable to a marriage feast, was a custom among the ancient Greeks. Homer relates, that Telemachus and the son of Nestor, arriving at Lacedæmon when Menelaus was making a marriage feast for his son and daughter, were accommodated with garments suited to the occasion, after having been bathed and anointed.

Τους δ' επει ουν δεξαμαι λουσαν και χρισαν ελαιῳ,
Αμφι δ' αρα χλαινας ουλας βαλον ηδε χιτωνας,
Εξ ρα θρονους εζοντο παρ' Ατρειδην Μενελαον.
Odyss. l. iv. ver. 49—51.

They entered each a bath, and by the hands
Of maidens lav'd, and oil'd, and cloth'd again
With shaggy mantles and resplendent vests,
Sat both enthroned at Menelaus' side. Cowper.

Among the Asiatics, garments called caftans, great numbers of which each nobleman has ordinarily ready in his wardrobe, are given to persons whom he wishes to honour: to refuse to accept or wear such a dress would be deemed the highest insult.

This marriage feast or dinner (the communication of the graces of the gospel in this life) prepares for the marriage supper of the Lamb, Rev. xix. 7, 8, 9. the enjoyment of eternal blessedness in the kingdom of glory. Now, as without holiness no man can see the Lord, we may at once perceive what our Lord means by the marriage garment—it is HOLINESS of heart and life: the text last quoted asserts, that the fine white and clean linen (alluding to the marriage garment above mentioned) was an emblem of the RIGHTEOUSNESS of the SAINTS. Mark this expression: the righteousness, the whole external conduct, regulated according to the will and word of God. Of the SAINTS, the holy persons, whose souls were purified by the blood of the Lamb.

Verse 12. He saith unto him, Friend] Rather, companion: so εταιρε should be translated. As this man represents the state of a person in the visible church, who neglects to come unto the master of the feast for a marriage garment, for the salvation which Christ has procured; he cannot be with any propriety called a friend, but may be well termed a companion, as being a member of the visible church, and present at all those ordinances where Christ's presence and blessing are found, by all those who sincerely wait upon him for salvation.

by my name, while living without a preparation for my kingdom?

He was speechless.] Εφιμωθη, he was muzzled, or gagged. He had nothing to say in vindication of his neglect. There was a garment provided, but he neither put it on, nor applied for it. His conduct, therefore, was in the highest degree insulting and indecorous. As this man is the emblem, by general consent, of those who shall perish in the last day, may we not ask without offence, Where does the doctrine of absolute reprobation or preterition appear in his case? If Christ had never died for him; or, if he had applied for the garment, and was refused, might he not well have alleged this in behalf of his soul? and would not the just God have listened to it? But there is not the smallest excuse for him: Christ died, the sacrifice was offered for him, the ministers of the Gospel invited him, the Holy Spirit strove with him, he might have been saved, but he was not: and the fault lies so absolutely at his own door, that the just God is vindicated in his conduct, while he sends him to hell; not for the lack of what he could not get, but for the lack of what he might have had, but either neglected or refused it.

Verse 13. Then said the king to the servants] To the ministering angels, executors of the divine will.

Cast him into outer darkness] The Jewish marriages were performed in the night season, and the hall where the feast was made, was superbly illuminated; the outer darkness means, therefore, the darkness on the outside of this festal hall; rendered still more gloomy to the person who was suddenly thrust out into it, from such a profusion of light. See all this largely treated of on chap. viii. 12.

Verse 14. Many are called, &c.] This verse is wanting in one of Colbert's MSS. marked 33. in Griesbach. See the note on chap. xx. 16. Many are called by the preaching of the gospel into the outward communion of the Church of Christ; but few, comparatively, are chosen to dwell with God in glory, because they do not come to the master of the feast for a marriage garment, for that holiness without which none can see the Lord. This is an allusion to the Roman custom of raising their militia; all were mustered, but only those were chosen to serve, who were found proper. See the note on chap. xx. 16. Reader! examine thy soul, and make sure work for eternity!

Verse 15. In his talk.] Εν λογῳ, by discourse: intending to ask him subtle and ensnaring questions; his answers to which might involve him either with the Roman government, or with the great Sanhedrin.

Verse 16. The Herodians] For an account of this sect, see the note on chap. xvi. 1. The preceding parable had covered the Pharisees with confusion: when it was ended they went out, not to humble themselves before God, and deprecate the judgments with which they were threatened; but to plot afresh the destruction of their teacher. The depth of their malice appears, 1. In their mode of attack. They had often questioned our Lord on matters concerning religion; and his answers only served to increase his reputation, and their confusion. They now shift their ground, and question him concerning state affairs, and the question is such as must be answered; and yet the answer, to all human appearance, can be none other than what may be construed into a crime against the people, or against the Roman government. 2. Their profound malice appears farther in the choice of their companions in this business, viz. the Herodians. Herod was at this very time at Jerusalem, whither he had come to hold the passover. Jesus, being of Nazareth, which was in Herod's jurisdiction, was considered as his subject. Herod himself was extremely attached to the Roman emperor, and made a public profession of it: all these considerations engaged the Pharisees to unite the Herodians who, as the Syriac intimates, were the domestics of Herod, in this infernal plot. 3. Their profound malice appears farther, in the praises they gave our Lord. Teacher, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God. This was indeed the real character of our blessed Lord; and now they bear testimony to the truth, merely with the design to make it subserve their bloody purposes. Those whose hearts are influenced by the spirit of the wicked one, never do good, but when they hope to accomplish evil by it. Men who praise you to your face, are ever to be suspected. The Italians have a very expressive proverb on this subject:

Chè ti fa carezze più che non suole,
O t' ha ingannato, o ingannar ti vuole.

He who caresses thee more than he was wont to do, has either DECEIVED thee, or is ABOUT TO DO IT.

I have never known the sentiment in this proverb to fail:

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

in truth, neither carest thou for any man: for thou regardest not the person of men;

17 Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute [a] unto Cæsar, or not?

18 But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?

19 Shew me the [b] tribute money. And they brought unto him a [c] penny.

20 And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and [d] superscription?

21 They say unto him, Cæsar's. Then saith

[a] Luke 2. 1. John 8. 33. Acts 5. 37.——[b] ch. 17. 24. Mark 12. 15, 16.

[c] In value seven pence halfpenny: ch. 20. 2.——[d] Or, inscription.

and it was notoriously exemplified in the present instance. Flatterers, though they speak the truth, ever carry about with them a base or malicious soul. 4. Their malice appears still farther in the question they propose. Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not? ver. 17. The constitution of the Jewish republic, the expectations which they had of future glory and excellence, and the diversity of opinions which divided the Jews on this subject, rendered an answer to this question extremely difficult.

1. In the presence of the people, who professed to have no other king but God; and looked on their independence as an essential point of their religion.

2. In the presence of the Pharisees, who were ready to stir up the people against him, if his decision could be at all construed to be contrary to their prejudices, or to their religious rights.

3. In the presence of the Herodians, who, if the answer should appear to be against Cæsar's rights, were ready to inflame their master to avenge, by the death of our Lord, the affront offered to his master the emperor.

4. The answer was difficult, because of the different sentiments of the Jews on this subject; some maintaining that they could not lawfully pay tribute to a heathen governor: while others held, that as they were now under this strange government, and had no power to free themselves from it, it was lawful for them to pay what they had not power to refuse.

5. The answer was difficult, when it is considered that multitudes of the people had begun now to receive Jesus as the promised Messiah, who was to be the deliverer of their nation from spiritual and temporal oppression, and therefore had lately sung to him the Hosanna Rabba: see chap. xxi. 9. If then he should decide the question in Cæsar's favour, what idea must the people have of him, either as zealous for the Law, or as the expected Messiah? If against Cæsar, he is ruined. Who that loved Jesus, and was not convinced of his sovereign wisdom, could help trembling for him in these circumstances?

Jesus opposes the depth of his wisdom, to the depth of their malice, and manifests it, 1. By unmasking them, and shewing that he knew the very secrets of their hearts. Ye HYPOCRITES! why tempt ye me? i. e. why do ye try me thus? This must cover them with confusion, when they saw their motives thus discovered; and tend much to lessen their influence in the sight of the people, when it was manifest that they acted not through a desire to receive information, by which to regulate their conduct, but merely to ensnare and ruin him.

2. Christ shews his profound wisdom in not attempting to discuss the question at large; but settled the business by seizing a maxim that was common among all people, and acknowledged among the Jews, That the prince who causes his image and titles to be stamped on the current coin of a country, is virtually acknowledged thereby as the governor. See Maimon. Gezel. c. v. in Wetstein. When Sultan MAHMOUD, king of Maveralnahar, Turquestan, and the Indies, wished to seize on the dominions of SEIDEH, queen of Persia, who governed in the place of her young son Meged-edde-vlet, about A. D. 999. he sent an ambassador to her with the following order: You must acknowledge me for your KING, cause the kootbah to be read, i. e. pray for me in all the mosques of the kingdom, and GET YOUR MONEY recoined, with the IMPRESSION THAT IS ON MINE: thus denoting that she must become absolutely subject to him. See Bibliot. Orient. de Galand. p. 453. Esau Afghan carried his conquest into Bhatty, in the viceroyalty of Bengal, and caused the kootbah to be read, and coin to be struck in the name of the emperor Akbar. Ayeen Akbery, vol. ii. p. 5. See also p. 38, 92, 94, 130, 139, 187.

Verse 19. They brought unto him a penny.] A denarius: probably the ordinary capitation tax, though the poll tax in the Law, Exod. xxx. 13, 14. was half a shekel, about twice as much as the denarius. The Roman denarius had the emperor's image with a proper legend stamped on one side of it. It was not therefore the sacred shekel, which was to be paid for the repairs of the temple, which was now demanded, but the regular tribute required by the Roman government.

Verse 20. Whose is this image and superscription?] He knew well enough whose they were; but he shewed the excellency of his wisdom, 3rdly, in making them answer to their own confusion. They came to ensnare our Lord in his discourse, and now they are ensnared in their own. He who digs a pit for his neighbour, ordinarily falls into it himself.

Verse 21. They say unto him, Cæsar's.] The image was the he unto them, [a] Render therefore unto Cæsar, the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God, the things that are God's.

22 When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way.

23 ¶ [b] The same day came to him the Sadducees, [c] which say that there is no resurrection, and asked him, head of the emperor; the superscription, his titles. JULIUS CÆSAR was the first who caused his image to be struck on the Roman coin. Tiberius was emperor at this time.

Render therefore unto Cæsar] The conclusion is drawn from their own premises. You acknowledge this to be Cæsar's coin; this coin is current in your land, the currency of this coin shews the country to be under the Roman government; and your acknowledgment that it is Cæsar's, proves you have submitted. Don't therefore be unjust, but render to Cæsar the things which you acknowledge to be his: at the same time, be not impious, but render unto God, the things which belong to God.

This answer is full of consummate wisdom. It establishes the limits, regulates the rights, and distinguishes the jurisdiction of the two empires of heaven and earth. The image of princes stamped on their coin denotes, that temporal things belong all to their government. The image of God stamped on the soul denotes, that all its faculties and powers belong to the Most High, and should be employed in his service.

But while the earth is agitated and distracted with the question of political rights and wrongs; the Reader will naturally ask, What does a man owe to Cæsar? to the civil government under which he lives? Our Lord has answered the question—That which IS Cæsar's. But what is it that IS Cæsar's? 1. Honour. 2. Obedience. And 3. Tribute. 1. The civil government under which a man's lives, and by which he is protected, demands his honour and reverence. 2. The laws which are made for the suppression of evil doers, and the maintenance of good order, which are calculated to promote the benefit of the whole, and the comfort of the individual, should be religiously obeyed. 3. The government that charges itself with the support and defence of the whole, should have its unavoidable expences, however great, repaid by the people, in whose behalf they are incurred: therefore we should pay tribute. But remember, if Cæsar should intrude into the things of God, coin a new creed, or broach a new gospel, and affect to rule the conscience, while he rules the state; in these things Cæsar is not to be obeyed; he is taking the things of God, and he must not get them. Give not therefore God's things to Cæsar, and give not Cæsar's things to God. That which belongs to the commonwealth, should, on no account whatever, be devoted to religious uses; and let no man think he has pleased God, by giving that to charitable or sacred uses, which he has purloined from the state. The tribute of half a shekel, which the Law (Exod. xxx. 13, 14.) required every person above twenty years of age to pay to the temple, was, after the destruction of the temple, in the time of Vespasian, paid into the emperor's exchequer. This sum, Melancthon supposes amounted annually to THREE TONS OF GOLD.

Verse 22. When they had heard these words, they marvelled] And well they might—never man spake like this man. By this decision, CÆSAR is satisfied—he gets his own to the uttermost farthing. GOD is glorified—his honour is in every respect secured. And the PEOPLE are edified—one of the most difficult questions that could possibly come before them, is answered in such a way, as to relieve their consciences, and direct their conduct.

Verse 23. The same day] Malice is, ever active, let it be defeated ever so often, it returns to the charge. Jesus and his gospel give no quarter to vice; the vicious will give no quarter to him or it.

The Sadducees] For an account of these see on chap. xvi. 1.

Verse 24. Raise up seed unto his brother.] This law is mentioned Deut. xxv. 5. The meaning of the expression is, that the children produced by this marriage should be reckoned in the genealogy of the deceased brother, and enjoy his estates. The word seed should be always translated children or posterity.

Verse 25. Seven brethren] It is very likely the Sadducees increased the number, merely to make the question the more difficult.

Verse 28. Whose wife shall she be of the seven?] The Rabbins have said, That if a woman have two husbands in this world, she shall have the first only restored to her in the world to come. Sohar. Genes. fol. 24. The question put by these bad men is well suited to the mouth of a libertine. Those who live without God in the world, have no other God than the world—and those who have not that happiness which comes from the enjoyment of God, have no other pleasure than that which comes from the gratification of sensual appetites. The stream cannot rise higher than the spring: these men, and their younger brethren, atheists, deists, and libertines of all sorts, can form no idea of heaven as a place of blessedness, unless they can hope to find in it the gratification of their sensual desires. On this very ground Mohammed built his paradise.

Verse 29. Ye do err] Or, Ye are deceived—by your impure passions: not knowing the scriptures, which assert the resurrection:—nor the miraculous power of God, (την δυναμιν του Θεου) by which it is to be effected. In Avoda Sara, fol. 18. Sanhedrin, fol. 90. it is said, "These are they which shall have no part in the world to come: Those who say, the Lord did not come from heaven: and those who say, the resurrection cannot be proved out of the Law."

Their deception appeared in their supposing, that if there were a resurrection, men and women were to marry and be given in marriage as in this life; which our Lord shews is not the case: for men and women there, shall be like the angels of God, immortal, and free from all human passions; and from those propensities which were to continue with them only during this present state of existence. There, there shall be no death; and consequently no need of marriage to maintain the population of the spiritual world.

Verse 31. Have ye not read] This quotation is taken from Exod. iii. 6, 16. and as the five books of Moses were the only part of scripture, which the Sadducees acknowledged as divine; our Lord, by confuting them from those books, proved the second part of his assertion, "Ye are ignorant of these very scriptures, which ye profess to hold sacred."

Verse 32. I am the God of Abraham] Let it be observed, that Abraham was dead upwards of 300 years before these words were spoken to Moses: yet still God calls himself the God of Abraham, &c. Now Christ properly observes, that God is not the God of the dead, (that word being equal, in the sense of the Sadducees, to an eternal annihilation) but of the living; it therefore follows, that if he be the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, these are not dead, but alive; alive with God, though they had ceased, for some hundreds of years, to exist among mortals. We may see from this, that our Lord combats and confutes another opinion of the Sadducees, viz. that there is neither angel nor spirit; by shewing that the soul is not only immortal, but lives with God, even while the body is detained in the dust of the earth, which body is afterwards to be raised to life, and united with its soul, by the miraculous power of God, of which power they shewed themselves to be ignorant, when they denied the possibility of a resurrection.

Verse 33. The multitude—were astonished at his doctrine.] God uses the infidelity of some, for the edification of others. Had no false doctrine been broached in the world, we had not seen the full evidence of the true teaching. The opposition of deists and infidels has only served to raise up men in behalf of the truth of God, who not only have refuted them, but shewn at the same time, that the sacred testimonies are infinitely amiable in themselves, and worthy of all acceptation. Truth always gains by being opposed.

Verse 34. They were gathered together.] Επι το αυτο—they came together with one accord, or, for the same purpose; i. e. of ensnaring him in his discourse, as the Sadducees had done, ver. 16. The Codex Bezæ and several of the Itala have επ' αυτον, against him. Tamen togidre into non—Old MS. Eng. Bib.

Verse 35. A lawyer] Νομικος, a teacher of the law. What is called lawyer in the common translation, conveys a wrong idea to most readers: my old MS. renders the word in the same way I have done. These teachers of the law were the same as the Scribes, or what Dr. Wotton calls letter-men, whom he supposes to be the same as the Karaïtes, a sect of the Jews who rejected all the traditions of the elders, and admitted nothing but the written word. See Wotton's Mishna, vol. i. p. 78. These are allowed to have kept more closely to the spiritual meaning of the law and prophets, than the Pharisees did; and hence the question proposed by the lawyer, (Mark xii. 28. calls him one of the Scribes) or Karaïte, was of a more spiritual or refined nature than any of the preceding.

Verse 36. Which is the great commandment] We see here three kinds of enemies and false accusers of Christ and his disciples; and three sorts of accusations brought against them. 1. The Herodians, or politicians and courtiers, who form their questions and accusations on the rights of the prince, and matters of state, ver. 16. 2. The Sadducees, or libertines, who found theirs upon matters of religion and articles of faith, which they did not credit, ver. 23. 3. The Pharisees, lawyers, Scribes, or Karaïtes, hypocritical pretenders to devotion, who found theirs on that vital and practical godliness, (the love of God and man) of which they wished themselves to be thought the sole proprietors, ver. 36.

Verse 37. Thou shalt love the Lord] This is a subject of the greatest importance, and should be well understood, as our Lord shews that the whole of true religion is comprized in thus loving God and our neighbour.

It may not be unnecessary to enquire into the literal meaning of the word love. Αγαπη from αγαπαω, I love, is supposed to be compounded either of αγαν and ποιειν, to act vehemently or intensely: or, from αγειν κατα παν, because love is always active, and will act in every possible way; for he who loves, is with all his affection and desire carried forward to the beloved object, in order to possess and enjoy it. Some derive it from αγαν and πανεσθαι, to be completely at rest, or, to be intensely satisfied: because he who loves is supremely contented with, and rests completely satisfied in, that which he loves. Others, from αγαν and παω, because a person eagerly embraces, and vigorously holds fast, that which is the object of his love. Lastly, others suppose it to be compounded of αγαω, I admire, and πανομαι, I rest, because that which a man loves intensely, he rests in, with fixed admiration and contemplation. So that genuine love changes not, but always abides steadily attached to that which is loved.

Whatever may be thought of these etymologies, as being either just or probable; one thing will be evident to all those who know what love means, that they throw much light upon the subject, and manifest it in a variety of striking points of view. The ancient author of a MS. Lexicon in the late French king's library, under the word αγαπη, has the following definition: —Ασπασης προθεσις επι τη φιλια του φιλουμενου —Συμψυχια. "A pleasing surrender of friendship to a friend: —an identity or sameness of soul." A sovereign preference given to one above all others, present or absent: a concentration of all the thoughts and desires in a single object, which a man prefers to all others. Apply this definition to the love which God requires of his creatures, and you will have the most correct view of the subject. Hence it appears, that by this love, the soul eagerly cleaves to, affectionately admires, and constantly rests in God, supremely pleased and satisfied with him as its portion: that it acts from him, as its author; for him, as its master; and to him, as its end. That by it, all the powers and faculties of the mind are concentrated in the Lord of the universe. That by it, the whole man is willingly surrendered to the Most High: and that through it, an identity or sameness of spirit with the Lord is acquired—the man being made a partaker of the divine nature, having the mind in him which was in Christ, and thus dwelling in God, and God in him.

But what is implied in loving God with all the heart, soul, mind, strength, &c. and when may a man be said to do this? 1. He loves God with all his heart, who loves nothing in comparison of him, and nothing but in reference to him:—who is ready to give up, do, or suffer any thing in order to please and glorify him:—who has in his heart neither love nor hatred, hope nor fear, inclination nor aversion, desire nor delight, but as they relate to God, and are regulated by him.

2. He loves God with all his soul, or rather, εν ολη τη ψυχη, with all his life, who is ready to give up life for his sake;—to endure all sorts of torments, and to be deprived of all kinds of comforts rather than dishonour God: who employs life, with all its comforts and conveniences, to glorify God in, by, and through all: to whom life and death are nothing, but as they come from, and lead to God. From this divine principle sprang the blood of the martyrs, which became the seed of the Church. They overcame through the blood of the Lamb, and loved not their lives unto the death. See Rev. xii. 11.

3. He loves God with all his strength, (Mark xii. 30. Luke x. 27.) who exerts all the powers of his body and soul in the service of God:—who, for the glory of his Maker, spares neither labour nor cost—who sacrifices his time, body, health, ease, for the honour of God his divine Master:—who employs in his service, all his goods, his talents, his power, credit, authority, and influence.

4. He loves God with all his mind, (intellect—διανοια) who applies himself only to know God and his holy will:—who receives with submission, gratitude, and pleasure, the sacred truths which God has revealed to man:—who studies no art nor science, but as far as it is necessary for the service of God; and uses it at all times to promote his glory:—who forms no projects nor designs, but in reference to God, and the interests of mankind:—who banishes from his understanding and memory, every useless, foolish, and dangerous thought, together with every idea, which has any tendency to defile his soul, or turn it for a moment from the centre of eternal repose. In a word, he who sees God in all things—thinks of him at all times—having his mind continually fixed upon God, acknowledging him in all his ways:—who begins, continues, and ends all his thoughts, words, and works, to the glory of his name—this is the person who loves God with all his heart, life, strength, and intellect. He is crucified to the world, and the world to him:—he lives, yet not he, but Christ lives in him. He beholds as in a glass the glory of the Lord, and is changed into the same image from glory to glory. Simply and constantly looking unto Jesus, the author and perfecter of his faith, he receives continual supplies of enlightening and sanctifying grace, and is thus fitted for every good word and work. O glorious state! far, far beyond this description! which comprizes an ineffable communion between the ever-blessed Trinity and the soul of man!

Verse 38. This is the first and great commandment.] It is so, 1. In its antiquity; being as old as the world, and engraven originally on our very nature.

2. In dignity; as directly and immediately proceeding from, and referring to God.

3. In excellence; being the commandment of the New Covenant, and the very spirit of the divine adoption.

4. In justice; because it alone renders to God his due, prefers him before all things, and secures to him his proper rank in relation to them.

5. In sufficiency; being in itself capable of making men holy in this life, and happy in the other.

6. In fruitfulness; because it is the root of all commandments, and the fulfilling of the law.

7. In virtue and efficacy; because by this alone, God reigns in the heart of man, and man is united to God.

8. In extent; leaving nothing to the creature, which it does not refer to the Creator.

9. In necessity; being absolutely indispensable.

10. In duration; being ever to be continued on earth, and never to be discontinued in heaven.

Verse 39. Thou shalt love thy neighbour] The love of our neighbour springs from the love of God as its source; is found in the love of God as its principle, pattern and end; and the love of God is found in the love of our neighbour as its effect, representation, and infallible mark. This love of our neighbour is a love of equity, charity, succour, and benevolence. We owe to our neighbour what we have a right to expect from him—"Do unto all men as ye would they should do unto you," is a positive command of our blessed Saviour. By this rule, therefore, we should think, speak, and write, concerning every soul of man:—put the best construction upon all the words and actions of our neighbour, that they can possibly bear. By this rule we are taught, to bear with, love, and forgive him; to rejoice in his felicity, mourn in his adversity, desire and delight in his prosperity, and promote it to the utmost of our power: instruct his ignorance, help him in his weakness, and risk even our life for his sake, and for the public good. In a word, we must do every thing in our power, through all the possible varieties of circumstances, for our neighbours, which we would wish them to do for us, were our situations reversed.

This is the religion of Jesus! how happy would society be, were these two, plain, rational precepts properly observed! Love ME, and love thy FELLOWS! Be unutterably happy in me, and be in perfect peace, unanimity, and love, among yourselves. Great Fountain and Dispenser of love! fill thy creation with this sacred principle, for his sake who died for the salvation of mankind!

On the nature of self-love, see chap. xix. 19.

Verse 40. On these two—hang all the law and the prophets.] They are like the first and last links of a chain, all the intermediate ones depend on them. True religion begins and ends in love to God and man. These are the two grand links that unite God to man, man to his fellows, and men again to God.

Love is the fulfilling of the law, says St. Paul, Rom. xiii. 10. for he who has the love of God in him, delights to obey the divine precepts, and to do all manner of kindness to men for God's sake.

Verse 41. While the Pharisees were gathered together] Jesus asks a question in his turn, utterly to confound them, and to shew the people, that the source of all the captious questions of his opponents, was their ignorance of the prophecies relative to the Messiah.

Verse 42. What think ye of Christ?] Or, What are your thoughts concerning THE CHRIST—the Messiah: for to this title, the emphatic article should always be added.

Whose son is he? From what family is he to spring?

They say unto him, The son of David.] This was a thing well known among the Jews, and universally acknowledged; see John vii. 42. and is a most powerful proof against them, that the Messiah is come. Their families are now so perfectly confounded, that they cannot trace back any of their genealogies with any degree of certainty: nor have they been capable of ascertaining the different families of their tribes, for more than sixteen hundred years. Why then should the spirit of prophecy assert so often, and in such express terms, that Jesus was to come from the family of David; if he should only make his appearance when the public registers were all demolished, and it would be impossible to ascertain the family? Is it not evident that God designed that the Messiah should come at a time when the public genealogies might be inspected, to prove that it was he who was prophesied of, and that no other was to be expected? The Evangelists Matthew and Luke, were so fully convinced of the conclusiveness of this proof, that they had recourse to the public registers; and thus proved to the Jews from their own records, that Jesus was born of the family mentioned by the prophets. Nor do we find that a Scribe, Pharisee, or any other, ever attempted to invalidate this proof, though it would have essentially subserved their cause, could they have done it. But as this has not been done, we may fairly conclude it was impossible to do it.

Verse 43. How then doth David in spirit (or, by the spirit—by the inspiration of the Spirit of God) call him Lord? saying, Verse 44. The Lord (יהוה Yeve or Jehovah) said unto my Lord, (אדני Adni or Adonai, my prop, stay, master, support) Sit thou on my right hand] Take the place of the greatest eminence and authority. Till I make thine enemies thy footstool—till I subdue both Jews and Gentiles under thee, and cause them to acknowledge thee as their sovereign and Lord. This quotation is taken from Psal. cx. 1. and from it these two points are clear, 1. That David wrote it by the inspiration of God; and 2. That it is a prophetic declaration of the Messiah.

Verse 45. How is he his son?] As the Jews did not attempt to deny the conclusion of our Lord's question, which was, the Messiah is not only the son of David according to the flesh, but he is the Lord of David according to his divine nature, then it is evident they could not. Indeed there was no other way of invalidating the argument, but by denying that the prophecy in question related to Christ: but it seems, the prophecy was so fully and so generally understood to belong to the Messiah, that they did not attempt to do this: for it is immediately added, No man was able to answer him a word—they were completely nonplused and confounded.

Verse 46. Neither durst any—ask him any more questions.] "Thus," says Dr. Wotton, "our Lord put the four great sects of the Jews to silence in one day, successively. The Herodians and Pharisees wanted to know, whether they might lawfully pay tribute to Cæsar or not? The Sadducees were inquisitive to know, whose wife the woman should be of the seven brethren, in the resurrection, who had her to wife? Then comes the Scribe (or Karaïte,) who owned no authority beyond or besides the written law, and asked which was the great commandment in the law? This lawyer deserves to be mentioned here, because he not only acquiesced in, but commended what our Lord had said in answer to his question." Wotton's Miscellaneous Discourses, vol. i. p. 78.

The Pharisees and Herodians were defeated, ver. 15—22. The Sadducees were confounded, ver. 29—33. The lawyers or Karaïtes nonplused, ver. 37—40. And the Pharisees, &c. finally routed, ver. 41—46. Thus did the wisdom of God triumph over the cunning of men.

From this time, we do not find that our Lord was any more troubled with their captious questions: their whole stock, it appears, was expended, and now they coolly deliberate on the most effectual way to get him murdered. He that resists the truth of God, is capable of effecting the worst purpose of Satan.

The very important subjects of this chapter, have been so amply discussed in the notes, and applied so particularly to their spiritual uses, that it does not appear necessary to add any thing by way of practical improvement. The explanation of the great command of the law, is particularly recommended to the Reader's notice. See on verses 36—40.

NOTES ON CHAP XXIII.

Verse 2. The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat] Εκαθισαν.—They sat there formerly by divine appointment; they sit there now by divine permission. What our Lord says here, refers to their expounding the Scriptures, for it was the custom of the Jewish doctors to sit while they expounded the Law and Prophets,, (chap. v. 1. Luke iv. 20—22.) and to stand up when they read them.

By the seat of Moses, we are to understand authority to teach the Law.—Moses was the great teacher of the Jewish people; and the scribes, &c. are here represented as his successors.

Verse 3. All therefore whatsoever] That is, all those things which they read out of the Law and Prophets, and all things which they teach consistently with them. This must be our Lord's meaning; he could not have desired them to do every thing without restriction, which the Jewish doctors taught; because himself warns his disciples against their false teaching, and testifies that they had made the word of God of none effect, by their traditions. See chap. xv. 6, &c. Besides, as our Lord speaks here in the past tense—whatsoever they HAVE commanded, οσα ειπωσιν, he may refer to the teaching of a former period, when they taught the way of God in truth; or were much less corrupted than they were now.

Verse 4. They bind heavy burdens] They are now so corrupt, that they have added to the ceremonies of the Law, others of their own invention, which are not only burdensome and oppressive, but have neither reason, expediency, nor revelation, to countenance them. In a word, like all their successors in spirit, to the present day, they were severe to others, but very indulgent to themselves.

Verse 5. All their works they do for to be seen of men] In pointing out the corruptions of these men, our Lord gives us the distinguishing characteristics of all false teachers, whether Jewish or Christian.

1. They live not according to the truths they preach; they say, and do not, ver. 3.

2. They are severe to others, point out the narrowest road to heaven, and walk in the broad road themselves.—They bind on burthens, &c. ver. 4.

3. They affect to appear righteous, and are strict observers of certain rites, &c. while destitute of the power of godliness. They make broad their phylacteries, &c. ver. 5.

4. They love worldly entertainments, go to feast wherever they are asked, and seek Church preferments.—They love the chief places at feasts, and chief seats in the synagogues, ver. 6.

5. They love and seek public respect and high titles; salutations in the market-place, (for they are seldom in their studies) and to be called of men, Rabbi—eminent teacher, though they have no title to it, either from the excellence or fruit of their teaching. When these marks are found in a man who professes to be a minister of Christ, charity itself will assert, he is a thief and a robber—he has climbed over the wall of the sheep-fold, or broken it down, in order to get in.

certain portions of the Law were written. The Jews tied these about their foreheads and arms, for three different purposes.—1. To put them in mind of those precepts which they should constantly observe. 2. To procure them reverence and respect in the sight of the heathen. And 3. To act as amulets or charms to drive away evil spirits.

The first use of these phylacteries, is evident from their name.

The second use appears from what is said on the subject from the Gemara, Beracoth, chap. i. quoted by Kypke. "Whence is it proved that phylacteries (תפילין, tephilin) are the strength of Israel?—Ans. From what is written, Deut. xxviii. 10. All the people of the earth shall see that thou art called by the name [of יהוה Jehovah;] and they shall be afraid of thee."

The third use of them appears from the Targum, on Cant. viii. 3. His left hand is under my head, &c. "The congregation of Israel hath said, I am elect above all people, because I bind my phylacteries on my left hand, and on my head, and the scroll is fixed to the right side of my gate, the third part of which looks to my bed-chamber, that DÆMONS may not be permitted to INJURE me."

An original phylactery lies now before me. It is a piece of fine vellum, about eighteen inches long, and an inch and quarter broad. It is divided into four unequal compartments: in the first is written, in a very fair character, with many apices, after the mode of the German Jews, the first ten verses of Exod. xiii.; in the second compartment is written, from the eleventh to the sixteenth verse of the same chapter inclusive; in the third, from the fourth to the ninth verse inclusive, of Deut. vi. beginning with, Hear, O Israel, &c.; in the fourth, from the thirteenth to the twenty-first verse inclusive, of Deut. xi.

These passages seem to be chosen in vindication of the use of the phylactery itself, as the Reader will see on consulting them: Bind them for a SIGN upon thy HAND—and for FRONTLETS between thy EYES—write them upon the POSTS of thy HOUSE, and upon thy GATES; all which commands the Jews took in the most literal sense.

Even the phylactery became an important appendage to a Pharisee's character, insomuch, that some of them wore them very broad, either that they might have the more written on them, or, that the characters being larger, they might be the more visible, and that they might hereby acquire greater esteem among the common people, as being more than ordinarily religious.—For the same reason, they wore the fringes of their garments of an unusual length. Moses had commanded (Num. xv. 38 & 39.) the children of Israel to put fringes to the borders of their garments, that when they looked upon even these distinct threads, they might remember not only the Law in general, but also the very minutiæ, or smaller parts of all the precepts, rites, and ceremonies, belonging to it. As these hypocrites were destitute of all the life and power of religion within, they endeavoured to supply its place by phylacteries and fringes without. See the note on Exod. xiii. 9.

Verse 7. To be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi.] רבי רבי, i. e. My Teacher! my Teacher! The second Rabbi is omitted by several excellent MSS., by most of the ancient Versions, and by some of the Fathers. Griesbach has left it in the text, with the note of doubtfulness.

There are three words used among the Jews as titles of dignity, which they apply to their doctors—Rabh, Rabbi, and Rabban; each of these terms has its particular meaning: Rabban implies much more than Rabbi, and Rabbi much more than Rabh. They may be considered as three degrees of comparison; Rabh, great, Rabbi, greater, and Rabban, greatest. These Rabbis were looked up to as infallible oracles in religious matters, and usurped not only the place of the Law, but of God himself.

Verse 8. But be not ye called Rabbi] As our Lord probably spoke in Hebrew, the latter word Rabbi, in this verse, must have been in the plural; but as the contracted form of the plural sounds almost exactly like the singular, the Greek writer would naturally express them both in the same letters.

None of the prophets had ever received this title, nor any of the Jewish doctors before the time of Hillel and Shammai, which was about the time of our Lord; and as disputes on several subjects had run high between these two schools, the people were of course divided; some acknowledging Hillel as Rabbi,—infallible teacher, and others giving this title to Shammai. The Pharisees, who always sought the honour that comes from men, assumed the title, and got their followers to address them by it. See on chap. xix. 3.

One is your Master] Instead of καθηγητης guide, or leader, (the common reading here, and which occurs in verse 10.) the famous Vatican MS., upwards of fifty others, and most of the ancient Versions, read διδασκαλος, master. The most eminent critics approve of this reading; and independently of the very respectable authority by which it is supported, it is evident that this reading is more consistent with the context than the other,—Be not ye called MASTERS, for one is your MASTER.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren.

9 And call no man your father upon the earth: [a] for one is your Father, which is in heaven.

10 Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master, even Christ.

11 But [b] he that is greatest among you shall be your servant.

Even Christ] Griesbach has left this out of the text, because it is wanting in many of the most excellent MSS., Versions, and Fathers. Mill and Bengel approve of the omission. It might have been brought into this verse from verse 10. Our Lord probably alludes to Isai. liv. 13. All thy children shall be taught of the Lord.

Ye are brethren.] No one among you is higher than another, or can possibly have from me any jurisdiction over the rest. Ye are, in this respect, perfectly equal.

Verse 9. Call no man your FATHER] Our Lord probably alludes to the AB, or father of the Sanhedrin, who was the next after the Nasi, or president. See on chap. xx. 21. By which he gives his disciples to understand, that he would have no SECOND after himself, established in his Church, of which he alone was the head; and that a perfect equality must subsist among them.

Verse 10. Neither be ye called masters] Καθηγηται, leaders. God is in all these respects jealous of his honour. To him alone it belongs to guide and lead his Church, as well as to govern and defend it. Jesus is the sole teacher of righteousness. It is he alone (who is the word, light, and eternal truth;) that can illuminate every created mind; and who as Saviour and Redeemer, speaks to every heart by his Spirit.

Though the title of Rabbi, mentioned above, was comparatively recent in the time of our Lord, yet it was in great vogue, as were the others—father and master, mentioned in this and the following verse; some had all three titles, for thus in Bab. Maccoth, fol. 24. "It is feigned," says Dr. Lightfoot, "that when king Jehosaphat saw a disciple of the wise men, he rose up out of his throne, and embraced him, and said, אבי אבי רבי רבי מרי מרי, Abbi Abbi, Rabbi Rabbi, Mori Mori, Father Father! Rabbi Rabbi! Master Master! Here then are the three titles, which in the 7th, 9th and 10th verses, our blessed Lord condemns; and these were titles that the Jewish doctors greatly affected.

Verse 11. Your servant.] Διακονος, deacon. See on chap. xx. 26.

Verse 12. Whosoever shall exalt himself, &c.] The way to arrive at the highest degree of dignity in the sight of God, is, by being willing to become the servant of all. Nothing is more hateful in his sight than pride; to bring it into everlasting contempt, God was manifest in the flesh. He who was in the likeness of God, took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of man, and humbled himself unto death. After this, can God look upon any proud man without abasing him? Spiritual lordship and domination, ecclesiastical luxury, pomp, and pride, must be an abhorrence in the sight of that God who gave the above advices to his followers.

Another lesson, which our blessed Lord teaches here is, that no man is implicitly to receive the sayings, doctrines, and decisions of any man, or number of men, in the things which concern the interests of his immortal soul. Christ, his Spirit, and his word, are the only infallible teachers. Every man who wishes to save his soul, must search the Scriptures, by prayer and faith.—Reader, take counsel with the pious; hear the discourses of the wise and holy: but let the book of God ultimately fix thy creed.

Verses 14 and 13. Woe unto you, scribes] I think the fourteenth and thirteenth verses should be transposed. This transposition is authorized by some of the best MSS., Versions, and Fathers. The fourteenth is wanting in the BDL., and in many others of inferior note, as well as in several of the Versions. Griesbach had left it out of the text, in his first edition; I hesitated, and left it in, thus transposed. I am happy to find that a more extensive collation of MSS. &c. has afforded proof to that eminent critic, that it should be restored to its place. In his second edition, he has transposed the two, just as I had done. The fifteenth reads best after the thirteenth.

Verse 14. Ye devour widows' houses] On this subject I am in possession of nothing better than the following note of Dr. Whitby.

"This sect," says Josephus, (Ant. l. xvii. ch. 3.) "pretended to a more exact knowledge of the Law, on which account the women were subject to them, as pretending to fore ye shall receive the greater damnation.

15 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves.

16 Woe unto you, [a] ye blind guides, which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor!

17 Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gold, [c] or the temple that sanctifieth the gold?

18 And, Whosoever shall swear by the altar, it is nothing; but whosoever sweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is [d] guilty.

19 Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gift, or [e] the altar that sanctifieth the gift?

20 Whoso therefore shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things thereon.

21 And whoso shall swear by the temple, be dear to God. And when Alexandra obtained the government, (Jewish war, b. i. ch. 4.) they insinuated themselves into her favour, as being the exactest sect of the Jews, and the most exact interpreters of the Law, and abusing her simplicity, did as they listed, remove and dispose, bind and loose, and even cut off men. They were in vogue for their long prayers, which they continued sometimes three hours; that perhaps they sold them, as do the Roman priests their masses, or pretended others should be more acceptable to God for them; and so might spoil devout widows by the gifts or salaries they expected from them. Now, this being only a hypocritical pretence of piety, must be hateful to God, and so deserve a greater condemnation."

Long prayer] For proofs of long prayers and vain repetitions among Jews, Mohammedans, and Heathens, see the notes on chap. vi. 7.

Verse 13. Ye shut up the kingdom] As a key by opening a lock gives entrance into a house, &c. so knowledge of the sacred testimonies, manifested in expounding them to the people, may be said to open the way into the kingdom of heaven. But where men who are termed teachers are destitute of this knowledge themselves, they may be said to shut this kingdom; because they occupy the place of those who should teach, and thus prevent the people from acquiring heavenly knowledge.

In ancient times the Rabbins carried a key, which was the symbol or emblem of knowledge. Hence it is written in Semacoth, ch. viii. "When Rab. Samuel the little died, his key and his tablets were hung on his tomb, because he died childless." See Schoetgen.

The kingdom of heaven here means the Gospel of Christ; the Pharisees would not receive it themselves, and hindered the common people as far as they could.

Verse 15. Compass sea and land] A proverbial expression, similar to ours, You leave no stone unturned; intimating that they did all in their power to gain converts, not to God, but to their sect. These we may suppose were principally sought for among the Gentiles, for the bulk of the Jewish nation was already on the side of the Pharisees.

Proselyte] Προσηλυτος, a stranger, or foreigner; one who is come from his own people and country, to sojourn with another. See the different kinds of proselytes explained in the note on Exod. xii. 43.

The child of hell] A Hebraism for an excessively wicked person, such as might claim hell for his mother, and the Devil for his father.

Two-fold—the child of] The Greek word διπλοτερον, which has generally been translated twofold, KYPKE has demonstrated to mean more deceitful. Απλους, is used by the best Greek writers for simple, sincere, απλοτης for simplicity, sincerity, so διπλους, deceitful, dissembling, and διπλοη, hypocrisy, fraudulence, and διπλοτερον, more fraudulent, more deceitful, more hypocritical. See also Suidas in Διπλοη.

Dr. Lightfoot, and others observe, that the proselytes were considered by the Jewish nation, as the scabs of the Church, and hindered the coming of the Messiah; and Justin Martyr observes, that "the proselytes did not only disbelieve Christ's doctrine, but were abundantly more blasphemous against him than the Jews themselves, endeavouring to torment and cut off the Christians wherever they could; they being in this the instruments of the Scribes and Pharisees."

Verse 16. Whosoever shall swear by the gold] The covetous man, says one, still gives preference to the object of his lust; gold has still the first place in his heart. A man is to be suspected when he recommends those good works most, from which he receives most advantage.

Is bound thereby, i. e. to fulfil his oath.

Verse 20. Whoso—shall swear by the altar] As an oath always supposes a person who witnesses it, and will punish perjury; therefore whether they swore by the temple, or the gold, (ver. 16.) or by the altar, or the gift laid on it, (ver. 18.) the oath necessarily supposed the God of the temple—of the sweareth by it, and by [a] him that dwelleth therein.

22 And he that shall swear by heaven, sweareth by [b] the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon.

23 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! [c] for ye pay tithe of mint and [d] anise and cummin, and [e] have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

altar and of the gifts who witnessed the oaths, and would even, in their exempt cases, punish the perjury.

Verse 21. Whoso shall swear by the temple] Perhaps it is to this custom of swearing by the temple, that Martial alludes, lib. xi. epist. 95.

Ecce negas, jurasque mihi per templa Tonantis;
Non credo: jura, Verpe, per Anchialum.

"Behold, thou deniest and swearest to me by the temples of Jupiter; I will not credit thee: swear, O Jew, by the temple of Jehovah." This word probably comes from היכל יה heical Yah, the temple of Jehovah. This seems a better derivation than אם חי אלהים im chai Elohim, as God liveth, though the sound of the latter is nearer to the Latin.

By him that dwelleth therein.] The common reading is κατοικουντι, dwelleth or INHABITETH, but κατοικησαντι, dwelt or DID inhabit, is the reading of CDEFGHKLM. eighty-six others: this reading has been adopted in the editions of Complutum, Colineus, Bengel, and Griesbach. The importance of this reading may be perceived by the following considerations. In the first Jewish temple, God had graciously condescended to manifest himself—he is constantly represented as dwelling between the cherubim, the two figures that stood at each end of the ark of the covenant; between whom, on the mercy seat, the lid of the ark, a splendor or glory was exhibited, which was the symbol and proof of the divine presence. This the Jews called שכינה Shekinah, the habitation of Jehovah. Now the Jews unanimously acknowledge that five things were wanting in the second temple, which were found in the first, viz. 1. the ark; 2. the holy spirit of prophecy; 3. the Urim and Thummim; 4. the sacred fire; and 5. the שכינה Shekinah. As the Lord had long before this time abandoned the Jewish temple, and had now made the human nature of Jesus the Shekinah, (see John i. 14. the Logos was made flesh, εσκηνωσεν, and made his tabernacle—made the Shekinah—among us) our Lord could not with any propriety, say that the Supreme Being did now inhabit the temple; and therefore used a word that hinted to them that God had forsaken their temple, and consequently the whole of that service which was performed in it; and had now opened the new and living way to the holiest by the Messiah. But all this was common swearing; and whether the subject was true or false, the oath was unlawful. A common swearer is worthy of no credit, when, even in the most solemn manner, he takes an oath before a magistrate: he is so accustomed to stake his truth, perhaps even his soul, to things whether true or false, that an oath cannot bind him: and indeed is as little respected by himself, as it is by his neighbour. Common swearing and the shocking frequency and multiplication of oaths in civil cases, have destroyed all respect for an oath; so that men seldom feel themselves bound by it: and thus it is useless in many cases to require it as a confirmation, in order to end strife or ascertain truth. See the note on chap. v. 37.

Verse 23. Ye pay tithe of mint, &c.] They were remarkably scrupulous in the performance of all the rites and ceremonies of religion, but totally neglected the soul, spirit, and practice of godliness.

Judgment] Acting according to justice and equity, towards all mankind. Mercy—to the distressed and miserable. And faith in God, as the fountain of all righteousness, mercy, and truth. The Scribes and Pharisees neither begun nor ended their works in God; nor had they any respect unto his name in doing them. They did them to be seen of men, and they had their reward—human applause.

These ought ye to have done, &c.] Our Lord did not object to their paying tithe even of common pot-herbs—this did not affect the spirit of religion: but while they did this and such like to the utter neglect of justice, mercy, and faith, they shewed that they had no religion, and knew nothing of its nature.

Verse 24. Blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel.] This clause should be thus translated, Ye strain out the gnat, but ye swallow down the camel. In the common translation, Ye strain AT a gnat, conveys no sense. Indeed it is likely to have been at first an error of the press, AT for OUT, which, on examination, I find escaped in the edition of 1611; and has been regularly continued since. There is now before me, "The newe Testament, (both in Englyshe and in Laten) of Mayster Erasmus translacion, imprynted by Wyllyam Powell, dwellynge in Flete strete: the yere of our

Eng. Bib. so Wickliff,

Verse 25. Ye make clean the outside] The Pharisees were exceedingly exact in observing all the washings and purifications prescribed by the law; but paid no attention to that inward purity which was typified by them. A man may appear clean without, who is unclean within: but outward purity will not avail in the sight of God, where inward holiness is wanting.

Extortion and excess.] Αρπαγης και ακρασιας, rapine and intemperance: but instead of ακρασιας, intemperance, many of the very best MSS. CEFGHKS. and more than a hundred others, the Syriac, Arabic, Æthiopic, Slavonic, with Chrysostom, Euthym. and Theophylact, have αδικιας, injustice, which Griesbach has admitted into the text instead of ακρασιας. The latter Syriac has both. Several MSS. and versions have ακαθαρσιας, uncleanness: others have πλεονεξιας, covetousness: some have πονηριας, wickedness; and two of the ancients have iniquitate, iniquity. Suppose we put them all together, the character of the Pharisee will not be overcharged. They were full of rapine and intemperance, injustice and uncleanness, covetousness, wickedness, and iniquity.

Verse 27. For ye are like] Παρομοιαζετε, ye exactly resemble—the parallel is complete.

Whited sepulchres] White-washed tombs. As the law considered those unclean who had touched any thing belonging to the dead, the Jews took care to have their tombs white-washed each year, that being easily discovered, they might be consequently avoided.

Verse 28. Even so ye also—appear righteous unto men] But what will this appearance avail a man, when God sits in judgment upon his soul! Will the fair reputation which he had acquired among men while his heart was the seat of unrighteousness, screen him from the stroke of that justice, which impartially sends all impurity and unholiness into the pit of destruction? No. In the sin that he hath sinned, and in which he hath died, and according to that, shall he be judged and punished; and his profession of holiness only tends to sink him deeper into the lake which burns with unquenchable fire. Reader! see that thy heart be right with God.

Verse 29. Ye build the tombs of the prophets] It appears, that through respect to their memory, they often repaired, and sometimes beautified the tombs of the prophets. M. De la Vallé, in his journey to the Holy Land, says, that when he visited the cave of Machpelah, he saw some Jews honouring a sepulchre, for which they have a great veneration, with lighting at it wax candles, and burning perfumes. See Harmer, vol. iii. p. 416. And in ditto, p. 424, we are informed that building tombs over those reputed saints, or beautifying those already built, is a frequent custom among the Mohammedans.

Verse 30. We would not have been partakers] They imagined themselves much better than their ancestors; but our Lord, who knew what they would do, uncovers their hearts, and shews them that they are about to be more abundantly vile than all who had ever preceded them.

Verse 31. Ye be witnesses] Ye acknowledge that ye are the children of those murderers, and ye are about to give full proof that ye are not degenerated.

There are many who think, that had they lived in the time of our Lord, they would not have acted towards him as the Jews did. But we can scarcely believe, that they who reject his gospel, trample under foot his precepts, do despite to the Spirit of his grace, love sin, and hate his followers, would have acted otherwise to him than the murdering Jews, had they lived in the same times.

Verse 32. Fill ye up then] Notwithstanding the profession you make, ye will fill up the measure of your fathers—will continue to walk in their way, accomplish the fulness of every evil purpose by murdering me; and then, when the measure of your iniquity is full, vengeance shall come upon you to the uttermost, as it did on your rebellious ancestors. The 31st verse should be read in a parenthesis, and then the 32d will appear to be what it is, an inference from the 30th.

Ye will fill up, or, fill ye up—πληρωσατε' but it is manifest that the imperative is put here for the future, a thing quite consistent with the Hebrew idiom, and frequent in the Scriptures. So John ii. 19. Destroy this temple, &c. i. e. Ye will destroy or pull down this temple, and I will rebuild it in three days—Ye will crucify me and I will rise again the third day. Two good MSS. have the word in the future tense: and my old MS. bible has it in the present—Yee (ye) fulfillen the mesure of youre (your) fadris.

Verse 33. Ye serpents, ye generation of Vipers] What a terrible stroke—Ye are serpents, and the offspring of serpents. This refers to ver. 31. they confessed that they were the children of those who murdered the prophets; and they are now going to murder Christ and his followers, to shew that they have not degenerated—an accursed seed, of an accursed breed. My old MS. translates this place oddly—Yee serpentis, fruytis of burrowynygis of eddris that sleen her modris. There seems to be here an allusion to a common opinion, that the young of the adder or viper which are brought forth alive, eat their way through the womb of their mothers. Hence that ancient ænigma attributed to LACTANTIUS:

Non possum nasci, si non occidero matrem.
Occidi matrem; sed me manet exitus idem.
Id mea mors faciet, quod jam mea fecit origo.
Cæl. Firm. Symposium, N. xv.

I never can be born, nor see the day
'Till through my parent's womb I eat my way.
Her I have slain; like her must yield my breath,
For that which gave me life, shall cause my death.

Every person must see, with what propriety this was applied to the Jews, who were about to murder the very person who gave them their being and all their blessings.

Verse 34. Wherefore] To shew how my prediction, Ye will fill up the measure of your fathers, shall be verified, Behold I send (I am just going to commission them) prophets, &c. and some ye will kill, (with legal process) and some ye will crucify pretend to try and find guilty, and deliver them into the hands of the Romans, who shall through you, thus put them to death. See on Luke xi. 49. By prophets, wise men, and Scribes, our Lord intends the evangelists, apostles, deacons &c. who should be employed in proclaiming his gospel: men who should equal the ancient prophets, their wise men, and Scribes, in all the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit.

Verse 35. Upon the earth] Επι της γης, upon this land, meaning probably the land of Judea; for thus the word is often to be understood. The national punishment of all the innocent blood which had been shed in the land, shall speedily come upon you; from the blood of Abel the just, the first prophet and preacher of righteousness, Heb. xi. 4. 2 Pet. ii. 5. to the blood of Zachariah, the son of Barachiah. It is likely that our Lord refers to the murder of Zachariah, mentioned 2 Chron. xxiv. 20. who said to the people, Why transgress ye the commandments of God, so that ye cannot prosper? Because you have forsaken the Lord, he hath forsaken you. And they conspired against him and stoned him—at the commandment of the king, in the court of the house of the Lord. And when he died, he said, The Lord look upon and require it: ver. 21, 22.

But it is objected, that this Zachariah was called the son of Jehoiada, and our Lord calls this one the son of Barachiah. Let it be observed, 1. That double names were frequent among the Jews, and sometimes the person was called by one, sometimes by the other. Compare 1 Sam. ix. 1. with 1 Chron. viii. 33. where it appears that the father of Kish, had two names, Abiel and Ner. So Matthew is called Levi, compare Matt. ix. 9. with Mark ii. 14. So Peter was also called Simon, and Lebbeus was called Thaddeus, Matt. x. 2, 3.

2. That Jerom says, that in the gospel of the Nazarenes it was Jehoiada, instead of Barachiah.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar.

36 Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation.

37 [a] O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, [b] and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would [c] I have gathered thy children together, a Luke 13. 34.——b 2 Chron. 24. 21.

c Deut. 32. 11, 12. 2 Esdr. 1. 30.

3. That Jehoiada and Barachiah have the very same meaning, the praise or blessing of Jehovah.

4. That as the Lord required the blood of Zachariah so fully, that in a year all the princes of Judah and Jerusalem were destroyed by the Syrians, and Joash, who commanded the murder, slain by his own servants, 2 Chron. xxiv. 23—25. and their state grew worse and worse, till at last the temple was burned, and the people carried into captivity by Nebuzaradan:—so it should be with the present race. The Lord would, after the crucifixion of Christ, visit upon them the murder of all those righteous men, that their state should grow worse and worse, till at last the temple should be destroyed, and they finally ruined by the Romans. See this prediction in the next chapter: and See Dr. Whitby concerning Zachariah, the son of Barachiah.

Some think that our Lord refers, in the spirit of prophecy, to the murder of Zacharias, son of Baruch, a rich Jew, who was judged, condemned, and massacred in the temple by the Idumean zealots, because he was rich, a lover of liberty, and a hater of wickedness. They gave him a mock trial, and when no evidence could be brought against him, of his being guilty of the crime they laid to his charge, viz. a design to betray the city to the Romans, and his judges had pronounced him innocent, two of the stoutest of the zealots fell upon him and slew him in the middle of the temple. See Josephus, WAR, b. iv. chap. v. s. 5. See Crevier, vol. vi. p. 172. History of the Roman Emperors. Others imagine, that Zachariah, one of the minor prophets, is meant, who might have been massacred by the Jews: for, though the account is not come down to us, our Lord might have it from a well known tradition in those times. But the former opinion is every way the most probable.

Between the temple and the altar.] That is, between the sanctuary and the altar of burnt offerings.

Verse 36. Shall come upon this generation.] Επι την γενεαν ταυτην, upon this race of men, viz. the Jews. This phrase often occurs in this sense, in the Evangelists.

Verse 37. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem] 1. It is evident that our blessed Lord seriously and earnestly wished the salvation of the Jews. 2. That he did every thing that could be done consistently with his own perfections, and the liberty of his creatures to effect this. 3. That his tears over the city, Luke xix. 41. sufficiently evince his sincerity. 4. That these persons nevertheless perished. And 5. That the reason was, they would not be gathered together under his protection: therefore wrath, i. e. punishment, came upon them to the uttermost. From this it is evident, that there have been persons whom Christ wished to save, and bled to save, who notwithstanding perished, because they would not come unto him, John v. 40. The metaphor which our Lord uses here is a very beautiful one. When the hen sees a bird of prey coming, she makes a noise to assemble her chickens, that she may cover them with her wings from the danger. The Roman eagle is about to fall upon the Jewish state—nothing can prevent this but their conversion to God through Christ—Jesus cries throughout the land, publishing the gospel of reconciliation—they would not assemble, and the Roman eagle came and destroyed them. The hen's affection to her brood is so very strong as to become proverbial. The following beautiful Greek epigram taken from the Anthologia, affords a very fine illustration of this text.

Χειμεριαις νιφαδεσσι καλυπομενα τεθας ορνις
Τεκνοις ευναιας αμφεχεε πτερυγας.
Μεσφα μιν ουρανιον κρυος ωλεσεν η γαρ εμεινεν
Αιθερος ουρανιων αντιπαλος νεφεων.
Προκνη και Μεδεια, κατ' αϊδος αιδεσθητε,
Μητερες, ορνιθων εργα διδασκομεναι.

Anthol. lib. i. Tit. lxxxvii. edit. Bosch. p. 344.

Beneath her fostering wing the HEN defends
Her darling offspring, while the snow descends;
Throughout the winter's day unmov'd defies
The chilling fleeces and inclement skies;
Till vanquish'd by the cold and piercing blast,
True to her charge, she perishes at last!
O Fame! to hell this fowl's affection bear;
Tell it to Progné and Medea there:—
To mothers such as those, the tale unfold,
And let them blush to hear the story told!

This epigram contains a happy illustration not only of our Lord's simile, but also of his own conduct. How long had these thankless and unholy people been the objects of his tenderest cares! For more than 2000 years, they engrossed the most peculiar regards of the most beneficent Providence; and during the three years of our Lord's public ministry, his preaching and miracles had but one object and aim, the instruction and salvation of this thoughtless and disobedient people. For their sakes, he who was rich became poor, that they through his poverty might be rich:—for their sakes, he made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form even as a hen gathereth her chickens [a] under her wings, and ye would not!

38 Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.

of a servant, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross! He died, that THEY might not perish, but have everlasting life. Thus, to save their life, he freely abandoned his own.

Verse 38. Behold, your house] Ο οικος, the temple:—this is certainly what is meant. It was once the LORD'S temple, God's OWN house—but now he says, YOUR temple or house—to intimate that God had abandoned it. See the note on ver. 21. See also on Luke xiii. 35.

Verse 39. Ye shall not see me] I will remove my gospel from you, and withdraw my protection.

Till ye shall say, Blessed] Till after the fulness of the Gentiles is brought in, when the word of life shall again be sent unto you, then will ye rejoice, and bless, and praise him that cometh in the name of the Lord, with full and final salvation for the lost sheep of the house of Israel. See Rom. xi. 26, 27.

Our Lord plainly foresaw, that in process of time, a spiritual domination would arise in his church; and to prevent its evil influence, he leaves the strong warnings against it, which are contained in the former part of this chapter. As the religion of Christ is completely spiritual, and the influence by which it is produced and maintained, must come from heaven; therefore, there could be no master or head but himself: for as the Church (the assemblage of true believers) is his body, all its intelligence, light, and life, must proceed from him alone. Our forefathers noted this well; and this was one of the grand arguments by which they overturned the papal pretensions to supremacy in this country. In a note on ver 9. in a Bible published by Edmund Becke in 1549, the 4th of Edward VI. we find the following words: Call no man your father upon the earth. Here is the Bishoppe of Rome declared a plaine Antichriste, in that he woulde be called the most holye father; and that all Christen men shoulde acknowledge hym for no lesse than their spyrituall father notwithstandinge these playne wordes of Christe. It is true, nothing can be plainer; and yet, in the face of these commands, the pope has claimed the honour; and millions of men have been so stupid as to concede it. May those days of darkness, tyranny, and disgrace, never return!

From the 13th to the 39th verse, our Lord pronounces eight woes or rather pathetic declarations against the Scribes and Pharisees. 1. For their unwillingness to let the common people enjoy the pure word of God, or its right explanation: Ye shut up the kingdom, &c. ver. 13.

2. For their rapacity and pretended sanctity in order to secure their secular ends: Ye devour widows' houses, &c. ver. 14.

3. For their pretended zeal to spread the kingdom of God by making proselytes, when they had no other end in view than forming instruments for the purposes of their oppression and cruelty: Ye compass sea and land, &c. ver. 15.

4. For their bad doctrine and false interpretations of the Scriptures, and their dispensing with the most solemn oaths and vows at pleasure, Ye blind guides, which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing, &c. ver. 16—22.

5. For their superstition in scrupulously attending to little things, and things not commanded, and omitting matters of great importance, the practice of which God had especially enjoined: Ye pay tithe of mint and cummin, &c. ver. 23, 24.

6. For their hypocrisy, pretending saintship, and endeavouring to maintain decency in their outward conduct, while they had no other object in view than to deceive the people, and make them acquiesce in their oppressive measures: Ye make clean the outside of the cup, ver. 25, 26.

7. For the depth of their inward depravity and abomination having nothing good, fair, or supportable, but the mere outside.—Most hypocrites and wicked men have some good: but these were radically and totally evil: Ye are like unto whited sepulchres—within full—of all uncleanness, ver. 27, 28.

8. For their pretended concern for the holiness of the people, which proceeded no farther than to keep them free from such pollutions as they might accidentally and innocently contract, by casually stepping on the place where a person had been buried: and for their affected regret that their fathers had killed the prophets, while themselves possessed and cultivated the same murderous inclinations: Ye—garnish the sepulchres of the righteous, and say, If we had been, &c. ver. 29, 30.

It is amazing with what power and authority our blessed Lord reproves these bad people. This was the last discourse they ever heard from him: and it is surprising, considering their wickedness, that they waited even for a mock trial, and did not rise up at once and destroy him. But the time was not yet come, in which he was to lay down his life, for no man could take it from him.

While he appears in this last discourse with all the authority of a lawgiver and judge, he at the same times shews the tenderness and compassion of a friend and a father; he beholds their awful state—his eye affects his heart, and he weeps over them! Were not the present hardness and final perdition of these ungodly men entirely of themselves? Could Jesus, as the Supreme God, have fixed their reprobation from all eternity by any necessitating decree; and yet weep over the unavoidable consequences of his own sovereign determinations? How absurd as well as shocking is the thought! This is Jewish exclusion: Credat Judæus Apella—non ego.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIV.

This chapter contains a prediction of the utter destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem, and the subversion of the whole political constitution of the Jews: and is one of the most valuable portions of the New Covenant Scriptures, with respect to the evidence which it furnishes of the truth of Christianity. Every thing which our Lord foretold should come on the temple, city, and people of the Jews, has been fulfilled in the most correct and astonishing manner; and witnessed by a writer who was present during the whole, who was himself a Jew, and is acknowledged to be a historian of indisputable veracity in all those transactions which concern the destruction of Jerusalem. Without having designed it, he has written a commentary on our Lord's words, and shewn how every tittle was punctually fulfilled, though he knew nothing of the scripture which contained this remarkable prophecy. His account will be frequently referred to in the course of these notes; as also the admirable work of Bishop Newton on the Prophecies.

Verse 1. And Jesus went out, and departed from the temple] Or, And Jesus going out of the temple, was going away. This is the arrangement of the words in several eminent manuscripts, versions, and fathers; and is much clearer than that in the common translation. The Jews say the temple was builded of white and green spotted marble. See Lightfoot. Josephus says the stones were white and strong; fifty feet long, twenty-four broad, and sixteen thick. Antiq. b. 15. c. xi. See Mark xiii. 1.

Verse 2. See ye not all these things?] The common text, and many manuscripts have ου βλεπετε, do ye not see, or consider. But the negative particle is omitted by several excellent manuscripts, by the Coptic, Sahidic, Armenian, Ethiopic, Slavonic, Vulgate, and Itala versions, and by some of the primitive fathers, who all read it thus, See, or consider all these things.

There shall not be left here, one stone] These seem to have been the last words he spoke as he left the temple, into which he never afterwards entered: and when he got to the mount of Olives he renewed the discourse. From this mount, on which our Lord and his disciples now sat, the whole of the city, and particularly the temple, were clearly seen. This part of our Lord's prediction was fulfilled in the most literal manner. Josephus says, War, book vii. c. 1. "Cæsar gave orders that they should now demolish the whole city and temple, τε πολιν απασαν και τον νεων κατασκιπτειν, except the three towers, Phaselus, Hippicus, and Mariamne, and a part of the western wall, and these were spared; but for all the rest of the wall it was laid so completely even with the ground, by those who dug it up to the foundation, that there was left nothing to make those that came thither believe it had ever been inhabited." Maimonides, a Jewish Rabbin, in Tract. Taanith, c. 4. says, "That the very foundations of the temple were digged up, according to the Roman custom." His words are these, "On that ninth day of the month Ab, fatal for vengeance, the wicked Turnus Rufus, of the children of Edom, ploughed up the temple, and the places unto you, [a] There shall not be left here, one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

3 ¶ And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the [b] disciples came unto him privately, saying, [c] Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?

7 For [g] nation shall rise against nation, and round about it, that the saying might be fulfilled, Zion shall be ploughed as a field." This Turnus, or rather Terentius Rufus, was left general of the army by Titus, with commission, as the Jews suppose, to destroy the city and the temple, as Josephus observes.

The temple was destroyed 1st. Justly; because of the sins of the Jews. 2dly. Mercifully; to taks away from them the occasion of continuing in Judaism: and 3dly. Mysteriously; to shew that the ancient sacrifices were abolished, and that the whole Jewish œconomy was brought to an end, and the Christian dispensation introduced.

Verse 3. Tell us, when shall these things be?] There appear to be three questions asked here by the disciples. 1st. When shall these things be? viz. the destruction of the city, temple, and Jewish state. 2dly. What shall be the sign of thy coming? viz. to execute these judgments upon them, and to establish thy own church: and 3dly. When shall this world end? when wilt thou come to judge the quick and the dead? But there are some who maintain that these are but three parts of the same question, and that our Lord's answers only refer to the destruction of the Jewish state, and that nothing is spoken here concerning the LAST or judgment day.

End of the world] Του αιωνος; or, of the age; viz. the Jewish œconomy, which is a frequent accommodated meaning of the word αιων, the proper meaning of which is, as Aristotle (De Cœlo) observes, ETERNAL. Αιων, quasi αει ων continual being: and no words can more forcibly point out eternity than these. See the note on Gen. xxi. 33.

Verse 4. Take heed that no man deceive you.] The world is full of deceivers, and it is only by taking heed to the counsel of Christ, that even his followers can escape being ruined by them. From this to ver 31, our Lord mentions the signs which should precede his coming.

The FIRST sign is false Christs.

Verse 5. For many shall come in my name] Josephus says (War, b. ii. c. 13.) that there were many, who pretending to divine inspiration, deceived the people, leading out numbers of them to the desert, pretending that God would there shew them the signs of liberty, meaning redemption from the Roman power: and that an Egyptian false prophet led 30,000 men into the desert, who were almost all cut off by Felix. See Acts xxi. 38. It was a just judgment of God to deliver up that people into the hands of false Christs, who had rejected the true one. Soon after our Lord's crucifixion, Simon Magus appeared, and persuaded the people of Samaria that he was the great power of God, Acts viii. 9, 10. and boasted among the Jews that he was the Son of God.

2. Of the same stamp and character was also Dositheus, the Samaritan, who pretended that he was the Christ foretold by Moses.

3. About twelve years after the death of our Lord, when Cuspius Fadus was procurator of Judea, arose an impostor of the name of Theudas, who said he was a prophet, and persuaded a great multitude to follow him with their best effects to the river Jordan, which he promised to divide for their passage; and saying these things, says Josephus, he deceived many: almost the very words of our Lord.

4. A few years afterwards, under the reign of Nero, while Fœlix was procurator of Judea, impostors of this stamp were so frequent, that some were taken and killed almost every day. Jos. Ant. b. xx. c. 4. and 7.

The SECOND sign, wars and commotions.

Verse 6. The next signs given by our Lord are Wars and rumours of wars, &c.] These may be seen in Josephus, Ant. b. xviii. c. 9. War. b. ii. c. 10. especially as to the rumours of wars, when Caligula ordered his statue to be set up in the temple of God, which the Jews having refused, had every reason to expect a war with the Romans; and were in such consternation on the occasion, that they even neglected to till their land.

Verse 7. Nation shall rise against nation] This portended the dissensions, insurrections, and mutual slaughter of the Jews, and those of other nations, who dwelt in the same cities together; as particularly at Cæsarea, where the Jews and Syrians contended about the right of the city, which ended there in the total expulsion of the Jews, above 20,000 of kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places.

8 All these are the beginning of sorrows.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

9 [a]Then shall they deliver you up

[a] Ch. 10. 17. Mark 13. 9. Luke 21. 12. John 15. 20. & 16. 2. Acts 4. 2, 3. & 7. 59. & 12. 1, &c. 1 Pet. 4. 16. Rev. 2. 10, 13.

whom were slain. The whole Jewish nation being exasperated at this, flew to arms, and burnt and plundered the neighbouring cities and villages of the Syrians, making an immense slaughter of the people. The Syrians, in return, destroyed not a less number of the Jews. At Scythopolis they murdered upwards of 13,000. At Ascalon they killed 2,500. At Ptolemais they slew 2000, and made many prisoners. The Tyrians also put many Jews to death, and imprisoned more: the people of Gadara did likewise, and all the other cities of Syria in proportion, as they hated or feared the Jews. At Alexandria the Jews and heathens fought, and 50,000 of the former were slain. The people of Damascus conspired against the Jews of that city, and assaulting them unarmed, killed 10,000 of them. See Bishop Newton, and Dr. Lardner.

Kingdom against kingdom] This portended the open wars of different tetrarchies and provinces against each other. 1st. That of the Jews and Galileans against the Samaritans, for the murder of some Galileans going up to the feast of Jerusalem, while Cumanus was procurator. 2dly. That of the whole nation of the Jews against the Romans and Agrippa, and other allies of the Roman empire; which began when Gessius Florus was procurator. 3dly. That of the civil war in Italy, while Otho and Vitellius were contending for the empire. It is worthy of remark, that the Jews themselves say, "In the time of the Messiah, wars shall be stirred up in the world; nation shall rise against nation, and city against city." Sohar Kadash. "Again, Rab. Eleazar, the son of Abina, said, When ye see kingdom rising against kingdom, then expect the immediate appearance of the Messiah." Bereshith Rabba, sect. 42.

The THIRD sign pestilence and famine.

It is farther added, that There shall be famines, and pestilences] There was a famine foretold by Agabus, (Acts xi. 28.) which is mentioned by Suetonius, Tacitus, and Eusebius; which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar; and was so severe at Jerusalem, that Josephus says (Ant. b. xx. c. 2.) many died for lack of food. Pestilences are the usual attendants of famines: as the scarcity and badness of provisions generally produce epidemic disorders.

The FOURTH sign, earthquakes, or popular commotions.

Earthquakes, in divers places.] If we take the word σεισμοι from σειω to shake, in the first sense, then it means particularly those popular commotions and insurrections which have already been noted: and this I think to be the true meaning of the word: but if we confine it to earthquakes, there were several in those times to which our Lord refers; particularly one at Crete in the reign of Claudius: one at Smyrna, Miletus, Chios, Samos. See Grotius. One at Rome, mentioned by Tacitus: and one at Laodicea in the reign of Nero, in which the city was overthrown, as were likewise Hierapolis and Colosse. See Tacit. Annal. lib. xii. and lib. xiv. one at Campania, mentioned by Seneca; and one at Rome in the reign of Galba, mentioned by Suetonius, in the life of that emperor. Add to all these, a dreadful one in Judea, mentioned by Josephus (War, b. iv. c. 4.) accompanied by a dreadful tempest, violent winds, vehement showers, and continual lightnings, and thunders; which led many to believe that these things portended some uncommon calamity.

The FIFTH sign, fearful portents.

To these St. Luke adds that there shall be fearful sights and great signs from heaven, (chap. xxi. 11.) Josephus in his preface to the Jewish war, enumerates these. 1st. A star hung over the city like a sword; and a comet continued a whole year. 2d. The people being assembled at the feast of unleavened bread, at the ninth hour of the night, a great light shone about the altar and the temple, and this continued for half an hour. 3d. At the same feast, a cow led to sacrifice brought forth a lamb in the midst of the temple! 4th. The eastern gate of the temple, which was of solid brass, and very heavy, and could hardly be shut by twenty men, and was fastened by strong bars and bolts, was seen at the sixth hour of the night to open of its own accord! 5th. Before sun-setting there was seen over all the country, chariots and armies fighting in the clouds, and besieging cities. 6th. At the feast of pentecost, when the priests were going into the inner temple by night, to attend their service, they heard first a motion and noise, and then a voice as of a multitude, saying, LET US DEPART HENCE. 7th. What Josephus reckons one of the most terrible signs of all was, that one Jesus, a country fellow, four years before the war began, and when the city was in peace and plenty, came to the feast of tabernacles, and ran crying up and down the streets, day and night; "A voice from the east! a voice from the west! a voice from the four winds! a voice against Jerusalem and the temple! a voice against the bridegrooms and the brides! and a voice against all the people!" Though the magistrates endeavoured by stripes and tortures to restrain him, yet he still cried with a mournful voice, "Woe, woe to Jerusalem!" And this he continued to do for several years together, going about the [illegible] crying with a loud voice; "Woe, woe to the city, and to the people, and to the temple;" and as he added

"woe, woe to myself!" a stone from some sling or engine struck him dead on the spot! It is worthy of remark that Josephus appeals to the testimony of others, who saw and heard these fearful things. Tacitus, a Roman historian, gives very nearly the same account with that of Josephus. Hist. lib. v.

Verse 8. All these are the beginning of sorrows.] Ωδινων, travelling pains. The whole land of Judea is represented under the notion of a woman in grievous travail; but our Lord intimates, that all that had already been mentioned, were only the first pangs and throes, and nothing in comparison of that hard and death-bringing labour, which should afterwards take place.

From the calamities of the nation in general, our Lord passes to those of the Christians; and indeed the sufferings of his followers were often occasioned by the judgments sent upon the land, as the poor Christians were charged with being the cause of these national calamities; and were cruelly persecuted on that account.

Verse 9. Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted] Rather, Then they will deliver you up to affliction, εις θλιψιν. By a bold figure of speech, affliction is here personified. They are to be delivered into affliction's own hand, to be harassed by all the modes of inventive torture.

Ye shall be hated of all nations] Both Jew and Gentile will unite in persecuting and tormenting you. Perhaps παντων των εθνων means all the Gentiles, as in the parallel places in Mark xiii. 9—11. and in Luke xxi. 12—15. the Jewish persecution is mentioned distinctly. Ye shall be delivered up to COUNCILS and be beaten in SYNAGOGUES, and ye shall stand before governors and kings for my name's sake—be not anxiously careful beforehand what ye shall speak—for ye are not the speakers, but the Holy Spirit will speak by you—I will give you utterance and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to contradict or resist. We need go no farther than the Acts of the Apostles for the completion of these particulars. Some were delivered to councils, as Peter and John, Acts iv. 5. Some were brought before rulers and kings, as Paul before Gallio, chap. xviii. 12. before Felix, xxiv. before Festus and Agrippa, xxv. Some had utterance and wisdom which their adversaries were not able to resist; so Stephen, chap. vi. 10. and Paul, who made even Felix himself tremble, chap. xxiv. 25. Some were imprisoned, as Peter and John, chap. iv. 3. Some were beaten, as Paul and Silas, chap. xvi. 23. Some were put to death, as Stephen, chap. vii. 59. and James the brother of John, chap. xii. 2. But if we look beyond the book of the Acts of the Apostles, to the bloody persecutions under Nero, we shall find these predictions still more amply fulfilled; in these, numberless Christians fell, besides those two champions of the faith, Peter and Paul. And it was, as says Tertullian, nominis prælium, a war against the very name of Christ; for he who was called Christian, had committed crime enough in bearing the name, to be put to death. So true were our Saviour's words that they should be hated of all men for his NAME'S sake.

But they were not only to be hated by the Gentiles, but they were to be betrayed by apostates:

Verse 10. Then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another] To illustrate this point, one sentence out of Tacitus (Annal. l. xv) will be sufficient, who speaking of the persecution under Nero, says, At first several were seized, who confessed, and then by THEIR DISCOVERY, a great multitude of others were convicted and executed.

Verse 11. False prophets] Also were to be raised up; such as Simon Magus and his followers; and the false apostles complained of by St. Paul, 2 Cor. xi. 13. who were deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. Such also were Hymeneus and Philetus, 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18.

Verse 12. The love of many shall wax cold.] By reason of these trials and persecutions from without, and those apostasies and false prophets from within, the love of many to Christ and his doctrine, and to one another, shall grow cold. Some openly deserting the faith, as ver. 10. others corrupting it, as ver. 11. and others growing indifferent about it, as ver. 12. Even at this early period there seems to have been a very considerable defection in several Christian churches; see Gal. iii. 1—4. 2 Thess. iii. 1, &c. 2 Tim. i. 15.

Verse 13. But he that shall endure] The persecutions that shall come—unto the end; to the destruction of the Jewish polity, without growing cold or apostatizing—shall be saved, shall be delivered in all imminent dangers, and have his soul at last brought to an eternal glory. It is very remarkable that not a single Christian perished in the destruction of Jerusalem, though there were many there when Cestius Gallus invested the city; and had he persevered in the siege, he would soon have rendered himself master of it; but when he unexpectedly and unaccountably raised the siege, the Christians took that opportunity to escape. See Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. lib. iii. c. 5. and Mr. Reading's note there; and see the note here on ver. 20.

Verse 14. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world] But notwithstanding these persecutions, there should be an universal publication of the glad tidings of the kingdom, for a testimony to all nations. God would have the iniquity of the Jews published every where, before the heavy stroke of his judgments should fall upon them; that all mankind as it were, might be brought as witnesses against their cruelty and obstinacy in crucifying and rejecting the Lord Jesus.

In all the world, εν ολη τη οικουμενη. Perhaps no more is meant here than the Roman empire; for it is beyond controversy that πασαν την οικουμενην, Luke ii. 1. means no more than the whole Roman empire; as a decree for taxation or enrolment from Augustus Cæsar, could have no influence but in the Roman dominions; but see on Luke ii. 1. Tacitus informs us, Annal. l. xv. that as early as the reign of Nero, the Christians were grown so numerous at Rome, as to excite the jealousy of the government; and in other parts they were in proportion. However, we are under no necessity to restrain the phrase to the Roman empire, as, previously to the destruction of Jerusalem, the gospel was not only preached in the lesser Asia, and Greece, and Italy, the greatest theatres of action then in the world; but was likewise propagated as far north as SCYTHIA; as far south as ETHIOPIA; as far east as PARTHIA and INDIA; and as far west as SPAIN and BRITAIN. On this point Bishop Newton goes on to say, That there is some probability that the gospel was preached in the British nations by St. Simon the apostle; that there is much greater probability that it was preached here by St. Paul; and that there is an absolute certainty that it was planted here in the times of the apostles, before the destruction of Jerusalem. See his Proofs. Dissert. vol. ii. p. 235, 236. edit. 1758. St. Paul himself speaks, Col. i. 6, 23. of the gospel's being come into ALL THE WORLD, and preached TO EVERY CREATURE under heaven. And in his Epistle to the Romans, chap. x. 18. very elegantly applies to the lights of the church, what the Psalmist said of the lights of heaven, Their sound went into ALL THE EARTH, and their words unto the END of the WORLD. What but the wisdom of God could foretell this? and what but the power of God could accomplish it?

Then shall the end come.] When this general publication of the gospel shall have taken place, then a period shall be put to the whole Jewish œconomy, by the utter destruction of their city and temple.

Verse 15. The abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel] This abomination of desolation, St. Luke (chap. xxi. 20, 21.) refers to the Roman army; and this abomination standing in the holy place, is the Roman army besieging Jerusalem: this our Lord says, is what was spoken of by Daniel the prophet, in the ninth and eleventh chapters of his prophecy; and so let every one who reads these prophecies understand them: and in reference to this very event, they are understood by the Rabbins. The Roman army is called an abomination for its ensigns and images, which were so to the Jews. Josephus says (War, b. vi. c. 6.) the Romans brought their ensigns into the temple, and placed them over against the eastern gate, and sacrificed to them there. The Roman army is therefore fitly called the abomination, and the abomination which maketh desolate, as it was to desolate and lay waste Jerusalem: and this army besieging Jerusalem, is called by St. Mark, chap. xiii. 14. standing where it ought not, that is as in the text here, the holy place; as not only the city but a considerable compass of ground about it was deemed holy, and consequently no profane persons should stand on it.

Verse 16. Then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains] This counsel was remembered, and wisely followed by the Christians afterwards. Eusebius and Epiphanius say, that at this juncture, after Cestius Gallus had raised the siege, and Vespasian was approaching with his army, all who believed in Christ left Jerusalem and fled to Pella, and other places beyond the river Jordan; and so they all marvellously escaped the general shipwreck of their country; not one of them perished. See on ver. 13.

Verse 17. Let him which is on the house top] The houses of the Jews, as well as those of the ancient Greeks and Romans, were flat-roofed, and had stairs on the outside, by which persons might ascend and descend without coming into the house. In the eastern walled cities, these flat-roofed houses usually formed continued terraces from one end of Any thing] Instead of τι any thing, we should read τα, the things; which reading is supported by all the best MSS. Versions, and Fathers.

Verse 18. Neither let him which is in the field return back] Because when once the army of the Romans sits down before the city, there shall be no more any possibility of escape, as they shall never remove till Jerusalem be destroyed.

Verse 19. And woe unto them (alas! for them) that are with child, &c.] For such persons are not in a condition to make their escape; neither can they bear the miseries of the siege. Josephus says the houses were full of women and children that perished by the famine; and that the mothers snatched the food even out of their own children's mouths. See WAR, b. v. c. 10. But he relates a more horrid story than this, of one Mary the daughter of Eliezar, illustrious for her family and riches, who being stripped and plundered of all her goods and provisions by the soldiers, in hunger, rage and despair, killed and boiled her own sucking child, and had eaten one half of him before it was discovered. This shocking story is told WAR, book vi. c. 3. with several circumstances of aggravation.

Verse 20. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter] For the hardness of the season, the badness of the roads, the shortness of the days, and the length of the nights, will all be great impediments to your flight. Rabbi Tanchum observes, "that the favour of God was particularly manifested in the destruction of the first temple, in not obliging the Jews to go out in the winter, but in the summer." See the place in Lightfoot.

Neither on the sabbath-day] That you may not raise the indignation of the Jews by travelling on that day, and so suffer that death out of the city, which you had endeavoured to escape from within. Besides, on the sabbath-days, the Jews not only kept within doors, but the gates of all the cities and towns in every place were kept shut and barred, so that if their flight should be on a sabbath, they could not expect admission into any place of security in the land.

Our Lord had ordered his followers to make their escape from Jerusalem when they should see it encompassed with armies; but how could this be done? God took care to provide amply for this. In the twelfth year of Nero, Cestius Gallus, the president of Syria, came against Jerusalem with a powerful army. He might, says Josephus, WAR, book ii. c. 19. have assaulted and taken the city, and thereby put an end to the war; but without any just reason, and contrary to the expectation of all, he raised the siege and departed. Josephus remarks, that after Cestius Gallus had raised the siege, "many of the principal Jewish people, πολλοι των επιφανων Ιουδαιων, forsook the city as men do a sinking ship." Vespasian was deputed in the room of Cestius Gallus, who having subdued all the country, prepared to besiege Jerusalem, and invested it on every side. But the news of Nero's death, and soon after that of Galba, and the disturbances that followed, and the civil wars between Otho and Vitellius, held Vespasian and his son Titus in suspense. Thus the city was not actually besieged in form, till after Vespasian was confirmed in the empire, and Titus was appointed to command the forces in Judea. It was in those incidental delays, that the Christians, and indeed several others, provided for their own safety, by flight. In Luke xix. 43. our Lord says of Jerusalem, thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side. Accordingly, Titus having made several assaults without success, resolved to surround the city with a wall, which was with incredible speed, completed in three days! The wall was thirty-nine furlongs in length, and was strengthened with thirteen forts at proper distances, so that all hope of safety was cut off; none could make his escape from the city, and no provisions could be brought into it. See Josephus, WAR, book v. c. 12.

Verse 21. For then shall be great tribulation] No history can furnish us with a parallel to the calamities and miseries of the Jews: rapine, murder, famine, and pestilence within, Fire and sword, and all the horrors of war without. Our Lord wept at the foresight of these calamities; and it is almost impossible for any humane person to read the relation of them in Josephus without weeping also. St. Luke chap. xxi. 22. calls these the days of vengeance that all things which were written might be fulfilled. 1. These were the days in which all the calamities, predicted by Moses, Joel, Daniel, and other prophets, as well as those predicted by our Saviour, met in one common centre, and were fulfilled in the most terrible manner on that generation. 2. These were the days of vengeance in another sense, as if God's judgments had certain periods and revolutions; for it is remarkable that the temple was burnt by the Romans on the same month, and on the same day of the month, on which it had been burned by the Babylonians. See Josephus WAR, book vi. c. 4.

Verse 22. Except those days should be shortened] Josephus computes the number of those who perished in the siege at eleven hundred thousand, besides those who were slain in other places, WAR, book vi. c. 9.; and if the Romans had gone on destroying in this manner, the whole nation of the Jews would in a short time have been entirely extirpated: but for the sake of the elect, the Jews, that they might not be utterly destroyed, and for the Christians particularly, the days were shortened. These, partly through the fury of the zealots on one hand, and the hatred of the Romans on the other; and partly through the difficulty of subsisting in the mountains, without houses or provisions, would in all probability have been all destroyed, either by the sword or famine, if the days had not been shortened. The besieged themselves helped to shorten those days by their divisions and mutual slaughters; and by fatally deserting their strong holds, where they never could have been subdued, but by famine alone. So well fortified was Jerusalem, and so well provided to stand a siege, that the enemy without could not have prevailed, had it not been for the factions and seditions within. When Titus was viewing the fortifications after the taking of the city, he could not help ascribing his success to God. "We have fought," said he, "with God on our side; and it is God who pulled the Jews out of these strong holds, for what could machines, or the hands of men avail against such towers as these?" WAR, book vi. c. 9.

Verse 23. Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ] Our Lord had cautioned his disciples against false Christs and prophets before, ver. 11.; but he seems here to intimate that there would be especial need to attend to this caution about the time of the siege. And in fact many such impostors did arise about that time, promising deliverance from God; and the lower the Jews were reduced, the more disposed they were to listen to such deceivers. Like a man drowning, they were willing to catch even at a straw while there was any prospect of being saved. But as it was to little purpose for a man to take upon him the character of the Christ, without miracles to avouch his divine mission, so it was the common artifice of these impostors to shew signs and wonders, σημεια και τερατα; the very words used by Christ in this prophecy, and by Josephus in his history: ANT. book xx. c. 7. Among these Simon Magus, and Dositheus, mentioned before; and Barcocab, who, St. Jerom says, pretended to vomit flames. And it is certain these and some others were so dexterous in imitating miraculous works, that they deceived many, and such were their works, that if the elect, the chosen persons, the Christians, had not had the fullest evidence of the truth of Christ's mission and miracles, they must have been deceived too: but having had these proofs, they could not possibly be deceived by these impostors. This is simply the meaning of this place; and it is truly astonishing that it should be brought as a proof for the doctrine (whether true or false is at present out of the question) of the necessary and eternal perseverance of the saints! How abundant the Jews were in magic, divination, sorcery, incantation, &c. see proved by Dr. Lightfoot on this place.

Verse 25. Behold, I have told you before.] That is, I have forewarned you Verse 26. If they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert] Is it not worthy of remark that our Lord not only foretold the appearance of these impostors, but also the manner and circumstances of their conduct? Some he mentions as appearing in the desert. Josephus says, ANT. b. xx. c. 7. and WAR, b. ii. c. 13. That many impostors and cheats persuaded the people to follow them to the desert, promising to shew them signs and wonders done by the providence of God. An Egyptian false prophet, mentioned by Josephus, ANT. b. xx. c. 7. and in the Acts, chap. xxi. 38. led out into the DESERT four thousand men, who were murderers, but these were all taken or destroyed by Felix. Another promised salvation to the people, if they would follow him to the DESERT, and he was destroyed by Festus, ANT. b. xx. c. 7. Also one Jonathan, a weaver, persuaded a number to follow him to the DESERT, but he was taken and burnt alive by Vespasian. See WAR, b. vii. c. 11.

As some conducted their deluded followers to the DESERT, so did others to the secret chambers. Josephus mentions a false prophet, WAR, b. vi. c. 5. who declared to the people in the city, that God commanded them to go up into the temple, and there they should receive the signs of deliverance. A multitude of men, women, and children, went up accordingly; but instead of deliverance, the place was set on fire by the Romans, and 6,000 perished miserably in the flames, or in attempting to escape them.

Verse 27. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west] It is worthy of remark, that our Lord, in the most particular manner, points out the very march of the Roman army: they entered into Judea on the EAST, and carried on their conquest WESTWARD, as if not only the extensiveness of the ruin, but the very route which the army would take, were intended in the comparison of the lightning issuing from the east, and shining to the west.

Verse 28. For wheresoever the carcase is] Πτωμα, the dead carcase. The Jewish nation, which was morally and judicially dead.

There will the eagles] The Roman armies, called so partly from their strength and fierceness, and partly from the figure of these animals which was always wrought on their ensigns. It is remarkable, that the Roman fury pursued these wretched men wheresoever they were found. They were a dead carcase doomed to be devoured; and the Roman eagles were the commissioned devourers. See the pitiful account in Josephus, WAR, b. vii. c. 2, 3, 6, 9, 10, and 11.

Verse 26. Immediately after the tribulation, &c.] Commentators generally understand this and what follows, of the end of the world, and Christ's coming to judgment: but the word immediately shews that our Lord is not speaking of any distant event, but of something immediately consequent on calamities already predicted; and that must be the destruction of Jerusalem. "The Jewish heaven shall perish, and the sun and moon of its glory and happiness shall be darkened—brought to nothing. The sun is the religion of the church; the moon is the government of the state; and the stars are the judges and doctors of both. Compare Isai. xiii. 10. Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8, &c." Lightfoot.

In the prophetic language, great commotions upon earth are often represented under the notion of commotions and changes in the heavens:

The fall of Babylon is represented by the stars and constellations of heaven withdrawing their light; and the sun and moon being darkened. See Isa. xiii. 9, 10.

The destruction of Egypt, by the heaven being covered, the sun enveloped with a cloud, and the moon withholding her light. Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8.

The destruction of the Jews by Antiochus Epiphanes, is represented by casting down some of the host of heaven, and the stars, to the ground. See Dan. viii. 10.

And this very destruction of Jerusalem is represented by the prophet Joel, chap. ii. 30, 31. by shewing wonders in heaven and in earth—darkening the sun, and turning the moon into blood. The general mode of describing these judgments, leaves no room to doubt the propriety of its application in the present case.

The falling of stars, i. e. those meteors which are called falling stars by the common people, was deemed an omen of evil times. The heathens have marked this;

> Sæpe etiam stellas, vento impendente videbis
> Præcipites cœlo labi, noctisque per umbram
> Flammarum longos à tergo albescere tractus.
> VIRG. GEOR. i. ver. 365.

> And oft before tempestuous winds arise
> The seeming stars fall headlong from the skies,
> And shooting through the darkness, gild the night
> With sweeping glories, and long trails of light.
> Dryden.

Again the same poet thus sings;

> SOL tibi signa dabit: solem quis dicere falsum
> Audeat? Ille etiam cœcos instare tumultus
> Sæpe monet, fraudemque et operta tumescere bella.
> Ille etiam extincto miseratus Cæsare Romam,
> Cum caput obscurâ nitidum ferrugine texit,
> Impiaque æternam timuerunt sæcula noctem.
> Ibid. ver. 462.

> The sun reveals the secrets of the sky,
> And who dares give the source of light the lie?

In iron clouds conceal'd the public light,
And impious mortals found eternal night. Dryden.

Verse 30. Then shall appear the sign of the Son of man] The plain meaning of this is, that the destruction of Jerusalem will be such a remarkable instance of divine vengeance, such a signal manifestation of Christ's power and glory, that all the Jewish tribes shall mourn, and many will, in consequence of this manifestation of God, be led to acknowledge Christ and his religion. By της γης, of the land, in the text, is evidently meant here, as in several other places, the land of Judea and its tribes either its then inhabitants, or the Jewish people wherever found.

Verse 31. He shall send his angels] Τους αγγελους, his messengers, the apostles, and their successors in the Christian ministry.

With a great sound of a trumpet] Or, a loud sounding trumpet—the earnest affectionate call of the gospel of peace, life, and salvation.

Shall gather together his elect] The Gentiles, who were now chosen or elected, in place of the rebellious obstinate Jews, according to our Lord's prediction, Matt. viii. 11, 12. and Luke xiii. 28, 29. For the children of the kingdom (the Jews, who were born with a legal right to it, but had now finally forfeited that right by their iniquities) should be thrust out. It is worth serious observation, that the Christian religion spread and prevailed mightily after this period: and nothing contributed more to the success of the gospel, than the destruction of Jerusalem happening in the very time and manner, and with the very circumstances, so particularly foretold by our Lord. It was after this period, that the kingdom of Christ began, and his reign was established in almost every part of the world.

To St. Matthew's accout, St. Luke adds, chap. xxi. 24. They shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the Gentiles, till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. The number of those who fell by the sword was very great. ELEVEN HUNDRED THOUSAND perished during the siege. Many were slain at other places, and at other times. By the command of Florus, the first author of the war, there were slain at Jerusalem 3,600, Jos. WAR, b. ii. c. 14. By the inhabitants of Cæsarea, above 20,000. At Scythopolis, above 13,000. At Ascalon, 2,500. At Ptolemais, 2,000. At Alexandria, 50,000. At Joppa, when taken by Cestius Gallus, 8,400. In a mountain called Asamon, near Sepporis, above 2,000. At Damascus, 10,000. In a battle with the Romans at Ascalon, 10,000. In an ambuscade near the same place, 8,000. At Japha, 15,000. Of the Samaritans on mount Gerizim, 11,600. At Jotapa, 40,000. At Joppa, when taken by Vespasian, 4,200. At Tarichea, 6,500. And after the city was taken, 1,200. At Gamala, 4,000, besides 5,000 who threw themselves down a precipice. Of those who fled with John of Gischala, 6,000. Of the Gadarenes, 15,000 slain, besides countless multitudes drowned. In the village of Idumea, above 10,000 slain. At Gerasa, 1,000. At Machærus, 1,700. In the wood of Jardes, 3,000. In the castle of Masada, 960. In Cyrene, by Catullus the governor, 3,000. Besides these, many of every age, sex, and condition, were slain in the war, who are not reckoned; but of those who are reckoned, the number amounts to upwards of 1,357,660, which would have appeared incredible, if their own historian had not so particularly enumerated them. See Josephus, WAR, book ii. c. 18. 20. book iii. c. 2, 7, 8, 9. book iv. c. 1, 2, 7, 8, 9. book vii. c. 6, 9, 11. and Bp. Newton, vol. ii. p. 288—290.

Many also were led away captives into all nations. There were taken at Japha 2,130. At Jotapa, 1,200. At Tarichea, 6,000 chosen young men, who were sent to Nero; others sold to the number of 30,400, besides those who were given to Agrippa. Of the Gadarenes were taken 2,200. In Idumea above 1,000. Many besides these were taken in Jerusalem, so that, as Josephus says, the number of the captives taken in the whole war, amounted to 97,000, Those above seventeen years of age, were sent to the works in Egypt, but most were distributed through the Roman provinces, to be destroyed in their theatres by the sword, and by the wild beasts; and those under seventeen years of age were sold for slaves. Eleven thousand in one place perished for want. At Cæsarea, Titus, like a thorough-paced infernal savage, murdered 2,500 Jews, in honour of his brother's birthday: and a greater number at Berytus in honour of his father's. See Josephus, WAR, b. vii. 3. c. s. 1. Some he caused to kill each other: some were thrown to the wild beasts; and others burnt alive. And all this was done by a man who was styled The darling of mankind! Thus were the Jews miserably tormented, and distributed over the Roman provinces; and continue to be distressed and dispersed over all the nations of the world to the present day. Jerusalem also was, according to the prediction of our Lord, to be trodden down by the Gentiles. Accordingly it has never since been in the possession of the Jews. It was first in subjection to the Romans, afterwards to the Sarazens, then to the Franks, after to the Mamalukes, and now to the Turks. Thus has the prophecy of Christ been most literally and terribly fulfilled, on a people who are still preserved as continued monuments of the truth of our Lord's prediction, and of the truth of the Christian religion. See more in Bp. Newton's Dissert. vol. ii. p. 291, &c.

Verse 32. Learn a parable of the fig tree] That is, These signs which I have given you will be as infallible a proof of the approaching ruin of the Jewish state, as the budding of the trees is a proof of the coming summer.

Verse 34. This generation shall not pass] Η γενεα αυτη, this race; i. e. the Jews shall not cease from being a distinct people, till all the counsels of God relative to them and the Gentiles be fulfilled. Some translate η γενεα αυτη, this generation, meaning the persons who were then living, that they should not die before these signs, &c. took place: but though this was true, as to the calamities that fell upon the Jews and the destruction of their government, temple &c. yet as our Lord mentions Jerusalem's continuing to be under the power of the Gentiles, till the fulness of the Gentiles should come in, i. e. till all the nations of the world should receive the gospel of Christ, after which the Jews themselves should be converted unto God, Rom. xi. 25, &c. I think it more proper not to restrain its meaning to the few years which preceded the destruction of Jerusalem; but to understand it of the care taken by divine providence, to preserve them as a distinct people, and yet to keep them out of their own land, and from their temple service. See on Mark xiii. 30. But still it is literally true in reference to the destruction of Jerusalem. John probably lived to see these things come to pass; compare Matt. xvi. 28. with John xxi. 22. and there were some Rabbins alive at the time when Christ spoke these words, who lived till the city was destroyed, viz. Rabban Simeon, who perished with the city; R. Jochanan ben Zaccai, who outlived it; R. Zadoch, R. Ismael, and others. See Lightfoot.

The war began, as Josephus says, Ant. b. xx. c. 11. s. 1. in the second year of the government of Gessius Florus, who succeeded Albinus, successor of Porcius Festus, mentioned Acts xxiv. 27, in the month of May, in the twelfth year of Nero, and the seventeenth of Agrippa, mentioned Acts xxv. and xxvi. that is, in May, A. D. 66.

The temple was burnt August 10, A. D. 70. the same day and month on which it had been burnt by the king of Babylon: Josephus, Ant. b. xx. c. 11. s. 8.

The city was taken September 8, in the second year of the reign of Vespasian, or the year of Christ 70. Ant. b. vi. c. 10.

That was the end of the siege of Jerusalem, which began, as Josephus several times observes, about the fourteenth day of the month Nisan, or our April. See War, b. v. c. 3. s. 1. c. 13. s. 7. b. vi. c. 9. s. 3.

Dr. Lardner farther remarks, There is also an ancient inscription to the honour of Titus, "who, by his father's directions and counsels, had subdued the Jewish nation and destroyed Jerusalem, which had never been destroyed by any generals, kings, or people before." The inscription may be seen in GRUTER, vol. i. p. 244. It is as follows:

IMP. TITO. CÆSARI. DIVI. VESPASIANI. F

For this complete conquest of Jerusalem, Titus had a triumphal arch erected to his honour, which still exists. It stands on the Via Sacra, leading from the Forum to the Amphitheatre. On it are represented the spoils of the temple of God, such as the golden table of the shew-bread, the golden candlestick with its seven branches, the ark of the covenant, the two golden trumpets, &c. &c. for a particular account see the note on Exod. xxv. 31. On this arch, a correct model of which, taken on the spot, now stands before me, is the following inscription:

On this occasion, a medal was struck with the following inscription round a laureated head of the emperor:—IMP. erator J.ulius CÆS.ar VESP.asianus AUG.ustus. P.ontifex M.aximus, TR.ibunitia P.otestate P.ater P.atriæ CO.nS ul VIII.—On the obverse, are represented a palm tree, the emblem of the land of Judea; the emperor with a trophy standing on the left; Judea under the figure of a distressed woman, sitting at the foot of the tree weeping, with her head bowed down, supported by her left hand, with the legend JUDAEA CAPTA. S.enatus C.onsultus. at the bottom. This is not only an extraordinary fulfilment of our Lord's prediction, but a literal accomplishment of a prophecy delivered about 800 years before, Isai. iii. 26. And she desolate, shall sit upon the ground.

Verse 36. But of that day and hour] Ωρα here is translated season by many eminent critics, and is used in this sense by both sacred and profane authors. As the day was not known, in which Jerusalem should be invested by the Romans, therefore our Lord advised his disciples to pray that it might not be on a sabbath; and as the season was not known, therefore they were to pray that it might not be in the winter; ver 20. See on Mark xiii. 23.

Verses 37, 38. As the days of Noah—they were eating and drinking] That is, they spent their time in rapine, luxury, and riot. The design of these verses seems to be, that the desolation should be as general, as it should be unexpected.

Verse 39. And knew not] They considered not—did not lay Noah's warning to heart, till it was too late to profit by it: so shall it be—and so it was in this coming of the Son of man.

Verses 40, 41. Then shall two men—two women—one shall be taken, and the other left.] The meaning seems to be, that so general should these calamities be, that no two persons wheresoever found, or about whatsoever employed, should be both able to effect their escape: and, that captivity and the sword should have a complete triumph over this unhappy people.

Two women shall be grinding] Women alone are still employed in grinding the corn in the East; and it is only when dispatch is required, or the uppermost millstone is heavy, that a second woman is added. See Wakefield, and Harmer, Obs. vol. i. 253. That they were formerly thus employed, see Exod. xi. 5. and the note there. See also Isai. xlvii. 2.

Verse 42. Watch therefore] Be always on your guard, that you may not be taken unawares, and that you may be properly prepared to meet God in the way either of judgment or mercy, whensoever he may come. This advice the followers of Christ took, and therefore they escaped; the miserable Jews rejected it and were destroyed. Let us learn wisdom by the things which they suffered.

Verse 43. If the good man of the house had known] "As a master of a family, who expected a thief at any time of the night, would take care to be awake, and ready to protect his house; so do ye, who know that the Son of man will come. Though the day and hour be uncertain, continue always in a state of watchfulness, that he may not come upon you unawares." WAKEFIELD.

Verse 45. Who then is a faithful and wise servant] All should live in the same expectation of the coming of Christ, which a servant has with respect to the return of his master, who, in departing for a season, left the management of his whom his lord hath made ruler over his houshold, to give them meat in due season?

affairs to him; and of which management he is to give an exact account on his master's return.

Here is an abstract of the duties of a minister of Christ. 1. He is appointed not by himself, but by the vocation and mission of his master. 2. He must look on himself not as the master of the family, but as the servant. 3. He must be scrupulously faithful and exact, in fulfilling the commands of his master. 4. His fidelity must be ever accompanied by wisdom and prudence. 5. He must give the domestics—the sacred family, their food; and this food must be such as to afford them true nourishment. And 6. This must be done in its season. There are certain portions of the bread of life, which lose their effect by being administered out of proper season, or to improper persons.

Verse 46. Blessed is that servant] His blessedness consists in his master's approbation.

Verse 47. He shall make him ruler over all his goods.] O heavenly privilege of a faithful minister of Christ! He shall receive from God a power to dispense all the blessings of the New Covenant; and his word shall ever be accompanied with the demonstration of the Holy Ghost to the hearts of all that hear it. Much of a preacher's usefulness may be lost by his unfaithfulness.

Verse 48. But, and if that evil servant] Here are three characters of a bad minister. 1. He has little or no faith in the speedy coming of Christ, either to punish for wickedness, or to pardon and sanctify those who believe. It may be, he does not outwardly profess this, but he says it in his heart, and God searches his heart, and knows that he professes to teach what he does not believe. 2. He governs with an absolute dominion, oppressing his colleagues, and doing violence to the followers of Christ. And shall begin to smite, &c. 3. He leads an irregular life—does not love the company of the children of God, but eats and drinks with the drunkards, preferring the tables of the great and the rich, whose god is their belly, and thus feeds himself without fear. Great God! save thine inheritance from being ravaged by such wolves!

Verse 50. The lord of that servant] Here are three punishments which answer to the three characteristics of the bad minister. 1. A sudden death, and the weight of God's judgments falling upon him, without a moment to avert it: this answers to his infidelity and forgetfulness. He shall come in a day in which he looketh not for him. 2. A separation from the communion of saints, and from all the gifts which he has abused: this answers to the abuse of his authority in the church of Christ. 3. He shall have tears and eternal pains in company with all such hypocrites as himself: and this answers to his voluptuous life, pampering the flesh at the expence of the soul.

Verse 51. Cut him asunder] This refers to an ancient mode of punishment used in several countries. Isaiah is reported to have been sawed ASUNDER. That it was an ancient mode of punishment is evident from what Herodotus says: that Sabacus, king of Ethiopia, had a vision, in which he was commanded μεσους διαταμειν, to cut in two all the Egyptian priests, lib. ii. And in lib. vii. where Xerxes ordered one of the sons of Pythius μεσον διαταμειν, to be cut in two, and one half placed on each side of the way, that his army might pass through between them. See Raphelius also in his notes from Herodotus and Polybius. This kind of punishment was used among the Persians: see Dan. ii. 5. iii. 29. Story of Susannah, ver. 55, 59. See also 2 Sam. xii. 31. and 1 Chron. xx. 3. It may also have reference to that mode of punishment, in which the different members were chopped off seriatim, first the feet, then the hands, next the legs, then the arms, and lastly the head. This mode of punishment is still in use among the Chinese.

The Reader has no doubt observed in the preceding chapter, a series of the most striking and solemn predictions, fulfilled in the most literal, awful, and dreadful manner. Christ has foretold the ruin of the Jewish people, and the destruction of their polity; and in such a circumstantial manner, as none else could do, but He, under whose eye are all events, and in whose hands are the government and direction of all things. Indeed he rather declared what he would do, than predicted what should come to pass. And the fulfilment has been as circumstantial as the prediction. Does it not appear that the predicted point was so literally referred to by the occurring fact, by which it was to have its accomplishment, as to leave no room to doubt the truth of the prediction, or the certainty of the event by which it was fulfilled? Thus the WISDOM of God, as also his justice and providence, have had a plenary manifestation.

But this wisdom appears farther, in preserving such a record of the prediction, and such evidence of its accomplishment, as cannot possibly be doubted. The New Testament, given by the inspiration of God, and handed down uncorrupted from father to son, by both friends and enemies, perfect in its credibility and truth, inexpugnable in its evidences, and astonishingly circumstantial in details of future occurrences, which the wisdom of God alone could foreknow—that New Testament is the record of these predictions. The history of the Romans, written by so many hands; the history of the Jews, written by one of themselves; triumphal arches, coins, medals, and public monuments of different kinds, are the evidence by which the fulfilment of the record is demonstrated. Add to this the preservation of the Jewish people; a people scattered through all nations, yet subsisting as a distinct body, without temple, sacrifices, or political government; and who, while they attempt to suppress the truth, yet reluctantly stand forth as an unimpeachable collateral evidence, that the solemn record, already alluded to, is strictly and literally true! Who that has ever consulted the Roman historians of the reigns of Vespasian and Titus; the history of Josephus, and the 24th chapter of St. Matthew's gospel, and who knows any thing of the present state of the Jews over the face of the earth, or even of those who sojourn in England, can doubt for a moment the truth of this Gospel, or the infinite and all comprehensive knowledge of Him who is its author! Here then is one portion of Divine Revelation that is incontrovertibly and absolutely proved to be the truth of God. Reader! if he, who while he predicted the ruin of this disobedient and refractory people, wept over their city and its inhabitants, has so minutely fulfilled the threatenings of his justice on the unbelieving and disobedient, will he not as circumstantially fulfil the promises of his grace to all them that believe? The existence of his revelation, the continuance of a Christian church upon earth, the certainty that there is one individual saved from his sins by the grace of the Gospel, and walking worthy of his vocation, are continued proofs and evidences that he is still the same; that he will fulfil every jot and tittle of that word on which he has caused thee to trust; and save to the uttermost all that come unto the Father by Him. The word of the Lord endureth for ever: and they who trust in Him shall never be confounded.

NOTES ON CHAP XXV.

Verse 1. Then shall the kingdom of heaven] The state of Jews and professing Christians—or the state of the visible church at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, and in the day of judgment: for the parable appears to relate to both those periods. And particularly at the time in which Christ shall come to judge the world, it shall appear what kind of reception his gospel has met with. This parable or something very like it is found in the Jewish records: so in a treatise intitled RESHITH CHOCMAH, the beginning of wisdom, we read thus: "Our wise men of blessed memory say, Repent whilst thou hast strength to do it, whilst thy lamp burns, and thy oil is not extinguished; for if thy lamp be gone out, thy oil will profit thee nothing." Our doctors add in MEDRASH: "The holy blessed God said to Israel, My sons, repent whilst the gates of repentance stand open; for I receive a gift at present, but when I shall sit in judgment in the age to come, I will receive none." Another parable mentioned by Kimchi on Isai. lxv. 13. "Rabbi Yuchanan, the son of Zachai, spoke a parable concerning a king, who invited his servants, but set them no time to come: the prudent and wary among them adorned themselves, and standing at the door of the king's house, said, Is any thing wanting in the house of the king? (i. e. Is there any work to be done?) But the foolish ones that were among them went away, and working said, When shall the feast be in which there is no labour? Suddenly the king sought out his servants: those who were adorned entered in, and they who were still polluted entered in also. The king was glad when he met the prudent, but he was angry when he met the foolish: he said, Let the prudent sit down and eat—let the others stand and look on." Rabbi Eliezer said, "Turn to God one day before your death." His disciples said, "How can a man know the day of his death?" He answered them, "Therefore you should turn to God to-day, perhaps you may die to-morrow; thus every day will be employed in returning." See Kimchi in Isai. lxv. 13.

Virgins] Denoting the purity of the Christian doctrine and character. In this parable, the bridegroom is generally understood to mean Jesus Christ. The feast, that state of felicity to which he has promised to raise his genuine followers. The wise or prudent, and foolish virgins, those who truly enjoy, and those who only profess the purity and holiness of his religion. The oil, the grace and salvation of God, or that faith which works by love. The vessel, the heart in which this oil is contained. The lamp, the profession of enjoying the burning and shining light of the gospel of Christ. Going forth, the whole of their sojourning upon earth.

Verse 2. Five of them were wise] Or provident, φρονιμοι—they took care to make a proper provision beforehand, and left nothing to be done in the last moment.

Five were foolish.] Μωροι, which might be translated careless, is generally rendered foolish; but this does not agree so well with φρονιμοι, provident or prudent, in the first clause, which is the proper meaning of the word. Μωρος, in the Etymologicon, is thus defined—μη ὁρᾳ το δεον, he who sees not what is proper or necessary. These did not see that it was necessary to have oil in their vessels (the salvation of God in their souls) as well as a burning lamp of religious profession, ver. 3, 4.

Verse 4. Took oil in their vessels] They not only had a sufficiency of oil in their lamps, but they carried a vessel with oil to recruit their lamps, when it should be found expedient. This the foolish or improvident neglected to do: hence, when the oil that was in their lamps burned out, they had none to pour into the lamp to maintain the flame.

Verse 5. The bridegroom tarried] The coming of the bridegroom to an individual may imply his death: his coming to the world—the final judgment. The delay—the time from a man's birth till his death in the first case: in the second, the time from the beginning to the end of the world.

Slumbered and slept.] Or, νυσταξαν και εκαθευδον, they became drowsy and fell asleep. As sleep is frequently used in the Sacred Writings for death, so drowsiness, which precedes sleep, may be considered as pointing out the decays of the constitution, and the sicknesses which precede death. The other explanations which are given of this place must be unsatisfactory to every man who is not warped by some point in his creed, which must be supported at every expence. Carelessness disposed them to drowsiness, drowsiness to sleep, deep sleep which rendered them as unconscious of their danger, as they were before inattentive to their duty. The Anglo-saxon has hit the meaning of the original well—þa hnappuðon hiȝ ealle ϛ ꝑlepun; of which my old MS. Bible gives a literal version in the English of the 14th century, forgothe—alle nappeden and slepten.

Verse 6. At midnight there was a cry] The Jewish weddings were generally celebrated in the night; yet they usually began at the rising of the evening star: but in this case, there was a more than ordinary delay.

Behold, the bridegroom cometh] What an awful thing to be summoned to appear before the Judge of quick and dead! The following is an affecting relation, and fas est ab hoste doceri. "When Rabbi Jochanan ben Zachai was sick, his disciples came to visit him; and when he saw them, he began to weep. They say to him, Rabbi! the light of Israel, the right hand pillar, the strong hammer, wherefore dost thou weep? He answered them, If they were carrying me before a king of flesh and blood, who is here to-day, and to-morrow in the grave; who, if he were angry with me, his anger would not last for ever; if he put me in prison, his prison would not be everlasting; if he condemned me to death, that death would not be eternal; whom I could soothe with words or bribe with riches: yet even in these circumstances I should weep. But now I am going before the King of kings, the holy and the blessed God, who liveth and endureth for ever and for ever; who, if he be angry with me, his anger will last for ever; if he put me in prison, his bondage will be everlasting; if he condemn me to death, that death will be eternal; whom I cannot soothe with words nor bribe with riches:—when, farther, there are before me two ways, the one to hell and the other to paradise, and I know not in which they are carrying me, shall I not weep?" TALMUD Beracoth, fol. 28.

Verse 7. Trimmed their lamps.] εκοσμησαν, adorned them. I have seen some of the eastern lamps or lanthorns, the body of which was a skeleton of wood and threads, covered with a very thin transparent membrane, or very fine gauze, and decorated with flowers painted on it. It is probable that the nuptial lamps were highly decorated in this way; though the act mentioned here may mean no more than preparing the lamps for burning.

The following account of the celebration of a wedding in Persia, taken from the Zend Avesta, vol. ii. p. 558, &c. may cast some light on this place.

"The day appointed for the marriage, about 5 o'clock in the evening, the bridegroom comes to the house of the bride, where the mobed, or priest, pronounces for the first time the nuptial benediction. He then brings her to his own house, gives her some refreshment, and afterwards the assembly of her relatives and friends reconduct her to her father's house. When she arrives, the mobed repeats the nuptial benediction, which is generally done about MIDNIGHT; immediately after, the bride, accompanied with a part of her attending troop, (the rest having returned to their own homes) is reconducted to the house of her husband, where she generally arrives about three o'clock in the morning. Nothing can be more brilliant than these nuptial solemnities in India. Sometimes the assembly consists of not less than 2000 persons, all richly dressed in gold and silver tissue; the friends and relatives of the bride encompassed with their domestics, are all mounted on horses richly harnessed. The goods, wardrobe, and even the bed of the bride are carried in triumph. The husband, richly mounted and magnificently dressed, is accompanied by his friends and relatives, the friends of the bride following him in covered carriages. At intervals during the procession, guns and rockets are fired, and the spectacle is rendered grand beyond description, by a prodigious number of LIGHTED TORCHES, and by the SOUND of a multitude of musical intruments."

There are certain preparations which most persons believe they must make at the approach of death: but alas! it is often too late. The lamp is defiled, the light almost out, and the oil expended—and what adorning is a wretched sinner, struggling in the agonies of death, capable of preparing for his guilty soul!

Verse 8. Our lamps are gone out.] σβεννυνται, are going out. So then it is evident that they were once lighted. They had once hearts illuminated and warmed by faith and love, but they had backslidden from the salvation of God, and now they are excluded from heaven, because, through their carelessness, they have let the light that was in them become darkness, and have not applied in time for a fresh supply of the salvation of God.

A Jewish Rabbin supposes God addressing man thus: I give thee my lamp, give thou me thy lamp: if thou keep my lamp, I will keep thy lamp; but if thou extinguish my lamp, I will extinguish thy lamp. That is, I give thee my WORD and testimonies to be a light unto thy feet and a lanthorn to thy steps, to guide thee safely through life: give me thy SOUL and all its concerns, that I may defend and save thee from all evil: keep my WORD, walk in my ways, and I will keep thy SOUL that nothing shall injure it; but if thou trample under foot my laws, I will cast thy soul into outer darkness.

Verse 9. Lest there be not enough for us and you] These had all been companions in the Christian course, and there was a time when they might have been helpful to each other; but that time is now past for ever—none has a particle of grace to spare, not even to help the soul of the dearest relative! The grace which every man receives is just enough to save his own soul: he has no merits to bequeath to the church; no work of supererogation, which can be placed to the account of another.

Go ye rather to them that sell, and buy] By leaving out the particle δε but, (on the indisputable authority of ABDGHKS. and HV. of Matthaï, with sixteen others, the Armenian, Vulgate, and all the Itala but one) and transposing a very little the members of the sentence, the sense is more advantageously represented and the reading smoother: Rather go to them that sell, and buy for yourselves, lest there be not enough for us and you. Beza, Mill, Bengel and Griesbach approve of the omission of the particle δε.

Verse 10. While they went to buy, the bridegroom came] What a dismal thing it is, not to discover the emptiness of one's heart of all that is good, till it is too late to make any successful application for relief! God alone knows how many are thus deceived.

And they that were ready] They who were prepared—who had not only a burning lamp of an evangelical profession, but had oil in their vessel, the faith that works by love in their hearts, and their lives adorned with all the fruits of the Spirit.

to the marriage: and [a] the door was shut.

11 Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, [b] Lord, Lord, open to us.

12 But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, [c] I know you not.

with those deceitful merchants, who promise them salvation for a price which is of no value in the sight of God. Come unto me says Jesus, and buy—there is no salvation but through his blood—no hope for the sinner but that which is founded upon his sacrifice and death. The door was shut—dreadful and fatal words? no hope remains. Nothing but death can shut this door—but death may surprize us in our sins, and then despair is our only portion.

Verse 11. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord] Earnest prayer, when used in time, may do much good, but it appears from this parable, that there may come a time, when prayer even to Jesus may be too late! viz. when the door is shut—when death has separated the body and the soul.

Verse 12. I know you not.] As if he had said, Ye are not of my company—ye were neither with the bride nor the bridegroom: ye slept while the others were in procession. I do not acknowledge you for my disciples—ye are not like him who is love—ye refused to receive his grace—ye sinned it away when ye had it; now you are necessarily excluded from that kingdom, where nothing but love and purity can dwell.

Verse 13. Watch therefore] If to watch be to employ ourselves chiefly about the business of our salvation, alas! how few of those who are called Christians are there, who do watch? How many who slumber? How many who are asleep? How many seized with a lethargy? How many quite dead?

Wherein the Son of man cometh.] These words are omitted by many excellent MSS. most of the Versions, and several of the Fathers. Griesbach has left them out of the text; Grotius, Hammond, Mill, and Bengel, approve of the omission.

Verse 14. Called his own servants] God never makes the children of men proprietors of his goods. They are formed by his power, and upheld by his bounty, and they hold their lives and their goods, as in many of our ancient tenures, quamdiu domino placuerit—at the will of their Lord.

Verse 15. Unto one he gave five talents—to every man according to his several ability] The duties men are called to perform, are suited to their situations, and the talents they receive. The good that any man has, he has received from God, as also the ability to improve that good. God's graces and temporal mercies are suited to the power which a man has of improving them. To give eminent gifts to persons incapable of properly improving them, would be only to lead them into a snare. The talent which each man has suits his own state best; and it is only pride and insanity which lead him to desire and envy the graces and talents of another. Five talents would be too much for some men: one talent would be too little He who receives much, must make proportionate improvement: and from him who has received little, the improvement only of that little will be required. As five talents in one case, are sufficient to answer the purpose for which they were given; so also are two and one.

The man who improves the grace he has received, however small, will as surely get to the kingdom of God, as he who has received most from his master, and improved all.

There is a parable something like this in Sohar Chadash, fol. 47. "A certain king gave a deposit to three of his servants: the first kept it; the second lost it; the third spoiled one part of it, and gave the rest to another to keep. After some time, the king came and demanded the deposit. Him who had preserved it, the king praised, and made him governor of his house. Him who had lost it, he delivered to utter destruction, so that both his name and his possessions were blotted out. To the third, who had spoiled a part and given the rest to another to keep, the king said, Keep him and let him not go out of my house, till we see what the other shall do, to whom he has entrusted a part: if he shall make a proper use of it, this man shall be restored to liberty; if not, he also shall be punished." See Schoetgen. I have had already occasion to remark, how greatly every Jewish parable is improved, that comes through the hands of Christ.

In this parable of our Lord, four things may be considered.

I. The master who distributes the talents.

II. The servants who improved their talents.

III. The servant who buried his talents. And

IV. His punishment.

1. The master's kindness. The servants had nothing—deserved nothing—had no claim on their master, yet he, in his KINDNESS, delivers unto them his goods, not for his advantage, but for their comfort and salvation.

2. The master distributes these goods diversely;—giving to one five, another two, and to another one. No person can com-other two, and to another one; [a] to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey.

16 Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents.

17 And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two.

18 But he that had received one, went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

19 After a long time [b] the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them.

20 And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, [c] Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained, beside them, five talents more.

21 His lord said unto him, Well done, thou plain that he has been forgotten; the master gives to each. None can complain of the diversity of the gifts; it is the master who has done it. The master has an absolute right over his own goods, and the servants cannot find fault with the distribution. He who has little, should not envy him who has received much; for he has the greater labour, and the greater account to give. He who has much, should not despise him who has little, for the sovereign Master has made the distinction; and his little, suited to the ability which God has given him, and fitted to the place in which God's providence has fixed him, is sufficiently calculated to answer the purpose of the master, in the salvation of the servant's soul.

3. The master distributes his talents with WISDOM. He gave to each according to his several ability, i. e. to the power he had to improve what was given. It would not be just to make a servant responsible for what he is naturally incapable of managing; and it would not be proper to give more than could be improved. The powers which men have, God has given; and as he best knows the extent of these powers, so he suits his graces and blessings to them in the most wise and effectual way. Though he may make one vessel for honour (i. e. a more honourable place or office) and another for dishonour (a less honourable office) yet both are for the master's use—both are appointed and capacitated to shew forth his glory.

II. The servants who improved their talents.

These persons are termed δοῦλοι, slaves, such as were the property of the master, who might dispose of them as he pleased. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded, ver. 16. 1. The work was speedily begun—as soon as the master gave the talents, and departed, so soon they began to labour. There is not a moment to be lost—every moment has its grace, and every grace has its employment, and every thing is to be done for eternity.

2. The work was perseveringly carried on; after a long time the lord of those servants cometh, ver. 19. The master was long before he returned, but they did not relax. The longer time, the greater improvement. God gives every man just time enough to live in this world, to glorify his Maker, and to get his soul saved. Many begin well, and continue faithful for a time—but how few persevere to the end? Are there none who seem to have outlived their glory, their character, their usefulness?

3. Their work was crowned with success. They doubled the sum which they had received.—Every grace of God is capable of great improvement. Jesus himself, the pure, immaculate Jesus, grew in wisdom, and favour with God, Luke ii. 52.

4. They were ready to give in a joyful account when their master came and called for them. 1st. They come without delay, they expected his coming; and it was with an eye to this, that they continued their labour—they endured as seeing him who is invisible. 2dly. They come without fear; the master before whom they appear, has always loved them, and given them the fullest proofs of his affection for them: his love to them has begotten in them love to him; and their obedience to his orders sprung from the love they bore to him. He that loveth me, says Jesus, will keep my words. 3d. They render up their accounts without confusion.—He who received five brought five others; and he who had received two brought two more: nothing was to be done when their master called; all their business was fully prepared. 4th. They gave up every thing to their master without attempting to appropriate any thing. Their ability was his, the talents his, and the continued power to improve them his. All is of God, and all must be returned to him.

5. Their recompence from their gracious master. 1st. They receive praise. Well done, good and faithful servants, ver. 21. What a glorious thing to have the approbation of God, and the testimony of a good conscience! They were good, pure and upright within—faithful, using to God's glory the blessings he had given them. 2d. They receive gracious promises. Ye have been faithful over a little, I will set you over much. These promises refer not only to a future glory, but to an increase of God's grace and mercy here; for the more faithfully a man improves what God has already given him, the more he shall have from his gracious master: for he giveth good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, [a] I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into [b] the joy of thy lord.

22 He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beside them.

23 His lord said unto him, [c] Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

more grace, till he fills the faithful soul with his own fulness. 3d. They receive GLORY. Enter into the joy of your Lord. As ye were partakers of my nature on earth, be ye sharers of my glory in heaven. The joy, the happiness wherewith I am happy, shall be your eternal portion! Oh, what is all we can do, all we can suffer, even the most lingering and cruel martyrdom, in comparison of this unbounded eternal joy!

III. Of the servant who buried his talent.

He that had received one, went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money, ver. 18. 1. See the ingratitude of this servant—His master gave him a talent, capable of being improved to his own present and eternal advantage; but he slights the mercy of his lord

2. See his idleness. Rather than exert himself to improve what he has received, he goes and hides it.

3. See his gross error. He DIGS to hide it—puts himself to more trouble to render the mercy of God to him of none effect, than he should have had in combating and conquering the world, the devil, and the flesh.

4. See his injustice. He takes his master's money and neither improves nor designs to improve it, even while he is living on, and consuming that bounty which would have been sufficient for a faithful servant. How much of this useless lumber is to be found in the church of Christ! But suppose the man be a preacher—what a terrible account will he have to give to God! consuming the provision made for a faithful pastor, and so burying, or misusing his talent, as to do no good to immortal souls!

5. Hear the absurdity of his reasoning. Lord, I knew thee that thou art a hard (or avaricious) man, reaping where thou hast not sown, &c. ver. 24. See this meaning of σκληρος proved by Kypke. The wicked excuse of this faithless servant confuted itself, and condemned him. Nevertheless it is on this very model that sinners in general seek to justify themselves; and the conclusion turns always against them. I knew thee to be a hard man—How awfully deceived, and deeply depraved must that person be, who not only attempts to excuse his follies, but to charge his crimes on GOD himself!

I was afraid—Why? Because thou wert an enemy to thy soul, and to thy God.—I was afraid—of what? that he would require more than he did give. How could this be? Did he not give thee the talent freely, to shew thee his benevolence? and did he not suit it to thy ability, that he might shew thee his wisdom, justice and goodness in not making thee responsible for more than thou couldst improve.

IV. Behold the awful punishment of this faithless servant.

1. He is reproached. Thou wicked and slothful servant! Wicked—in thy heart: slothful—in thy work. THOU knewest that I reap where I sowed not? Thou art condemned by thy own mouth—whose is the unemployed talent? Did I not give thee this? And did I require the improvement of two when I gave thee but one?—Thou knowest I did not.

2. He is stripped of what he possessed. Take—the talent from him. O terrible word—Remove the candlestick from that slothful worldly-minded church—Take away the inspirations of the Holy Spirit, from that lukewarm, Christless Christian; who only lives to resist them and render them of none effect. Dispossess that base, man-pleasing minister of his ministerial gifts; let his silver become brass, and his fine gold, dross.—He loved the present world more than the eternal world, and the praise of men, more than the approbation of God. Take away the talent from him!

3. He is punished with an everlasting separation from God and the glory of his power. Cast forth the unprofitable servant, ver. 30. Let him have nothing but darkness, who refused to walk in the light: let him have nothing but misery—weeping and gnashing of teeth, who has refused the happiness which God provided for him.

Reader, if the careless virgin, and the unprofitable servant against whom no flagrant iniquity is charged, be punished with an outer darkness, with a hell of fire; of what sorer punishment must he be judged worthy, who is a murderer, an wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed:

27 Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.

28 Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents:

29 [a] For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not, shall be taken away, even that which he hath.

Verse 27. With usury.] Συν τοκῳ, with its produce—not usury; for that is unlawful interest, more than the money can properly produce.

Verse 29. Unto every one that hath, shall be given] See on chap. xiii. 12.

Verse 30. Weeping and gnashing of teeth.] See on chap. viii. 12. a note necessary for the illustration of this, and the foregoing parable.

Verse 31. When the Son of man shall come] This must be understood of Christ's coming at the last day, to judge mankind: though all the preceding part of the chapter may be applied also to the destruction of Jerusalem.

Holy Angels] The word αγιοι is omitted by many excellent Manuscripts, Versions and Fathers. Mill and Bengel approve of the omission, and Griesbach has left it out of the text. It is supposed by some that our Lord will have other angels (messengers) with him in that day, besides the holy ones. The evil angels may be in attendance to take as their prey, those who shall be found on his left hand.

The throne of his glory] That glorious throne on which his glorified human nature is seated, at the right hand of the Father.

Verse 32. All nations] Literally, all the nations—all the Gentile world—the Jews are necessarily included, but they were spoken of in a particular manner, in the preceding chapter.

He shall separate them] Set each kind apart by themselves.

As a shepherd divideth, &c.] It does not appear that sheep and goats were ever penned or housed together, though they might feed in the some pasture; yet even this was not done, but in separate flocks: so Virgil, Eclog. vii. v. 2.

Compulerantque greges Corydon et Thyrsis in unum; Thyrsis OVES, Corydon distentas lacte CAPELLAS.

"Thyrsis and Corydon drove their flocks together. Thyrsis his sheep, and Corydon his goats, their udders distended with milk."

These two shepherds had distinct flocks which fed in the same pasture, but separately; and they are only now driven together, for the convenience of the two shepherds, during the time of their musical contest.

Verse 33. He shall set the sheep, &c.] The right hand signifies among the Rabbins, approbation and eminence: the left hand, rejection and disapprobation. Hence in Sohar Cadash it is said, The right hand is given, the left also is given—to the Israelites, and the Gentiles are given paradise and hell—this world, and the world to come." The right and left were emblematical of endless beatitude and endless misery among the Romans. Hence Virgil;

Hic locus est, partes ubi se via findit in ambas:
Dextera, quæ Ditis magni sub mœnia tendit;
Hac iter Elysium nobis; at læva malorum
Exercet pœnas, et ad impia Tartara mittit.
Æn. vi. 540.

Here in two ample roads the way divides,
The right direct, our destin'd journey guides
By Pluto's palace, to the Elysian plains;
The left to Tartarus, where bound in chains Loud howl the damn'd in everlasting pains. PITT.

exalts them to his glory; of the slothful and wicked he disapproves, and casts them into hell.

SHEEP, which have ever been considered as the emblems of mildness, simplicity, patience, and usefulness, represent here the genuine disciples of Christ.

GOATS, which are naturally quarrelsome, lascivious, and excessively ill scented, were considered as the symbols of riotous, profane, and impure men. They here represent all who have lived and died in their sins. See Ezek. xxxiv. 17. and Zech. x. 3.

Verse 34. Ye blessed of my Father] This is the king's address to his followers; and contains the reason why they were found in the practice of all righteousness, and were now brought to this state of glory—they were blessed—came as children, and received the benediction of the Father, and became, and continued to be, members of the heavenly family.

Inherit] The inheritance is only for the children of the family—if sons, then heirs, Gal. iv. 7. but not otherwise. The sons only, shall enjoy the father's estate.

Prepared for you] That is, the kingdom of glory is designed for such as you—you who have received the blessing of the Father, and were holy, harmless, undefiled, and separated from sinners.

From the foundation of the world] It was God's purpose and determination to admit none into his heaven, but those who were made partakers of his holiness. Heb. xii. 14. The Rabbins say, Seven things were created before the foundation of the world. 1. The law, 2. Repentance. 3. Paradise. 4. Hell. 5. The throne of God. 6. The temple; and 7. The name of the Messiah.

Verse 35. I was an-hungred and ye gave me meat] Every thing which is done to a follower of Christ, whether it be good or evil, he considers as done to himself, see ver. 40. Acts ix. 4, 5. Heb. vi. 10. Of all the fruits of the Spirit, none are mentioned here but those that spring from love or mercy; because these give men the nearest conformity to God. Jesus had said, Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy: and he here shews how this promise shall be fulfilled. The Rabbins say, "as often as a poor man presents himself at thy door, the holy blessed God stands at his right hand: if thou give him alms, know that he who stands at his right hand will give thee a reward. But if thou give him not alms, he who stands at his right hand will punish thee." Vaiyikra Rabba, s. 34. fol. 178.

A stranger, and ye took me in] Συνηγαγετε με, ye entertained me: Kypke has fully proved that this is the meaning of the original. Literally, συναγειν signifies to gather together. Strangers are sometimes so destitute as to be ready to perish for lack of food and raiment: a supply of these things, keeps their souls and bodies together, which were about to be separated through lack of the necessaries of life. The word may also allude to a provision made for a poor family, which were scattered abroad, perhaps begging their bread, and who by the ministry of benevolent people are collected, relieved, and put in a way of getting their bread. O blessed work! to be the instruments of preserving human life, and bringing comfort and peace into the habitations of the wretched!

While writing this, I hear the bells loudly ringing in commemoration of the birth day (Nov. 13, 1798) of E. Colson, Esq. a native of this city (Bristol) who spent a long life, and an immense fortune, in relieving the miseries of the distressed. His works still praise him in the gates; his name is revered, and his birth day held sacred among the inhabitants. Who has heard the bells ring in commemoration of the birth of any deceased hero or king? Of so much more value in the sight even of the multitude, is a life of public usefulness than one of worldly glory or secular state. But how high must such a person rank in the sight of God, who when Christ in his representatives was hungry, gave him food, when thirsty, gave him drink, when naked, clothed him, when sick and in prison, visited him? Thou blessed of my Father! come. Thou hast been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, and now thou shalt eternally enjoy the true riches.

The Supreme God is represented in the Bhagvat Geeta as addressing mankind when he had just formed them, thus: "Those who dress their meat but for themselves, eat the bread of sin." Geeta, p. 46.

Verse 36. I was sick, and ye visited me] Relieving the strangers, and visiting the sick, were in high estimation among the Jews. One of their sayings on this head, is worthy of notice: "he who neglects to visit the sick, is like him who has shed blood. That is, as he has neglected when it was in his power, to preserve life, he is as guilty in the sight of the Lord, as he is who has committed murder. See Kypke in loco.

Verse 37. Lord, when saw we thee an-hungred, &c.] This barbarous expression an-hungred, should be banished out of the text, wheresoever it occurs, and the simple word hungry substituted for it. Whatever is done for Christ's sake, is done through Christ's grace; and he who does the work, attributes to Jesus both the will and the power by which the work was done; and seeks and expects the kingdom of heaven not as a reward, but as a gift of pure unmerited mercy. Yet while workers together with his grace, God attributes to them that which they do through his influence; as if they had done it independently of him. God has a right to form what estimate he pleases of the works wrought through himself: but man is never safe except when he attributes all to his Maker.

Verse 40. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren] The meanest follower of Christ is acknowledged by him as his brother! What infinite condescension! Those, whom many would scorn to set with the dogs of their flock, are brothers and sisters of the blessed Jesus, and shall soon be set among the princes of his people.

Verse 41. Depart from me, ye cursed] Or, Ye cursed! depart—These words are the address of the king to the sinners; and contain the reason why they are to be separated from blessedness: Ye are cursed, because ye have sinned, and would not come unto me that ye might have life—No work of piety has proceeded from your hand, because the carnal mind which is enmity against me, reigned in your heart; and ye would not have me to reign over you. Depart! This includes what some have termed the punishment of loss or privation. Ye cannot, ye shall not be united to me—Depart! O terrible word! and yet a worse is to come.

Into everlasting fire] This is the punishment of sense. Ye shall not only be separated from me, but ye shall be tormented, awfully, everlastingly tormented in that place of separation.

Prepared for the devil and his angels] The devil and his angels sinned before the creation of the world, and the place of torment was then prepared for them: it never was designed for human souls: but as the wicked are partakers with the devil and his angels in their iniquities in their rebellion against God, so it is right that they should be sharers with them in their punishment. We see here plainly, why sinners are destroyed, not because there was no salvation for them, but because they neglected to receive good, and do good. As they received not the Christ who was offered to them, so they could not do the work of righteousness which was required of them. They are cursed, because they refused to be blessed; and they are damned, because they refused to be saved.

Verse 42. I was an-hungred, and ye gave me no meat] I put it in your power to do good, and ye would not. A variety of occasions offered themselves to you, but ye neglected them all, so that my blessings in your hands, not being improved, according to my order, became a curse to you.

Verse 43. I was a stranger] If men were sure that Jesus Christ was actually somewhere in the land, in great personal distress, hungry, thirsty, naked, and confined; they would doubtless run unto and relieve him. Now Christ assures us, that a man who is hungry, thirsty, naked, &c. is his representative, and that whatever we do to such an one, he will consider as done to himself; yet this testimony of Christ is not regarded! Well, he will be just when he judges, and righteous when he punishes.

Verse 44. Lord, when saw we thee an-hungred, &c.] It is want of faith, which in general produces hardheartedness to the poor. The man who only sees with eyes of flesh, is never likely to discover Christ in the person of a man, destitute of the necessaries of life. Some pretend not to know the distressed, because they have no desire to relieve them; but we find that this ignorance will not avail them at the bar of God.

I say unto you, [a] Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.

46 And [b] these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.

[a] Prov. 14. 31. & 17. 5. Zech. 2. 8. Acts 9. 5.

[b] Dan. 12. 2. John 5. 29. Rom. 2. 7, &c.

Verse 46. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment] No appeal, no remedy, to all eternity! No end to the punishment of those, whose final impenitence manifests in them, an eternal will and desire to sin. By dying in a settled opposition to God, they cast themselves into a necessity of continuing in an eternal aversion from him.

But some are of opinion that this punishment shall have an end: this is as likely as that the glory of the righteous shall have an end: for the same word is used to express the duration of the punishment, κολασιν αιωνιον, as is used to express the duration of the state of glory: ζωην αιωνιον. I have seen the best things that have been written in favour of the final redemption of damned spirits; but I never saw an answer to the argument against that doctrine, drawn from this verse, but what sound learning and criticism should be ashamed to acknowledge. The original word αιων is certainly to be taken here in its proper grammatical sense, continued being, αιει ων NEVER ENDING. Some have gone a middle way, and think that the wicked shall be annihilated. This, I think, is contrary to the text; if they go into punishment, they continue to exist; for that which ceases to be, ceases to suffer. See the note on Genesis xxi. 33. where the whole subject is explained.

From what our Lord has here said, we may see, that God indispensably requires of every man to bring forth good fruit; and that a fruitless tree shall be inevitably cut down, and cast into the fire. Let it be also remarked, that God does not here impute to his own children, the good works which Jesus Christ did for them. No! Christ's feeding the multitudes in Judea, will not be imputed to them, while persons in their own neighbourhood are perishing through want, and they have wherewithal to relieve them. He gives them a power that they may glorify his name by it, and have, in their own souls the continued satisfaction which arises from succouring the distressed. Let it be further remarked, that Christ does not say here that they have purchased the eternal life by these good deeds. No! for the power to work, and the means of working came both from God. They first had redemption through his blood, and then his Spirit worked in them to will and to do. They were therefore only workers together with him, and could not be said, in any sense of the word, to purchase God's glory, with his own property. But though God works in them, and by them, he does not obey for them. The works of piety and mercy THEY perform under the influence, and by the aid of his grace. Thus God preserves the freedom of the human soul, and secures his own glory at the same time. Let it be remarked, further, that the punishment inflicted on the foolish virgins, the slothful servant, and the cursed who are separated from God, was not because of their personal crimes; but because they were not good, and were not useful in the world. Their lives do not appear to have been stained with crimes,—but they were not adorned with virtues. They are sent to hell because they did no good. They were not renewed in the image of God; and hence did not bring forth fruit to his glory. If these harmless people are sent to perdition; what must the end be of the wicked and profligate!

CHAP. XXVI.

Christ predicts his being betrayed and crucified, 1, 2. The chief priests, Scribes, and elders consult about his death, 3—5. A woman anoints his head at Bethany, at which the disciples are offended, but Christ vindicates her conduct, 6—13. Judas for thirty pieces of silver, engages with the chief priests to betray him, 14—16. He eats a pass-over with his disciples and assures them of his approaching death, and that one of them would betray him, 17—21. On each asking Is it I? Christ asserts that Judas is the traitor, 22—25. Having eaten his last supper he institutes the eucharist to be observed in his church as a memorial of his sacrificial death, 26—29. They sing a hymn, go to the mount of Olives, and he again announces his approaching death and resurrection, 30—32. Peter asserts his resolution to be faithful to his master, and Christ foretells his denial and apostacy, 33—35. He goes to Gethsemane; the transactions there, 36—46. Judas comes with the high priest's mob and betrays him with a kiss, 47—50. Peter cuts off the ear of the high priest's servant; Christ discourses with the multitude, 51—55. The disciples flee, and he is led to Caiaphas, 56, 57. Peter follows at a distance, 58. They seek false witnesses and question our Lord, who declares himself to be the Christ, 59—64. They accuse him of blasphemy, and abuse him, 65—68. Peter's denial and repentance, 69—75.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVI.

Verse 1. When Jesus had finished all these sayings] He began these sayings on Mount Olivet, chap. xxiv. 1. and continued them till he entered into Bethany, whither he was going.

Verse 2. The pass-over] A feast instituted in Egypt, to commemorate the destroying Angel's passing-over the houses of the Israelites, when he slew the first-born of the Egyptians. See the whole of this business largely explained in the Notes on Exod. xii. 1—27. This feast began on the fourteenth day of the first moon, in the first month, Nisan, and it lasted only one day, but it was immediately followed by the days of unleavened bread which were seven, so that the whole lasted eight days, and all the eight days are sometimes called the feast of the pass-over, and sometimes the feast or days of unleavened bread. See Luke xxii. 1—7. The three most signal benefits vouchsafed to the Israelites were, 1. The deliverance from the slavery of Egypt; to commemorate which, they kept the feast of unleavened bread, and the pass-over. 2. The giving of the law; to commemorate which, they kept the feast of weeks. 3. Their sojourning in the wilderness, and entrance into the promised land; to commemorate which, they kept the feast of tabernacles. See these largely explained Exod. xxiii. 14. Lev. xxiii. 2—40.

The Son of man is betrayed (rather delivered up) to be crucified.] With what amazing calmness and precision does our blessed Lord speak of this awful event! What a proof does he here give of his prescience in so correctly predicting it; and of his love in so cheerfully undergoing it! Having instructed his disciples and the Jews by his discourses, edified them by his example, convinced them by his miracles; he now prepares to redeem them by his blood! These two verses have no proper connection with this chapter, and should be joined to the preceding.

Verse 3. Then assembled together the chief priests] that is, during the two days that preceded the pass-over.

The high priest, who was called Caiaphas] Caiaphas succeeded Simon, son of Camith, about A. D. 16, or as Calmet thinks 25. He married the daughter of Annas, who was joined with him in the priesthood. About two years after our Lord's crucifixion, Caiaphas and Pilate were both deposed by VITELLIUS, then governor of Syria, and afterwards emperor. Caiaphas, unable to bear this disgrace, and the stings of his conscience for the murder of Christ, killed himself about A. D. 35. See Joseph. Ant. b. xviii. c. 2—4.

Verse 4. And consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty] The providence of God frustrated their artful machinations, and that event which they wished to conduct with the greatest privacy and silence, was transacted with all possible celebrity amidst the thousands who resorted to Jerusalem at this season, for the keeping of the pass-over. It was, doubtless, of the very first importance, that the crucifixion of Christ, which was preparatory to the most essential achievement of Christianity, viz. his resurrection from the grave, should be exhibited before many witnesses, and in the most open manner, that infidelity might not attempt, in future, to invalidate the evidences of the Christian religion, by alleging that these things were done in a corner. See WAKEFIELD in loco.

Verse 5. Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar] It was usual for the Jews to punish criminals at the public festivals; but in this case they were afraid of an insurrection, as our Lord had become very popular. The providence of God directed it thus, for the reason given in the preceding note.

He who observes a festival on motives purely human, violates it in his heart, and is a hypocrite before God. It is likely they feared the Galileans, as being the countrymen of our Lord, more than they feared the people of Jerusalem.

Verse 6. In Bethany] For a solution of the difficulties in this verse about the time of the anointing, see the observations at the end of this chapter.

Simon the LEPER] This was probably no more than a sirname, as Simon the CANAANITE, chap. x. 4. and Barsabas JUSTUS. Acts i. 23. and several others. Yet it might have been some person that Christ had healed of this disease. See chap. xi. 5.

Verse 7. There came unto him a woman] There is much contention among commentators about the transaction men-

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

8 [a] But when his disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?

9 For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor.

11 [b] For ye have the poor always with you; but [c] me ye have not always.

15 And said unto them, [f] what will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they tioned here, and in John xii. 14. some supposing them to be different, others to be the same. Bishop Newcome's view of the subject I have placed at the end of the chapter.

Some think that the woman, mentioned here, was Mary, the sister of Lazarus; others Mary Magdalene; but against the former opinion it is argued that it is not likely, had this been Mary the sister of Lazarus, that Matthew and Mark would have suppressed her name. Besides, say they, we should not confound the repast which is mentioned here, with that mentioned by John, chap xii. 3. This one was made only two days before the pass-over, and that one six days before: the one was made at the house of Simon the leper, the other at the house of Lazarus, John xii. 1, 2. At this, the woman poured the oil on the head of Christ, at the other Mary anointed Christ's feet with it. See on Mark xiv. 3. and see the notes at the end of this chapter.

Verse 8. His disciples] One of them, viz. Judas. This mode of speaking was common among the Hebrews. So chap. xxvii. 44. the thieves also, i. e. one of them. So chap. xxviii. 17. some doubted, i. e. one, Thomas. See also Gen. viii. 4. Judge. xii. 7. Neh. vi. 7, &c. By a figure called among rhetoricians Enallagé the plural is put for the singular; it is, however, possible that Judas, who made the objection, was followed in the sentiment by the rest of the disciples.

Verse 9. And given to the poor.] How often does charity serve as a cloak for covetousness! God is sometimes robbed of his right under the pretence of devoting what is withheld, to some charitable purpose, to which there was no intention ever to give it.

Verse 10 Why trouble ye the woman?] Or, Why do ye put the woman to pain? See this sense of κοπος παρεχειν established by Kypke in loco. A generous mind is ever pained when it is denied the opportunity of doing good, or when its proffered kindness is refused.

Verse 11. Ye have the poor always with you] And consequently, have the opportunity of doing them good at any time; but me ye have not always, my bodily presence is about to be removed from you for ever. The woman, under a presentiment of my death, is preparing me for my burial.

12. She did it for my burial.] Or, She hath done it to embalm me—ενταφιασαι με. The Septuagint use ενταφιαστης for the person whose office it was to embalm, Gen. l. 2. and ενταφιαζω for the Hebrew חנט which signifies to prepare with spices or aromatics, ver. 3. Our Lord took this opportunity to tell them once more, that he was shortly to die.

Verse 13. Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached] Another remarkable proof of the prescience of Christ. Such a matter as this, humanly speaking, depended on mere fortuitous circumstances, yet so has God disposed matters that the thing has continued, hitherto, as firm and regular as the ordinances of heaven.

For a memorial of her.] As embalming preserves the body from corruption, and she has done this good work to embalm and preserve this body; so will I order every thing concerning this transaction to be carefully recorded, to preserve her memory to the latest ages. The actions which the world blames through the spirit of envy, covetousness, or malice, God takes delight to distinguish and record.

Verse 14. Then—Judas] After this supper at Bethany, Judas returned to Jerusalem, and made his contract with the chief priests.

A stater was the same as the shekel, and worth about 3*s* English money, according to Dean Prideaux: a goodly price for the saviour of the world! thirty staters, about 4*l.* 10*s.* the common price for the meanest slave! covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.

price for a slave, whether good or bad, male or female. See Tract Erachin, fol. 14. and Shekalim, cap. 1. Verse 16. He sought opportunity] Ευκαιριαν, a convenient or fit opportunity. Men seldom leave a crime imperfect: when once sin is conceived, it meets, in general, with few obstacles, till it brings forth death. How deceitful, how deeply damning is the love of money! Well might a heathen exclaim, while contemplating the grave of a person who was murdered for the sake of his wealth—

AURI SACRA FAMES? VIRG. Æn. iii. 56.

"O! cursed lust of gold! what wilt thou not compel the human heart to perpetrate?" Judas is deservedly considered as one of the most infamous of men, his conduct base beyond description, and his motives vile. But how many, since his time, have walked in the same way! How many, for the sake of worldly wealth, have renounced the religion of their Lord and Master, and sold Jesus, and their interest in heaven for a short lived portion of secular good! From John xii. 6. we learn that Judas, who was treasurer to our Lord and his disciples, (for he carried the bag,) was a thief, and frequently purloined a portion of what was given for the support of this holy family. Being disappointed of the prey he hoped to have from the sale of the precious ointment, ver. 9. he sold his Master to make up the sum. A thorough Jew!

Verse 17. Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread] As the feast of unleavened bread did not begin till the day after the pass-over, the fifteenth day of the month, Lev. xxiii. 5, 6. Numb. xxviii. 16, 17. this could not have been, properly, the first day of that feast; but as the Jews began to eat unleavened bread on the fourteenth, Exod. xii. 18. this day was often termed the first of unleavened bread. The Evangelists use it in this sense, and call even the paschal day by this name. See Mark xiv. 12. Luke xxii. 7.

Where wilt thou that we prepare] How astonishing is this, that HE who created all things, whether visible, or invisible, and by whom all things were upheld, should so empty himself, as not to be proprietor of a single house in his whole creation, to eat the last pass-over with his disciples! This is certainly a mystery, and so, less or more, is every thing that God does. But how inveterate and destructive must the nature of sin be, when such emptying and humiliation were necessary to its destruction! It is worthy of note what the Talmudists say, that the inhabitants of Jerusalem did not let out their houses to those who came to the annual feasts; but afforded all accommodations of this kind gratis. A man might therefore go and request the use of any room, on such an occasion, which was as yet unoccupied. The earthen jug, and the skin of the sacrifice were left with the host. See Lightfoot, vol. ii. p. 21.

Verse 18. Go—to such a man] Τον δεινα. It is probable that this means some person with whom Christ was well acquainted, and who was known to the disciples. Grotius observes that the Greeks use this form, when they mean some particular person who is so well known that there is no need to specify him by name. The circumstances are more particularly marked in Luke xxii. 8, &c.

My time is at hand] That is, the time of my crucifixion. Kypke has largely shewn that καιρος is often used among the Greeks for affliction and calamity. It might be rendered here the time of my crucifixion is at hand.

Verse 19. And the disciples did] The disciples that were sent on this errand were Peter and John. See Luke xxii. 9.

They made ready the pass-over] That is, they provided the lamb, &c. which were appointed by the law for this solemnity. Mr. Wakefield justly observes, "that the Jews considered the pass-over as a sacrificial rite; Josephus calls it θυσιαν A SACRIFICE; and Trypho, in Justin Martyr, speaks of προβατον του πασχα θυειν, SACRIFICING the pascal lamb. But what comes nearer to the point is this, that Maimonides, one of the most eminent of the Jewish Rabbins, has a particular treatise on the paschal sacrifice, and throughout that piece, speaks of the lamb as a victim, and of the solemnity itself as a sacrifice. And R. Bechai, in his commentary on Lev. ii. 11. says, that the paschal sacrifice was of a piacular nature, in order to expiate the guilt contracted by the idolatrous practices of the Israelites in Egypt." It was highly necessary that this should be considered as an expiatory sacrifice, as it typified that lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world. For much more on this important subject than can, with propriety, be introduced into these notes, see a Discourse on the Eucharist, lately published by the Author of this work.

Verse 20. Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve.] It is a common opinion that our Lord ate the pass-over some hours before the Jews ate it; for the Jews, according to custom, ate theirs at the end of the fourteenth day, but Christ ate his the preceding even, which was the beginning of the same sixth day, or Friday; the Jews begin their day at sunsetting, we at midnight. Thus Christ ate the passover on the same day with the Jews, but not on the same hour. Christ kept this pass-over the begining of the fourteenth day, the precise day and hour in which the Jews had eaten their first pass-over in Egypt. See Exod. xii. 6—12. And in the same part of the same day in which the Jews had sacrificed their first paschal lamb, viz. between the two evenings, about the ninth hour or 3 o'clock, Jesus Christ our pass-over was sacrificed for us: for it was at this hour that he yielded up his last breath; and then it was that the sacrifice being completed, Jesus said, IT IS FINISHED. See Exod. xii. 6, &c. and Deut. xvi. 6, &c. See on John xviii. 28. and the Treatise on the Eucharist, referred to on ver. 19. and see the notes on the 26th and following verses.

Verse 21. One of you shall betray me.] Or will deliver me up. Judas had already betrayed him, ver. 15. and he was now about to deliver him into the hands of the chief priests, according to the agreement he had made with them.

Verse 22. They were exceeding sorrowful] That is, the eleven who were innocent; and the hypocritical traitor, Judas, endeavoured to put on the same appearance of sorrow. Strange! Did he not know that Christ knew the secrets of his soul? Or had his love of money so far blinded him, as to render him incapable of discerning even this, with which he had been before so well acquainted?

Verse 23. He that dippeth his hand] As the Jews ate the pass-over, a whole family together, it was not convenient for them all to dip their bread in the same dish; they therefore had several little dishes or plates, in which was the juice of the bitter herbs, mentioned Exod. xii. 8. on different parts of the table; and those who were nigh one of these, dipped their bread in it. As Judas is represented as dipping in the same dish with Christ, it shews he was either near or opposite to him. If this man's heart had not been hardened, and his conscience seared beyond all precedent, by the deceitfulness of his sin, would he have shewed his face in this sacred assembly, or have thus put the seal to his own perdition, by eating of this sacrificial lamb? Is it possible that he could feel no compunction? Alas! having delivered himself up into the hands of the Devil, he was capable of delivering up his Master into the hands of the chief priests: and thus, when men are completely hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, they can outwardly perform the most solemn acts of devotion, without feeling any sort of inward concern about the matter.

Verse 24. The Son of man goeth] That is, is about to die. Going, going away, departing, &c. are frequently used in the best Greek and Latin writers, for death or dying. The same words are often used in the Scriptures in the same sense.

It had been good for that man] Can this be said of any sinner if there be any redemption from hell's torments? If a sinner, should suffer millions of millions of years in them, and get out at last to the enjoyment of heaven; then it was well for him that he had been born, for still he has an eternity of blessedness before him. Can the doctrine of the non-eternity of hell's torments stand in the presence of this saying? Or can the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked consist with this declaration? It would have been well for that man if he had never been born; then he must be in some state of conscious existence, as non-existence is said to be better than that state in which he is now found.—It was common for the Jews to say of any flagrant transgressor, It would have been better for him had he never been born. See several examples in Schoetgen.

Verse 25. Judas—said, Master, is it I] What excessive impudence! He knew, in his conscience, that he had already betrayed his master, and was waiting now for the servants of the chief priests, that he might deliver him into their hands, and yet he says, (hoping that he had transacted his business so privately, that it had not yet transpired) Master, is it I? It is worthy of remark, that each of the other disciples said and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, Thou hast said.

Verse 26. Jesus took bread] This is the first institution of what is termed the LORD'S SUPPER. To every part of this ceremony, as here mentioned, the utmost attention should be paid.

To do this, in the most effectual manner, I think it necessary to set down the text of the three Evangelists, who have transmitted the whole account, collated with that part of St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, which speaks of the same subject, and which, he assures us, he received by divine revelation. It may seem strange, that although John (chap. xiii. v. 1—38) mentions all the circumstances preceding the holy supper, and, from chap. xiv. 1—36. the circumstances which succeeded the breaking of the bread, and in chapters xv. xvi. and xvii. the discourse which followed the administration of the cup; yet he takes no notice of the divine institution at all. This is generally accounted for on his knowledge of what the other three Evangelists had written; and on his conviction, that their relation was true, and needed no additional confirmation, as the matter was amply established by the conjoint testimony of three such respectable witnesses.

MATT. xxvi.	MARK xiv.	LUKE xxii.	1 COR. xi.
V. 26. And as they were eating, Jesus took bread and blessed it(ευλογησας and blessed God) and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my body.	V. 22. And as they did eat, Jesus took bread and blessed (ευλογησας, blessed God) and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat, this is my body.	V. 19. And he took bread and gave thanks, (ευχαριστησας, i. e. to God) and brake it, and gave unto them, saying: This is my body, which is given for you: This do in remembrance of me.	V. 23. The Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread; V. 24. And when he had given thanks (και ευχαριστησας, i. e. to God) he brake it, and said, Take, eat, this is my body, which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me.

After giving the bread, the discourse related (John xiv. 1—31. inclusive) is supposed by Bishop Newcome to have been delivered by our Lord, for the comfort and support of his disciples under their present and approaching trials.

V. 27. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, (ευχαριστησας,) and gave it to them, saying: Drink ye all of it. V. 28. For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for you and for many for the remission of sins. V. 29. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom.	V. 23. And he took the cup; and when he had given thanks, (ευχαριστησας) he gave it to them; and they all drank of it. V. 24. And he said unto them, This is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many. V. 25. Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.	V. 20. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying: This cup is the New Testament in my blood, which is shed for you.	V. 25. After the same manner also, he took the cup, when he had supped, saying: This cup is the New Testament in my blood: this do ye as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.

After this our Lord resumes that discourse which is found in the 15th, 16th, and 17th chapters of John, beginning with the last verse of chap. xiv. Arise, let us go hence. Then succeed the following words, which conclude the whole ceremony.

V. 30. And when they had sung a hymn, they went out into the Mount of Olives.	V. 26. And when they had sung a hymn, they went out into the Mount of Olives.	V. 39. And he came out, and went as he was wont to the Mount of Olives. And his disciples also followed him.	JOHN xiv. V. 1. When Jesus had spoken these words, he went forth with his disciples over the brook Kedron.

From the preceding harmonized view of this important transaction, as described by three EVANGELISTS and one APOSTLE, we see the first institution, nature, and design of what has been since called THE LORD'S SUPPER. To every circumstance, as set down here, and the mode of expression by which such circumstances are described, we should pay the deepest attention.

Verse 26. As they were eating] Either an ordinary supper or the paschal lamb, as some think.—See the observations at the end of this chapter.

Jesus took bread] Of what kind? Unleavened bread, certainly, because there was no other kind to be had in all Judea at this time; for this was the first day of unleavened bread, (ver. 17.) i. e. the 14th of the month Nisan, when the Jews, according to the command of God, (Exod. xii. 15—20. xxiii. 15. and xxxiv. 25.) were to purge away all leaven from their houses; for he who sacrificed the pass-over, having leaven in his dwelling, was considered to be such a transgressor of the divine law as could no longer be tolerated among the people of God; and therefore, was to be cut off from the congregation of Israel. Leo of Modena, who has written a very sensible treatise on the customs of the Jews, observes, "That so strictly do some of the Jews observe the precept concerning the removal of all leaven from their houses, during the celebration of the paschal solemnity, that they either provide vessels entirely new for baking, or else have a set for the purpose, which are dedicated solely to the service of the pass-over, and never brought out on any other occasion."

To this divinely instituted custom of removing all leaven previously to the paschal solemnity, St. Paul evidently alludes, 1 Cor. v. 6, 7, 8. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ, our passover, is sacrificed for us; therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the UNLEAVENED bread of sincerity and truth.

Now, if any respect should be paid to the primitive institution, in the celebration of this divine ordinance, then, unleavened, unyeasted bread should be used. In every sign or type, the thing signifying or pointing out that which is beyond itself, should either have certain properties, or be accompanied with certain circumstances, as expressive as possible of the thing signified. Bread, simply considered in itself, may be an emblem apt enough of the body of our Lord Jesus, which was given for us; but the design of God was evidently that it should not only point out this, but also the disposition required in those who should celebrate both the antetype and the type; and this the apostle explains to be sincerity and truth, the reverse of malice and wickedness. The very taste of the bread was instructive: it pointed out to every communicant, that he who came to the table of God with malice or ill-will against any soul of man, or with wickedness, a profligate or sinful life, might expect to eat and drink judgment to himself, as not discerning that the Lord's body was sacrificed for this very purpose, that all sin might be destroyed; and that sincerity, ειλικρινεια, such purity as the clearest light can discern no stain in, might be diffused through the whole soul; and that truth, the law of righteousness and true holiness, might regulate and guide all the actions of life. Had the bread used on these occasions been of the common kind, it would have been perfectly unfit, or improper, to have communicated these uncommon significations; and, as it was seldom used, its rare occurrence would make the emblematical representation more deeply impressive; and the sign, and the thing signified, have their due correspondence and influence.

These circumstances considered, will it not appear that the use of common bread in the sacrament of the Lord's supper is highly improper? He who can say, "This is a matter of no importance," may say, with equal propriety, the bread itself is of no importance; and another may say, the wine is of no importance; and a third may say, "neither the bread nor wine is any thing, but as they lead to spiritual references; and the spiritual reference being once understood, the signs are useless." Thus we may, through affected spirituality, refine away the whole ordinance of God; and with the letter and form of religion, abolish religion itself.—Many have already acted in this way, not only to their loss, but to their ruin, by shewing how profoundly wise they are above what is written. Let those, therefore, who consider that man shall live by every word which proceeds from the mouth of God, and who are conscientiously solicitous that each divine institution be not only preserved, but observed in all its original integrity, attend to this circumstance. The Lutheran church makes use of unleavened bread to the present day.

And blessed it] Both St. Matthew and St. Mark use the word ευλογησας, blessed, instead of ευχαριστησας, gave thanks, which is the word used by St. Luke and St. Paul. But instead of ευλογησας, blessed ευχαριστησας, gave thanks, is the reading of ten MSS. in uncial characters, of the Dublin Codex rescriptus, published by Dr. Barret, and of more than one hundred others, of the greatest respectability. This is the reading also of the Syriac, and Arabic, and is confirmed by several of the primitive Fathers. The terms, in this case, are nearly of the same import, as both blessing and giving thanks were used on these occasions. But what was it that our Lord blessed? Not the bread, though many think the contrary, being deceived by the word IT, which is improperly supplied in our version. In all the four places referred to above, whether the word blessed or gave thanks is used, it refers not to the bread, but to God, the dispenser of every good. Our Lord here conforms himself to that constant Jewish custom, viz. of acknowledging God as the author of every good and perfect gift, by giving thanks on taking the bread, and taking the cup, at their ordinary meals. For every Jew was forbidden to eat, drink, or use any of God's creatures without rendering him thanks; and he who acted contrary to this command, was considered as a person who was guilty of sacrilege. From this custom we have derived the decent and laudable one of saying grace, (gratias thanks) before and after meat. The Jewish form of blessing, and probably that which our Lord used on this occasion, none of my readers will be displeased to find here though it has been mentioned once before: on taking the bread, they say: ברוך אתה אלהינו מלך העולם המוצא לחם מן הארץ Baruch atta Elohinoo, Melech, haôlam, ha motse Lechem min haarets.

Blessed be thou our God, king of the universe, who bringest forth bread out of the earth!

Likewise on taking the cup, they say:

ברוך אלהינו מלך העולם בורא פרי הגפן: Baruch Elohinoo, Melech, haôlam, Boré perey haggephen.

Blessed be our God the king of the universe, the creator of the fruit of the vine!

The Mohammedans copy their example, constantly saying before and after meat:

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم

Bismillahi arahmani arraheemi.

In the name of God, the most merciful, the most compassionate.

No blessing therefore of the elements is here intended; they were already blessed, in being sent as a gift of mercy from the bountiful Lord; but GOD the sender is blessed, because of the liberal provision he has made for his worthless creatures. Blessing and touching the bread, are merely Popish ceremonies, unauthorized either by Scripture, or the practice of the pure church of God; necessary of course to them who pretend to transmute, by a kind of spiritual incantation, the bread and wine into the real body and blood of Jesus Christ; a measure, the grossest in folly and most stupid in nonsense, to which God in judgment ever abandoned the fallen spirit of man.

And brake it] We often read in the Scriptures of breaking bread, but never of cutting it. The Jewish people had nothing similar to our high raised loaf; their bread was made broad and thin, and was consequently very brittle, and to divide it, there was no need of a knife.

The breaking of the bread, I consider essential to the proper performance of this solemn and significant ceremony; because this act was designed by our Lord to shadow forth the wounding, piercing, and breaking of his body upon the cross; and as all this was essentially necessary to the making a full atonement for the sin of the world; so it is of vast importance that this apparently little circumstance, the breaking of the bread, should be carefully attended to, that the godly communicant may have every necessary assistance to enable him to discern the Lord's body, while engaged in this most important and divine of all God's ordinances. But who does not see that one small cube of fermented, i. e. leavened bread, previously divided from the mass with a knife, and separated by the fingers of the minister, can never answer the end of the institution, either as to the matter of the bread, or the mode of dividing it? Man is naturally a dull and heedless creature, especially in spiritual things, and has need of the utmost assistance of his senses, in union with those expressive rites and ceremonies which the Holy Scripture, not tradition, has sanctioned, in order to enable him to arrive at spiritual things, through the medium of earthly similitudes.

And gave it to the disciples] Not only the breaking, but also the DISTRIBUTION of the bread are necessary parts of this rite. In the Romish church, the bread is not broken nor delivered to the people, that THEY may take and eat; but the consecrated wafer is put upon their tongue by the priest, and it is generally understood by the communicants, that they should not masticate, but swallow it whole.

"That the breaking of this bread to be distributed," says Dr. Whitby, "is a necessary part of this rite, is evident, first by the continual mention of it by St. Paul and all the Evangelists, when they speak of the institution of this sacrament, which shews it to be a necessary part of it. 2dly, Christ says, Take, eat, this is my body BROKEN for you, 1 Cor. xi. 24. But when the elements are not broken, it can be no more said, This is my body broken for you, than where the elements are not given. 3dly, Our Lord said, Do this in remembrance of me, i. e. "Eat this bread broken, in remembrance of my body broken on the cross:" now, where no body broken is distributed, there, nothing can be eaten in memorial of his broken body. Lastly, the Apostle, by saying, The bread which we BREAK, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? sufficiently informs us, that the eating of his broken body is necessary to that end, 1 Cor. x. 10. Hence it was, that this rite of distributing bread broken, continued for a thousand years; and was, at Humbertus testifies, observed in the Roman church in the eleventh century." WHITBY in loco. At present, the opposite is as boldly practised, as if the real scriptural rite had never been observed in the church of Christ.

This is my body.] Here it must be observed, that Christ had nothing in his hands at this time, but part of that unleavened bread which he and his disciples had been eating at supper, and therefore he could mean no more than this, viz. that the bread which he was now breaking represented his body, which, in the course of a few hours, was to be crucified for them. Common sense, unsophisticated with superstition and erroneous creeds; and reason, unawed by the secular sword of sovereign authority, could not possibly take any other meaning than this plain, consistent, and rational one, out of these words. "But," says a false and absurd creed, "Jesus meant, when he said HOC EST CORPUS MEUM, this is my body, and HIC EST CALIX SANGUINIS MEI, this is the chalice of my blood, that the bread and wine were substantially changed into his body, including flesh, blood, bones, yea, the whole Christ, in his immaculate humanity and adorable divinity!" And for denying this, what rivers of righteous blood have been shed by state persecutions and by religious wars! Well it may be asked, "Can any man of sense believe, that when Christ took up that bread and broke it, that it was his own body which he held in his own hands, and which himself broke to pieces, and which he and his disciples ate?" He who can believe such a congeries of absurdities, cannot be said to be a volunteer in faith; for it is evident, the man can neither have faith nor reason, as to this subject.

Let it be observed, if any thing further is necessary on this point, that the Paschal Lamb is called the Pass-over, because it represented the destroying angel's passing over the children of Israel, while he slew the first-born of the Egyptians: and our Lord and his disciples call this lamb the Pass-over, several times in this chapter; by which it is demonstrably evident, that they could mean no more than that the lamb sacrificed on this occasion was a memorial of, and REPRESENTED the means used for the preservation of the Israelites from the blast of the destroying angel.

Besides, our Lord did not say, hoc est corpus meum, (this is my body) as he did not speak in the Latin tongue; though as much stress has been laid upon this quotation from the Vulgate, as if the original of the three Evangelists had been written in the Latin language. Had he spoken in Latin, following the idiom of the Vulgate, he would have said, Panis hic corpus meum significat, or, Symbolum est corporis mei:—hoc poculum sanguinem meum representat, or, symbolum est sanguinis mei:—this bread signifies my body: this cup represents my blood. But let it be observed, that in the Hebrew, Chaldee, and Chaldeo-Syriac languages, there is no term which expresses to mean, signify, denote, though both the Greek and Latin abound with them: hence the Hebrews use a figure, and say, it is, for, it signifies. So Gen. xli. 26, 27. The seven kine ARE (i. e. represent) seven years. This IS (represents) the bread of affliction which our fathers ate in the land of Egypt. Dan. vii. 24. The ten horns ARE (i. e. signify) ten kings. They drank of the spiritual Rock which followed them, and the Rock WAS (represented) Christ. 1 Cor. x. 4. And following this Hebrew idiom, though the work is written in Greek, we find in Rev. i. 20. The seven stars ARE (represent) the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks ARE (represent) the seven churches. The same form of speech is used in a variety of places in the new Testament, where this sense must necessarily be given to the word. Matt. xiii. 38, 39. The field IS (represents) the world: the good seed ARE (represent or signify) the children of the kingdom: the tares ARE (signify) the children of the wicked one. The enemy IS (signifies) the devil: the harvest IS (represents) the end of the world: the reapers ARE (i. e. signify) the angels. Luke viii. 9. What might this parable BE? Τις ΕΙΗ η παραβολη αυτη;—What does this parable SIGNIFY? John vii. 36. Τις ΕΣΤΙΝ ουτος ο λογος; What is the SIGNIFICATION of this saying? John x. 6. They understood not what things they WERE, τινα ΗΝ, what was the SIGNIFICATION of the things he had spoken to them. Acts x. 17. Τι αν ΕΙΗ το οραμα, what this vision MIGHT BE; properly rendered by our translators, what this vision should MEAN. Gal. iv. 24. For these ARE the two covenants, αυται γαρ ΕΙΣΙΝ αι δυο διαθηκαι, these SIGNIFY the two covenants. Luke xv. 26. He asked, τι ΕΙΗ ταυτα, what these things MEANT. See also chap. xviii. 36. After such unequivocal testimony from the Sacred Writings, can any person doubt that, This bread IS my body, has any other meaning than, This bread REPRESENTS my body.

The Latins use the verb sum, in all its forms, with a similar latitude of meaning. So, ESSE oneri ferendo, he is ABLE to bear the burthen: benè ESSE, to LIVE sumptuously: male ESSE, to LIVE miserably: rectè ESSE, to ENJOY good health: EST mihi fistula, I POSSESS a flute: EST hodie in rebus, he now ENJOYS a plentiful fortune: EST mihi namque domi pater, I HAVE a father at home, &c. ESSE solvendo, to be ABLE to pay; FUIMUS Troes, FUIT Ilium; the Trojans are EXTINCT, Troy is NO MORE.

In Greek also, and Hebrew, it often signifies to live, to die, to be killed. Ουκ ΕΙΜΙ, I am DEAD, or a dead man. Matt. ii. 18. Rachel weeping for her children, οτι ουκ ΕΙΣΙ, because they WERE MURDERED. Gen. xlii. 36. Joseph IS not, יוסף אינני Yoseph einennu, Ιωσηφ ουκ ΕΣΤΙΝ, Sep. Joseph is DEVOURED by a WILD BEAST. Rom. iv. 17. Calling the things that ARE not, as if they were ALIVE. So Plutarch in Laconicis: "This shield thy father always preserved; preserve thou it, or may thou not BE:" Η μη ΕΣΟ, may thou PERISH. ΟΥΚ ΟΝΤΕΣ νομοι, ABROGATED laws. ΕΙΜΙ εν εμοι, I POSSESS a sound understanding. Εις πατερα υμιν ΕΣΟΜΑΙ, I will PERFORM the PART of a father to you. ΕΙΜΙ της πολεως της δε, I AM an INHABITANT of that city. 1 Tim. i. 7. Desiring to BE teachers of the law, θελοντες ΕΙΝΑΙ νομοδιδασκαλοι, desiring to be REPUTED teachers of the law, i. e. ABLE divines. Τα ΟΝΤΑ, the things that ARE, i. e. NOBLE and HONOURABLE men: τα μη ΟΝΤΑ, the things that are not, viz. the VULGAR, or those of IGNOBLE BIRTH.

Tertullian seems to have had a correct notion of those words of our Lord, Acceptum panem, et distributum discipulis, corpus illum suum fecit, HOC EST CORPUS MEUM dicendo, id est, FIGURA corporis mei. Advers. Marc. l. v. c. 40. "Having taken the bread, and distributed that body to his disciples, he made it his body by saying This is my body, i. e. a FIGURE of my body."

That our Lord neither spoke in Greek nor Latin, on this occasion, needs no proof. It was, most probably, in what was formerly called the Chaldaic, now the Syriac, that our Lord conversed with his disciples. Through the providence of God, we have complete versions of the Gospels in this language; and in them it is likely we have the precise words spoken by our Lord on this occasion. In Matt. xxvi. 26 and 27. the words in the Syriac version are, ܗܢܘ ܦܓܪܝ hanau pagree, this is my body, ܗܢܘ ܕܡܝ hanau demee, this is my blood, of which forms of speech the Greek is a verbal translation; nor would any man, even in the present day, speaking in the same language, use, among the people to whom it was vernacular, other terms than the above to express, This represents my body, and this represents my blood.

But this form of speech is common, even in our own language, though we have terms enow to fill up the ellipsis. Suppose a man entering into a museum, enriched with the remains of ancient Greek sculpture; his eyes are attracted by a number of curious busts; and on enquiring what they are, he learns, this IS Socrates, that Plato, a third Homer; others Hesiod, Horace, Virgil, Demosthenes, Cicero, Herodotus, Livy, Cæsar, Nero, Vespasian, &c. Is he deceived by this information? Not at all: he knows well that the busts he sees are not the identical persons of those ancient philosophers, poets, orators, historians, and emperors, but only REPRESENT-ATIONS of their persons in sculpture, between which and the originals there is as essential a difference as between a human body, instinct with all the principles of rational vitality, and a block of marble. When, therefore, Christ took up a piece of bread, brake it, and said, This IS my body, who but the most stupid of mortals could imagine that he was, at the same time, handling and breaking his own body! Would not any person, of plain common sense, see as great a difference between the man Christ Jesus and the piece of bread, as between the block of marble and the philosopher it represented, in the case referred to above? The truth is, there is scarcely a more common form of speech in any language, than, This IS, for this REPRESENTS or SIGNIFIES. And as our Lord refers, in the whole of this transaction, to the ordinance of the Pass-over, we may consider him as saying, "This bread is now my body, in that sense in which the Paschal Lamb has been my body hitherto; and this cup is my blood of the New Testament, in the same sense as the blood of bulls and goats has been my blood under the Old: Exod. xxiv. Heb. ix. That is, The Paschal Lamb and the sprinkling of blood, represented my sacrifice to the present time: this bread and this wine shall represent my body and blood through all future ages: therefore, Do this in remembrance of me."

St. Luke and St. Paul add a circumstance here which is not noticed either by St. Matthew or St. Mark. After, this is my body, the former adds, which is given for you; the latter, which is broken for you: the sense of which is, "As God has in his bountiful providence given you bread for the sustenance of your lives, so in his infinite grace, he has given you my body to save your souls unto life eternal. But as this bread must be broken and masticated, in order to its becoming proper nourishment, so my body must be broken, i. e. crucified for you, before it can be the bread of life to your souls. As therefore your life depends on the bread which God's bounty has provided for your bodies, so your eternal life depends on the sacrifice of my body on the cross for your souls." Besides, there is here an allusion to the offering of sacrifices—an innocent creature was brought to the altar of God, and its blood (the life of the beast) was poured out for, or in behalf of the person who brought it. Thus Christ says, alluding to the sacrifice of the paschal lamb, This is my body, το υπερ υμων διδομενον, which IS GIVEN in your stead, or in your behalf; a free GIFT from God's endless mercy for the salvation of your souls. This is my body, το υπερ υμων κλωμενον, (1 Cor. xi. 24.) which is broken—sacrificed in your stead; as without the breaking (piercing) of the body, and spilling of the blood, there was no remission.

In this solemn transaction we must weigh every word, as there is none without its appropriate and deeply emphatic meaning. So it is written Ephes. v. 2. Christ hath loved us, and given himself, υπερ ημων, on our account, or in our stead, an offering and a SACRIFICE (θυσια) to God for a sweet-smelling savour, that, as in the sacrifice offered by Noah, Gen. viii. 21. (to which the Apostle evidently alludes) from which it is said, The Lord smelled a sweet savour, ריח הניחח riach hanichoach, a savour of rest, so that he became appeased towards the earth, and determined that there should no more be a flood to destroy it; in like manner, in the offering and sacrifice of Christ for us, God is appeased towards the human race; and has in consequence decreed, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life.

Verse 27. And he took the cup] Μετα το δειπνησαι, after having supped, Luke xxii. 20. and 1 Cor. xi. 25. Whether the supper was on the paschal lamb, or whether it was a common or ordinary meal, I shall not wait here to enquire: see at the end of this chapter. In the parallel place in Luke xxii. we find our Lord taking the cup, ver. 17. and again ver. 19. by the former of which was probably meant the cup of blessing, כוס הברכה kos haberakah, which the master of a family took, and after blessing God, gave to each of his guests by way of welcome: but this second taking the cup, is to be understood as belonging peculiarly to the very important rite, which he was now instituting, and on which he lays a very remarkable stress. With respect to the bread, he had before simply said, Take, eat, this is my body; but concerning the cup, he says, drink ye all of this: for as this pointed out the very essence of the institution, viz. the blood of atonement, it was necessary that each should have a particular application of it, therefore he says, Drink ye ALL of THIS. By this we are taught that the cup is essential to the sacrament of the Lord's supper; so that they who deny the cup to the people, sin against God's institution; and they who receive not the cup, are not partakers of the body and blood of Christ. If either could without mortal prejudice be omitted, it might be the bread; but the cup, as pointing out the blood poured out, i. e. the life, by which alone the great sacrificial act is performed, and remission of sins procured, is absolutely indispensable. On this ground it is demonstrable, that there is not a priest under heaven, who denies the cup to the people, that can be said to celebrate the Lord's supper at all; nor is there one of their votaries that ever received the holy sacrament. All pretension to this is an absolute farce, so long as the cup, the emblem of the atoning blood, is denied. How strange is, it that the very men who plead so much for the bare literal meaning of this is my body, in the preceding verse, should deny all meaning to drink YE ALL of this cup, in this verse! And though Christ has in the most positive manner enjoined it, they will not permit one of the laity to taste it! Oh! what a thing is man! a constant contradiction to reason and to himself.

I have just said, that our blessed Lord lays remarkable stress on the administration of the cup, and on that which himself assures, us is represented by it. As it is peculiarly emphatic, I beg leave to set down the original text, which the critical reader will do well minutely to examine; Τουτο γαρ εστι ΤΟ αιμα μου ΤΟ της καινης διαθηκης, ΤΟ περι πολλων εκχυνομενον εις αφεσιν αμαρτιων. The following literal translation and paraphrase do not exceed its meaning:

For, THIS is THAT blood of mine, which was pointed out by all the sacrifices under the Jewish law, and particularly by the shedding and sprinkling of the blood of the paschal lamb. THAT blood of the sacrifice slain for the ratification of the new covenant. THE blood ready to be poured out for the multitudes, the whole Gentile world as well as the Jews, for the taking away of sins; sin, whether original or actual, in all its power and guilt, in all its internal energy and pollution.

Verse. 28. For this is my blood of the New Testament] This is the reading both here and in St. Mark: but St. Luke and St. Paul say, This cup is the New Testament in my blood. This passage has been strangely mistaken: by New Testament many understand nothing more than the book commonly known by this name, containing the four Gospels, Acts of the Apostles, apostolical Epistles, and book of the Revelation; and they think that the cup of the New Testament, means no more than merely that cup which the book called the New Testament enjoins in the sacrament of the Lord's supper. As this is the case, it is highly necessary that this term should be explained. The original, Η Καινη Διαθηκη, which we translate, The New Testament, and which is the general title of all the contents of the book already described, simply means the new COVENANT. Covenant, from con, together, and venio, I come, signifies an agreement, contract, or compact between two parties, by which both are mutually bound to do certain things, on certain conditions and penalties. It answers to the Hebrew ברית berith, which often signifies not only the covenant or agreement, but also the sacrifice which was slain on the occasion, by the blood of which the covenant was ratified; and the contracting parties professed to subject themselves to such a death as that of the victim, in case of violating their engagements. An oath of this kind, on slaying the covenant sacrifice, was usual in ancient times: so in Homer, when a covenant was made between the Greeks and the Trojans, and the throats of lambs were cut, and their blood poured out, the following form of adjuration was used by the contracting parties:

Ζευ κυδιστε, μεγιστε, και αθανατοι θεοι αλλοι,
Οπποτεροι πρωτεροι υπερ ορκια πημηνειαν,
Ωδε σφ' εγκεφαλος χαμαδις ρεοι, ως οδε οινος,
Αυτων, και τεκεων. αλοχοι δ' αλλοισι μιγειεν.

All glorious Jove, and ye, the Powers of heaven!
Whoso shall violate this contract first,
So be their blood, their children's, and their own,
Pour'd out, as this libation, on the ground:
And let their wives bring forth to other men!

ILIAD. l. iii. v. 298—301.

Our blessed Saviour is evidently called the Διαθηκη, ברית berith, or covenant sacrifice, Isai. xlii. 6. xlix. 8. Zech. ix. 11. And to those Scriptures he appears to allude, as in them the Lord promises to give him for a covenant (sacrifice) to the Gentiles, and to send forth, by the blood of this covenant (victim) the prisoners out of the pit. The passages in the Sacred Writings, which allude to this grand sacrificial and atoning act, are almost innumerable. See the Preface to Matthew.

In this place, our Lord terms his blood, the blood of the NEW covenant; by which he means that grand plan of agreement or reconciliation, which God was now establishing between himself and mankind, by the passion and death of his Son; through whom alone, men could draw nigh to God: and this NEW covenant is mentioned in contradistinction from the OLD covenant, η παλαια Διαθηκη, 2 Cor. iii. 14. by which appellative all the books of the Old Testament were distinguished, because they pointed out the way of reconciliation to God by the blood of the various victims slain under the law: but now, as the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world, was about to be offered up, a NEW and LIVING way was thereby constituted, so that no one henceforth could come unto the Father but by HIM. Hence all the books of the New Testament, which bear unanimous testimony to the doctrine of salvation by faith through the blood of Jesus, are termed. Η Καινη Διαθηκη, The NEW covenant. See the Preface.

Dr. Lightfoot's Observations on this are worthy of serious notice. "This is my blood of the New Testament. Not only the seal of the covenant, but the sanction of the new covenant. The end of the Mosaic œconomy, and the confirming of a new one. The confirmation of the old covenant was by the blood of bulls and goats, Exod. xxiv. Heb. ix. because blood was still to be shed: the confirmation of the new was by a cup of wine, because under the new covenant there is no farther shedding of blood. As it is here said of the cup, This cup is the New Testament in my blood; so it might be said of the cup of blood, Exod. xxiv. That cup was the Old Testament in the blood of Christ: there, all the articles of that covenant

Which is shed (εκχυνομενον poured out) for many] Εκχεω and εκχυω, to pour out, are often used in a sacrificial sense in the Septuagint, and signify to pour out or sprinkle the blood of the sacrifices before the altar of the Lord, by way of atonement. See 2 Kings xvi. 15. Lev. viii. 15. ix. 9. Exod. xxix. 12. Lev. iv. 7, 14, 17, 30, 34. and in various other places. Our Lord, by this very remarkable mode of expression, teaches us, that as his body was to be broken or crucified, υπερ ημων, in our stead, so here the blood was to be poured out to make an atonement, as the words, remission of sins, sufficiently prove; for without shedding of blood there was no remission, Heb. ix. 22. nor any remission by shedding of blood, but in a sacrificial way. See the passages above, and on ver. 26.

The whole of this passage will receive additional light when collated with Isai. liii. 11, 12. By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify MANY, for he shall bear their iniquities—because he hath POURED OUT his soul unto death, and he bare the sin of MANY. The pouring out of the soul unto death, in the Prophet, answers to, this is the blood of the new covenant which is poured out for you, in the Evangelists: and the רבים rabbim, multitudes, in Isaiah, corresponds to the MANY, πολλων, of Matthew and Mark. The passage will soon appear plain, when we consider that two distinct classes of persons are mentioned by the prophet. 1. The JEWS.—Ver. 4. Surely he hath borne OUR griefs, and carried OUR sorrows.—Ver. 5. But he was wounded for OUR transgressions, he was bruised for OUR iniquities, the chastisement of OUR peace was upon him.—Ver. 6. All WE like sheep have gone astray, and the Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of US all. 2. The GENTILES.—Ver. 11. By his knowledge, ברעתו bedaâto, i. e. by his being made known, published as Christ crucified among the Gentiles, he shall justify רבים rabbim, the multitudes, (the GENTILES) for he shall (also) bear THEIR offences, as well as OURS, the Jews, ver. 4, &c. It is well known that the Jewish dispensation, termed by the Apostle as above, η παλαια διαθηκη, the OLD covenant, was partial and exclusive. None were particularly interested in it save the descendants of the twelve sons of Jacob: whereas the Christian dispensation, η καινη διαθηκη, the NEW covenant, referred to by our Lord in this place, was universal; for as Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for EVERY man, Heb. xi. 9. and is that Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the WORLD, John i. 29. who would have ALL MEN to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth, 1 Tim. ii. 4. even that knowledge of Christ crucified, by which they are to be justified, Isai. liii. 11. therefore he has commanded his disciples to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to EVERY CREATURE, Mark xvi. 15. The reprobate race, those who were no people and not beloved, were to be called in; for the gospel was to be preached to all the world, though it was to begin at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47. For this purpose was the blood of the new covenant-sacrifice poured out for the multitudes, that there might be but one fold, as there is but one shepherd: and, that God might be ALL and in ALL.

For the remission of sins.] Εις αφεσιν αμαρτιων, for (or, in reference to) the taking away of sins. For, although the blood is shed, and the atonement made, no man's sins are taken away, until, as a true penitent, he returns to God; and feeling his utter incapacity to save himself, believes in Christ Jesus, who is the justifier of the ungodly.

The phrase, αφεσις των αμαρτιων, remission of sins, (frequently used by the Septuagint) being thus explained by our Lord, is often used by the Evangelists and the Apostles; and does not mean merely the pardon of sins, as it is generally understood, but the removal or taking away of sins; not only the guilt, but also the very nature of sin, and the pollution of the soul through it; and comprehends all that is generally understood by the terms justification and sanctification. For the use and meaning of the phrase, αφεσις αμαρτιων, see Mark i. 4. Luke i. 77. iii. 3. xxiv. 47. Acts ii. 38. v. 31. x. 43. xiii. 38. xxvi. 18. Coloss. i. 14. Heb. x. 18.

Both St. Luke and St. Paul add, that after giving the bread our lord said, Do this in remembrance of me. And after giving the cup. St. Paul alone adds, This do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. The account as given by St. Paul should be carefully followed, being fuller; and received, according to his own declaration, by especial revelation from God. See 1 Cor. xi. 23. For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, &c. See the harmonized view above.

Verse 29. I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine] These words seem to intimate no more than this: We shall not have another opportunity of eating this bread and drinking this wine together; as in a few hours my crucifixion shall take place.

no more drink of the produce of the vine with you; but shall drink new wine—wine of a widely different nature from this—a wine which the kingdom of God alone can afford. The term new in Scripture is often taken in this sense. So the NEW heaven, the NEW earth, the NEW covenant, the NEW man—mean a heaven, earth, covenant, man, of a very different nature from the former. It was our Lord's invariable custom to illustrate heavenly things by those of earth: and to make that which had last been the subject of conversation the means of doing it. Thus he uses wine here, of which they had lately drunk, and on which he had held the preceding discourse, to point out the supreme blessedness of the kingdom of God. But however pleasing and useful wine may be to the body, and how helpful soever, as an ordinance of God, it may be to the soul in the holy sacrament; yet the wine of the kingdom, the spiritual enjoyments at the right hand of God, will be infinitely more precious and useful. From what our Lord says here, we learn, that the sacrament of his supper is a type of, and a pledge to genuine Christians, of the felicity they shall enjoy with Christ in the kingdom of glory.

Verse 30. And when they had sung a hymn] Υμνησαντες means, probably, no more than a kind of recitative reading or chanting. As to the hymn itself, we know, from the universal consent of Jewish antiquity, that it was composed of Psalms 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, and 118, termed by the Jews הלל halel, from הללו-יה halelu-yah, the first word in Psalm 113. These six Psalms were always sung at every paschal solemnity. They sung this great hillel on account of the five great benefits referred to in it; viz. 1. The Exodus from Egypt, Psal. cxiv. 1. When Israel went out of Egypt, &c. 2. The miraculous division of the Red sea, ver. 3. The sea saw it and fled. 3. The promulgation of the Law, ver. 4. The mountains skipped like lambs. 4. The Resurrection of the dead, Psal. cxvi. 9. I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living 5. The passion of the Messiah, Psal. cxv. 1. Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, &c. See Schoetgen, Hor. Hebr. p. 231. and my Discourse on the nature and design of the Eucharist, 8vo. Lond. 1808.

Verse 31. All ye shall be offended] Or rather, Ye will all be stumbled—παντες υμεις σκανδαλισθησεσθε—ye will all forsake me, and lose in a great measure your confidence in me.

This night] The time of trial is just at hand.

I will smite the Shepherd] It will happen to you as to a flock of sheep, whose shepherd has been slain—the leader and guardian being removed, the whole flock shall be scattered, and be on the point of becoming a prey to ravenous beasts.

Verse 32. But after I am risen again] Don't lose your confidence, for though I shall appear for a time to be wholly left to wicked men, and be brought under the power of death; yet I will rise again, and triumph over all your enemies and mine.

I will go before you] Still alluding to the case of the Shepherd and his sheep. Though the shepherd have been smitten and the sheep scattered, the shepherd shall revive again, collect the scattered flock, and go before them, and lead them to peace, security, and happiness.

Verse 33. Peter—said unto him, Though all men shall be offended—yet will I never] The presumptuous person imagines he can do every thing, and can do nothing: thinks he can excel all, and excels in nothing: promises every thing, and performs nothing. The humble man acts a quite contrary part. There is nothing we know so little of, as ourselves—nothing we see less of, than our own weakness and poverty. The strength of pride is only for a moment. Peter, though vainly confident, was certainly sincere—he had never been put to a sore trial, and did not know his own strength. Had this resolution of his been formed in the strength of God, he would have been enabled to maintain it against earth and hell.

Verse 34. Jesus said] Our Lord's answer to Peter is very emphatic and impressive. Verily—I speak a solemn weighty truth, thou wilt not only be stumbled, fall off, and forsake thy Master, but thou wilt even deny that thou hast or ever had any knowledge of, or connection with me; and this thou wilt do, not by little and little, through a long process of time, till the apostacy, daily gathering strength, shall be complete; but thou wilt do it this very night, and that not once only but thrice; and this thou wilt do also in the earlier part of the night, before even a cock shall crow. Was not this warning enough to him not to trust in his own strength, but to depend on God?

thee.] He does not take the warning which his Lord gave him—he trusts in the warm sincere attachment to Christ which he now feels, not considering that this must speedily fail, unless supported by the power of God.

Verse 36. A place called Gethsemane] A garden at the foot of the mount of Olives. The name seems to be formed from גת gath, a press, and שמן shemen, oil; probably the place where the produce of the mount of Olives was prepared for use. The Garden of the oil-press, or olive press.

Sit ye here] Or, stay in this place, while I go and pray yonder: and employ ye the time, as I shall employ it—in watching unto prayer.

Verse 37. And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee] That is, James and John; the same persons who had beheld his transfiguration on the mount—that they might contemplate this agony in the light of that glory which they had there seen; and so be kept from being stumbled by a view of his present humiliation.

Began to be sorrowful] Λυπεισθαι from λυω, to dissolve—exquisite sorrow, such as dissolves the natural vigour, and threatens to separate soul and body.

And very heavy.] Overwhelmed with anguish—αδημονειν. This word is used by the Greeks to denote the Most extreme anguish which the soul can feel—excruciating anxiety and torture of spirit.

Verse 38. Then saith he] Then saith—Jesus:—I have added the word Jesus, ὁ Ιησους on the authority of a multitude of eminent MSS. See them in Griesbach.

My soul is exceeding sorrowful, (or, is surrounded with exceeding sorrow) even unto death.] This latter word explains the two former: My soul is so dissolved in sorrow, my spirit is filled with such agony and anguish, that if speedy succour be not given to my body, death must be the immediate consequence.

Now, the grand expiatory sacrifice begins to be offered: in this garden Jesus enters fully into the sacerdotal office; and now on the altar of his immaculate divinity, begins to offer his own body—his own life—a lamb without spot, for the sin of the world. St. Luke observes, chap. xxii. 43, 44. that there appeared unto him an angel from heaven strengthening him; and that being in an agony, his sweat was like great drops of blood falling to the ground. How exquisite must this anguish have been, when it forced the very blood through the coats of the veins, and enlarged the pores in such a preternatural manner, as to cause them to empty it out in large successive drops! In my opinion, the principal part of the redemption price was paid in this unprecedented and indescribable agony.

Bloody sweats are mentioned by many authors; but none was ever such as this—where a person in perfect health, (having never had any predisposing sickness to induce a debility of the system) and in the full vigour of life, about thirty-three years of age, suddenly, through mental pressure, without any fear of death, sweat great drops of blood; and these continued, during his wrestling with God, to fall to the ground.

To say that all this was occasioned by the fear he had of the ignominious death which he was about to die, confutes itself—for this would not only rob him of his divinity, for which purpose it is brought, but it deprives him of all excellency, and even of manhood itself. The prospect of death could not cause him to suffer thus, when he knew that in less than three days he was to be restored to life, and be brought into an eternity of blessedness. His agony and distress can receive no consistent explication but on this ground—He SUFFERED, the JUST for the UNJUST, that he might BRING us to GOD. O glorious truth! O infinitely meritorious suffering! And O! above all, the eternal love, that caused him to undergo such sufferings for the sake of SINNERS!

Verse 39. Fell on his face] See the note on Luke xxii. 44. This was the ordinary posture of the supplicant when the favour was great which was asked, and deep humiliation required. The head was put between the knees, and the forehead brought to touch the earth—this was not only a humiliating, but a very painful posture also.

This cup] The word cup is frequently used in the Sacred Writings to point out sorrow, anguish, terror, death. It seems to be an allusion to a very ancient method of punishing criminals. A cup of poison was put into their hands, and they were obliged to drink it. Socrates was killed thus, being obliged by the magistrates of Athens, to drink a cup of the juice of hemlock. To death, by the poisoned cup, there seems an allusion in Heb. ii. 9. Jesus Christ by the grace of nevertheless [a] not as I will, but as thou wilt.

40 And he cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, What, could ye not watch with me one hour?

41 [b] Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

42 He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done.

43 And he came and found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy.

44 And he left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words.

45 Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

46 Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

God, TASTED death for every man. The whole world are here represented as standing guilty and condemned before the tribunal of God: into every man's hand the deadly cup is put, and he is required to drink off the poison—Jesus enters, takes every man's cup out of his hand, and drinks off the poison, and thus tastes or suffers the death which every man otherwise must have undergone.

Pass from me] Perhaps there is an allusion here to several criminals standing in a row, who are all to drink of the same cup, but the judge extending favour to a certain one, the cup passes by him to the next.

Instead of προελθων μικρον going a little forward, many eminent MSS. have προσελθων coming a little forward—but the variation is of little moment. At the close of this verse several MSS. add the clause in Luke xxii. 43. There appeared an angel, &c.

Verse 40. He—saith unto Peter] He addressed himself more particularly to this apostle, because of the profession he had made ver. 33. as if he had said, "Is this the way you testify your affectionate attachment to me? Ye all said you were ready to die with me; what then, cannot you watch ONE hour?

Instead of ουκ ισχυσατε could YE not; the Codex Alexandrinus, the later Syriac in the margin, three of the Itala, and Juvencus, read ουκ ισχυσας, couldst THOU not—referring the reproach immediately to Peter, who had made the promises mentioned before.

Verse 41. That ye enter not into temptation] If ye cannot endure a little fatigue when there is no suffering, how will ye do when the temptation, the great trial of your fidelity and courage, cometh? Watch—that ye be not taken unawares; and pray—that when it comes ye may be enabled to bear it.

The spirit—is willing, but the flesh is weak.] Your inclinations are good—ye are truly sincere; but your good purposes will be overpowered by your timidity. Ye wish to continue stedfast in your adherence to your Master; but your fears will lead you to desert him.

Verse 42. O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me] If it be not possible—to redeem fallen man, unless I drink this cup, unless I suffer death for them: thy will be done, I am content to suffer whatever may be requisite to accomplish the great design. In this address the humanity of Christ most evidently appears; for it was his humanity alone that could suffer; and if it did not appear that he had felt these sufferings, it would have been a presumption that he had not suffered, and consequently made no atonement. And had he not appeared to have been perfectly resigned in these sufferings, his sacrifice could not have been a free-will but a constrained offering, and therefore of no use to the salvation of mankind.

Verse 43. Their eyes were heavy.] That is, they could not keep them open. Was there nothing preternatural in this? Was there no influence here from the powers of darkness?

Verse 44. Prayed the third time] So St. Paul—I besought the Lord THRICE that it might depart from me, 2 Cor. xii. 8. This thrice repeating the same petition argues deep earnestness of soul.

Verse 45. Sleep on now and take your rest] Perhaps it might be better to read these words interrogatively, and paraphrase them thus: Do ye sleep on still? Will no warnings avail? Will no danger excite you to watchfulness and prayer? My hour—in which I am to be delivered up, is at hand; therefore now think of your own personal safety.

The Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.] Αμαρτωλων, viz. the Gentiles or heathens, who were generally distinguished by this appellation, from the Jews. Here it probably means the Roman cohort that was stationed on festivals, for the defence of the temple. By the Romans he was adjudged to death; for the Jews acknowledge that they had no power in capital cases. See the note on chap. ix. 10.

safety: but I go willingly to meet that death which their malice designs me; and through it, provide for the life of the world.

Verse 47. Judas, one of the twelve] More deeply to mark his base ingratitude and desperate wickedness—HE was ONE of the TWELVE—and he is a TRAITOR, and one of the vilest too that ever disgraced human nature.

A great multitude with swords and staves] They did not come as officers of justice, but as a desperate mob. Justice had nothing to do in this business. He who a little before had been one of the leaders of the flock of Christ, is now become the leader of ruffians and murderers! What a terrible fall!

Verse 48. Gave them a sign] How coolly deliberate is this dire apostate! the man whom I shall kiss—how deeply hypocritical!—that is he, hold him fast, seize him—how diabolically malicious!

Verse 49. Hail, Master] A usual compliment among the Jews. Judas pretends to wish our Lord continued health while he is meditating his destruction! How many compliments of this kind are there in the world! Judas had a pattern in Joab, who while he pretends to enquire tenderly for the health of Amasa, thrust him through with his sword: but the disciple here vastly outdoes his master, and through a motive, if possible, still more base. Let all those who use unmeaning or insidious compliments, rank for ever with Joab and Judas.

And kissed him.] And tenderly kissed him—this is the proper meaning of the original word κατεφιλησεν, he kissed him again and again—still pretending the most affectionate attachment to him, though our Lord had before unmasked him.

Verse 50. Jesus said—Friend] Rather companion, εταιρε, (not FRIEND) wherefore, rather, against whom (εφ' ω the reading of all the best MSS.) art thou come? How must these words have cut his very soul, if he had had any sensibility left! Surely thou who hast so long been my companion, art not come against me, thy Lord, Teacher, and Friend! What is the human heart not capable of, when abandoned by God, and influenced by Satan, and the love of money!

Laid hands on Jesus] But not before they had felt that proof of his sovereign power by which they had all been struck down to the earth, John xviii. 6. It is strange that after this, they should dare to approach him: but the scriptures must be fulfilled.

Verse 51. One of them which were with Jesus] This was Peter—struck a servant of the high priest's, the servant's name was Malchus, John xviii. 10. and smote off his ear. In Luke xxii. 51. it is said, Jesus touched and healed it—Here was another miracle, and striking proof of the divinity of Christ. Peter did not cut the ear, merely, he cut it OFF, αφειλεν. Now to heal it, Jesus must either take up the ear and put it on again, or else create a new one—either of these was a miracle, which nothing less than unlimited power could produce. See the note on John xviii. 10.

Verse 52. Put up again thy sword into his place] Neither Christ nor his religion is to be defended by the secular arm. God is sufficiently able to support his ark, Uzzah need not stretch out his hand on the occasion. Even the shadow of public justice is not to be resisted by a private person, when coming from those in public authority. The cause of a Christian is the cause of God: sufferings belong to one, and vengeance to the other. Let the cause therefore rest in his hands, who will do it ample justice.

Shall perish with the sword.] Instead of απολουνται shall perish, many excellent MSS. Versions, and Fathers, have αποθανουνται shall die. The general meaning of this verse is, they who contend in battle, are likely on both sides to become the sacrifices of their mutual animosities. But it is probably a prophetic declaration of the Jewish and Roman states. The Jews put our Lord to death under the sanction of the Romans—both took the sword against Christ, and both perished by it. The Jews by the sword of the Romans, and the Romans by that of the Goths, Vandals, &c. The event has verified the prediction—the Jewish government has been destroyed upwards of 1700 years, and the Roman upwards take the sword, shall perish with the sword.

53 Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me [a] more than twelve legions of angels?

54 But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, [b] that thus it must be?

55 In that same hour said Jesus to the multitudes, Are ye come out as against a thief with swords and staves for to take me? I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me.

56 But all this was done, that the [c] scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then [d] all the disciples forsook him, and fled.

of 1000. Confer with this passage, Psal. ii. 4, 9. and cx. 1, 5, 6. But how came Peter to have a sword? Judea was at this time so infested with robbers and cut-throats, that it was not deemed safe for any person to go unarmed. He probably carried one for his mere personal safety.

Verse 53. More than twelve legions of angels?] As if he had said, Instead of you twelve, one of whom is a traitor, my Father can give me more than twelve legions of angels to defend me. A legion at different times, contained different numbers; 4200, 5000, and frequently 6000 men; and from this saying, taking the latter number, which is the common rate, may we not safely believe that the angels of God amount to more than 72000?

Verse 54. But how then] Had I such a defence—shall the scriptures be fulfilled, which say, that thus it must be? That is, that I am to suffer and die for the sin of the world. Probably the scriptures to which our Lord principally refers are Ps. xxii. lxix. and especially Isai. liii. & Dan. ix. 24—27. Christ shews that they had no power against him but what he permitted: and that he willingly gave up himself into their hands.

Verse 55. Are ye come out as against a thief] At this time Judea was much infested by robbers, so that armed men were obliged to be employed against them—to this our Lord seems to allude. See on ver. 52.

I sat daily with you] Why come in this hostile manner? Every day for four days past, ye might have met with me in the temple whither I went to teach you the way of salvation. See on chap. xxi. 17.

Verse 56. But all this was done] This is probably the observation of the Evangelist. See on chap. ii. 23.

Then all the disciples forsook him, and fled] O what is man! how little is even his utmost sincerity to be depended on! Jesus is abandoned by all!—even zealous Peter, and loving John are among the fugitives! Was ever master so served by his scholars? Was ever parent so treated by his children? Is there not as much zeal and love among them all, as might make one martyr for God and truth? Alas! no. He had but twelve who professed inviolable attachment to him, one of these betrayed him, another denied him with oaths, and the rest run away and utterly abandon him to his implacable enemies! Are there not found among his disciples still, 1st. Persons who betray him and his cause? 2dly. Persons who deny him and his people? 3dly. Persons who abandon him, his people, his cause, and his truth? Reader! dost thou belong to any of these classes?

Verse 57. They—led him away to Caiaphas] John says, chap. xviii. 13. that they led him first to Annas; but this appears to have been done merely to do him honour as the father-in-law of Caiaphas, and his colleague in the high priesthood. But as the Sanhedrin was assembled at the house of Caiaphas, it was there he must be brought to undergo his mock trial; but see on John xviii. 13.

Verse 58. Peter followed him, afar off] Poor Peter! this is the beginning of his dreadful fall. His fear kept him from joining the company, and publicly acknowledging his Lord; and his affection obliged him to follow at a distance that he might see the end.

And sat with the servants, to see the end.] When a man is weak in faith, and can as yet only follow Christ at a distance, he should avoid all dangerous places, and the company of those who are most likely to prove a snare to him. Had not Peter got to the high priest's palace, and sat down with the servants, he would not thus have denied his Lord and Master.

seek the proper means of effecting it: they declare him criminal, and after that do all they can to fix some crime upon him, that they may appear to have some shadow of justice on their side, when they put him to death. It seems to have been a common custom of this vile court, to employ false witness on any occasion, to answer their own ends. See this exemplified in the case of Stephen, Acts vi. 11—13.

Verse 60. Though many false witnesses came] There is an unaccountable confusion in the MSS. in this verse: without stating the variations which may be seen in Griesbach, I shall give that which I believe to be the genuine sense of the Evangelist. Then the chief priests and elders, and all the council, sought false witness against Jesus, to put him to death; but they found it not, though many false witnesses came up. At last two false witnesses came up, saying; This man said, &c. It is the property of falsity to be ever inconsistent, and to contradict itself—therefore they could not find two consistent testimonies, without which the Jewish law did not permit any person to be put to death. However, the hand of God was in this business; for the credit of Jesus, and the honour of the Christian religion, he would not permit him to be condemned on a false accusation: and therefore, at last they are obliged to change their ground, and to the eternal confusion of the unrighteous council, he is condemned on the very evidence of his own innocence, purity, and truth!

Verse 61. I am able to destroy the temple of God] 1st, these words were not fairly quoted. Jesus had said, John ii. 19. Destroy this temple, and I will build it again in three days. 2dly, the inuendo which they produce, applying these words to a pretended design to destroy the temple at Jerusalem, was utterly unfair: for these words he spoke of the temple of his body. It is very easy, by means of a few small alterations, to render the most holy things and innocent persons odious to the world; and even to take away the life of the innocent.

Verse 62. Answerest thou nothing?] The accusation was so completely frivolous, that it merited no notice: besides, Jesus knew that they were determined to put him to death; and that his hour was now come, and that therefore remonstrance or defence would be of no use: he had often before borne sufficient testimony to the truth.

Verse 63. I adjure thee by the living God] I put thee to thy oath. To this solemn adjuration Christ immediately replies; because he is now called on in the name of God, to bear another testimony to the truth. The authority of God in the most worthless magistrate should be properly respected. However necessary our Lord saw it to be silent, when the accusations were frivolous, and the evidence contradictory, he felt no disposition to continue the silence, when questioned concerning a truth, for which he came into the world to shed his blood.

Verse 64. Thou hast said] That is, I am the Christ, the promised Messiah: (see on ver. 25.) and you and this whole nation shall shortly have the fullest proof of it: for hereafter, in a few years, ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, fully invested with absolute dominion, and coming in the clouds of heaven, to execute judgment upon this wicked race. See chap. xxiv. 30. Our Lord appears to refer to Dan. vii. 13. One like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, &c. This may also refer to the final judgment.

Verse 65. The high priest rent his clothes] This rending of the high priest's garments, was expressly contrary to the law, Lev. x. 6. and xxi. 10. But it was a common method of expressing violent grief, Gen. xxxvii. 29, 34. Job i. 20. and horror at what was deemed blasphemous or impious. 2 Kings xviii. 37. xix. 1. Acts xiv. 14. All that heard a blasphemous speech were obliged to rend their clothes, and never to sew them up again. See Lightfoot.

He hath spoken blasphemy] Quesnel's note on this is worthy of notice. "See here a false zeal, a mask of religion, and a passionate and a seditious way of proceeding, tending only to incense and stir up others, all which are common to those who would oppress truth by cabal, and without proof. out 'heresy, blasphemy, and faction', though contrary to all appearance, men fail not to stir up those in power, to gain the simple, to give some shadow of authority to the ill-disposed, to cast devout but ignorant people into scruples, and thereby to advance the mystery of iniquity, which is the mystery of all ages." This was the very plan his Catholic brethren adopted in this country, in the reign of Queen Mary, called the bloody queen, because of the many murders of righteous men which she sanctioned at the mouth of her Catholic priesthood.

Verse 66. He is guilty of death] Ενοχος θανατου εστι, he is liable to death. All the forms of justice are here violated. The judge becomes a party and accuser, and proceeds to the verdict without examining whether all the prophecies concerning the Messiah, and the innumerable miracles which he wrought, did not justify him. Examination and proof, are the ruin of all calumnies, and of the authors of them, and therefore they take care to keep off from these two things. See Quesnel.

Verse 67. Then did they spit in his face] This was done as a mark of the most profound contempt. See Job xvi. 10. and xxx. 10. Isai. l. 6. Micah v. 1. The Judges now delivered him into the hands of the mob.

And buffeted him] Smote him with their fists, εκολαφισαν. This is the translation of Theophylact. Κολαφιζειν, says he, means, "to beat with the hand, the fingers being clenched. Συγκαμπτομενων των δακτυλων, or, to speak more briefly, to buffet with the fist."

Smote him with the palms of their hands] Εραπισαν. Ραπιζω, says Suidas, means, "παταξαι την γναθον απλη τη χειρι, to smite the cheek with the open hand. Thus they offered him indignity in all its various and vexatious forms. Insults of this kind are never forgiven by the world: Jesus not only takes no revenge, (though it be completely in his power) but bears all with meekness, without even one word of reply.

Verse 68. Prophesy unto us, thou Christ] Their conduct toward him now, was expressly prophesied of, by a man whose divine mission they did not pretend to deny; see Isai. l. 6. It appears, that before they buffeted him, they bound up his eyes, See Mark iv. 65.

Verse 69. A damsel came unto him] A maid servant, παιδισκη. See this translation vindicated by Kypke.

Thou also wast with Jesus] What a noble opportunity had Peter now, to shew his zeal for the insulted cause of truth, and his attachment to his Master. But, alas! he is shorn of his strength. Constables and maid servants are no company for an apostle, except when he is delivering to them the message of salvation. Evil communications corrupt good manners. Had Peter been in better company, he would not have had so foul a fall.

Verse 70. But he denied before them all] So the evil principle gains ground. Before, he followed at a distance, now he denies; this is the second gradation in his fall.

Verse 71. Unto them that were there] Instead of λεγει τοις εκει· και, more than one hundred MSS. many of which are of the first authority and antiquity, have λεγει αυτοις· εκει και, she saith unto them, this man was THERE also. I rather think this is the genuine reading. Τοις might have been easily mistaken for αυτοις, if the first syllable αυ were but a little faded in a MS. from which others were copied: and then the placing of the point after εκει· instead of after αυτοις· would naturally follow, as, placed after τοις, it would make no sense. Griesbach approves of this reading.

Verse 72. And again he denied with an oath] This is a third gradation of his iniquity. He has told a lie, and he swears to support it. A liar has always some suspicion that his testimony is not credited, for he is conscious to his own falsity, and is therefore naturally led to support his assertions by oaths.

Verse 73. Thy speech] Thy manner of speech, η λαλια σου, that dialect of thine—his accent being different from that of 74 Then [a] began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew.

Jerusalem. From various examples given by Lightfoot and Schoetgen, we find, that the Galileans had a very corrupt pronunciation, frequently interchanging א, ה, ח, and ע, and so blending or dividing words as to render them unintelligible, or cause them to convey a contrary sense.

Bewrayeth thee.] Δηλον σε ποιει, maketh thee manifest, from the Anglo-saxon bepnegan, to accuse, betray; a word long since lost from our language.

Verse 74. Then began he to curse and to swear] Rather, Then he began positively to affirm—καταθεματιζειν, from κατα intensive, and τιθημι I lay down, place, affirm. But the common reading is καταναθεματιζειν, which signifies to wish curses on himself. The former reading is supported by almost every MS. of value, and is, beyond dispute, the true reading, and has been received by Griesbach into the text. The business is bad enough, but the common reading makes it worse. In ver. 72. Peter is said to deny with an oath; here, he positively affirms and swears, probably by the name of God, for this is the import of the word ομνυειν. This makes the fourth and final gradation in the climax of Peter's fall. From these awful beginnings it is not unfair to conclude, that Peter might have gone almost as far as Judas himself, had not the traitorous business been effected before. Yet all this evil sprung simply from the fear of man. How many denials of Christ and his truth have sprung since from the same cause!

The cock crew] This animal becomes in the hand of God, the instrument of awaking the fallen apostle at last, to a sense of his fall, danger and duty. When abandoned of God, the smallest thing may become the occasion of a fall; and when in the hand of God, the smallest matter may become the instrument of our restoration. Let us never think lightly of what are termed little sins; the smallest one has the seed of eternal ruin in it. Let us never think contemptibly of the feeblest means of grace: each may have the seed of eternal salvation in it. Let us ever remember that the great apostle Peter fell through fear of a servant maid, and rose through the crowing of a cock.

Verse 75. Peter remembered the word of Jesus] St. Luke says, chap. xxii. 61. the Lord turned and looked upon Peter. So it appears he was nigh to our Lord, either at the time when the cock crew, or shortly after. The delicacy of this reproof was great—he must be reproved and alarmed, otherwise he will proceed yet further in his iniquity; Christ is in bonds, and cannot go and speak to him; if he called aloud, the disciple is discovered, and falls a victim to Jewish malice and Roman jealousy; he therefore does the whole by a look. In the hand of Omnipotence every thing is easy, and he can save by a few, as well as by many.

He went out] He left the place where he had sinned, and the company which had been the occasion of his transgression.

And wept bitterly.] Felt bitter anguish of soul, which evidenced itself by the tears of contrition which flowed plentifully from his eyes. Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall! Where the mighty have been slain, what shall support the feeble? Only the grace of the ALMIGHTY God.

This transaction is recorded by the inspired penmen, 1st, That all may watch unto prayer, and shun the occasions of sin. 2dly, That if a man be unhappily overtaken in a fault, he may not despair, but cast himself immediately with a contrite heart on the infinite tenderness and compassion of God. See the notes on John xviii. 27.

I have touched on the subject of our Lord's anointing but slightly in the preceding notes, because the controversy upon this point is not yet settled; and, except to harmonists, it is a matter of comparatively little importance. Bishop Newcome has written largely on this fact, and I insert an extract from his notes.

BISHOP NEWCOME'S ACCOUNT OF THE ANOINTING OF OUR LORD.

"The histories of Jesus's unction in Matthew, Mark, and John, are accounts of the same fact. Hoc fixum maneat, eandem ab omnibus historiam referri. Calv. Harm. p. 375.

"The following objections to this position occur in Lightfoot, Whiston, Whitby, and Macknight.

1st. "The unction recorded by St. John happens six days before the Pass-over; but the other unction is fixed to the second day before that feast.

"Ans. The day of the entertainment related John xii. 2. is not restrained to the sixth day before the Pass-over. Quo die factum illi fuerit convivium, in quo a Mariâ unctus est, Johannes non exprimit. Calv. Harm. Johann. p. 144. Ver. 12, 13. much people are said to meet Jesus on the day after his arrival at Bethany, not on the day after his unction. See ver. 9. St. John has recorded events on the sixth and on the fifth day before the Pass-over; and then, ch. xiii. 1. he proceeds to the evening on which the Pass-over was eaten. On this account he anticipates the history of Jesus's unction; and he naturally anticipates it on mentioning the place where it happened.

2dly. "The scene in St. John is the house of Martha, or of Lazarus: in the other Evangelists, that of Simon the leper.

"Ans. St. John lays the scene in general at Bethany.

"It seems probable, that Lazarus would not have been called εἷς τῶν ἀνακειμένων, if he had been the host.

Martha, the sister of Lazarus, might shew Jesus honour by ministering to him, in any house as well as her own. 'She was Simon's neighbour, and perhaps his relation,' Dr. Priestley, Harm. p. 102. Our Lord's affection for Lazarus and his sister, and the recent miracle wrought on Lazarus, were very sufficient reasons for Simon's invitation of such neighbouring guests.

3dly. "St. John mentions the feet of Jesus as anointed by Mary, and wiped with her hair; the other Evangelists say, that the ointment was poured on Jesus's head.

"Ans. It is no where asserted that the unction was of Jesus's head only, or of his feet only: both actions are consistent; and St. John, in his supplemental history, may very well have added the respectful conduct of Mary, that after having anointed Jesus's head, she proceeded to anoint his feet, and even to wipe them with her hair.

4thly. "In St. John, Judas alone murmurs: in St. Matthew, the disciples have indignation; or, as St. Mark expresses it, some have indignation among themselves.

"Ans. Dr. Lardner says, Serm. vol. II. p. 316. 'It is well known to be very common with all writers, to use the plural number when one person only is intended; nor is it impossible that others might have some uneasiness about it, though they were far from being so disgusted at it as Judas was. And their concern for the poor was sincere: his was self-interested and mere pretence.'

Grotius's words are: Reprehensa est hoc nomine mulier ab uno discipulorum; nam ita pluralis accipi solet.

"Ans. St. John's words are indeed thus misinterpreted by Baronius: Let her alone, that she may keep it against the day of my burial, alluding to Mark xvi. 1. See Lightfoot, Harm. p. 27. See also Lightfoot, ib. 1. 251. 'She has kept it yet, and not spent all; that she may bestow it on a charitable use, the anointed of my body to its burial.'

"Whiston also, Harm. 129. gives a wrong sense to the words. She hath spent but little of it now; she hath reserved the main part of it for a fitter time, the day before my delivery to the Jews; making this a prediction of what passed, Matt. xxvi. 6—13. Mark xiv. 3—9. It must be observed that, John xii. 7. there is a remarkable various reading: ἵνα εἰς τὴν ἡμέραν τῦ ἐνταφιασμῦ μυ τηρήσῃ αὐτό. See Wetstein, and add Codd. Vercell. and Veron in Blanchini. Of this reading we have a sound interpretation in Mill, proleg. xlv. Sine eam ut opportune usa hoc unguento, velut ad sepulturam meam, jamjam occidendi, illud servâsse ostendatur. And likewise in Bengelius ad loc. who observes, that the common reading is, Facilioris sensûs causâ; and adds, Verbum τηρέσῃ servaret, pendet ex præterito, cujus vis latet in ἄφες αὐτήν, i. e. Noli reprehendere hanc, quæ unguentum ideo nec vendidit, nec pauperibus dedit, ut &c. And the common reading is thus rightly explained by Lightfoot, 2. 588. 'If Baronius's exposition do not take, then add this clause—Let her alone; for this may be an argument and sign that she hath not done this vainly, luxuriously, or upon any delicacy spent so costly an ointment upon me; because she hath reserved it for this time, wherein I am so near my grave and funeral, and poured it not on me before.' Lardner's comment, ubi supra, p. 312. is applicable to the three Evangelists. If this ointment were laid out upon a dead body, you would not think it too much. You may consider this anointing as an embalming of me. The words are a prediction of Christ's death, which was to happen on the third day after; and they are a prediction beautifully taken from the occasion. She has done this to embalm me, Matt. She has anticipated the embalming of me, Mark. She has not sold this ointment, and given it to the poor, that she might reserve it to this day, which is, as it were, the day of my embalming, so soon is my burial to follow John.

"Dr. Scott, on Matthew, quotes the following passage from Theophylact: ἔθος ἦν τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις μετὰ μύρων ἐνταφιάζειν τὰ σώματα, ὡς καὶ οἱ Αἰγύπτιοι ἐποιουν, διὰ τὸ ἄσηπτα τηρεῖσθαι, καὶ ἄνευ δυσωδίας. It was a custom among the Jews, as well as among the Egyptians, to embalm the bodies of the dead, as well to keep them from putrefaction, as to prevent offensive smells.

"The expressions therefore of the three evangelists agree in sense and substance. I have explained the more difficult in St. John; leaving every one to his own judgment whether it be the true one or not; though I incline to think that the unusual phrase ought generally to be admitted into the text.

"6thly. In St. John, Mary anoints Jesus; in Matthew and Mark, a woman, not named.

"Ans. Lardner says, ubi supra p. 315. 'St. John having before given the history of the resurrection of Lazarus, it was very natural for him, when he came to relate this anointing of our Lord, to say by whom it was done. But the two former evangelists having never mentioned Lazarus or his sisters in their gospels, when they came to relate this action forbear to mention any name, and speak only of a certain woman. Luke x. 38—42. has an account of our Lord's being entertained at the house of Martha. But he says nothing of this anointing. If he had related it, I make no question, that he, like St. John, would have said by whom it was done.' Upon the whole, there is no solid objection to the hypothesis that we have three accounts of the same transaction. But it is incredible that there should be two unctions of Jesus, in Bethany, within four days, not plainly distinguished from each other; that the kind and price of the ointment should be the same, that the two actions should be censured in the same manner; and that words to the same effect should be used in defence of the Woman who anointed Jesus, within so short a time, in the same place and among the same persons. See Doddridge on John xii. 1.

As to the precise time of this transaction, it is natural to conclude from the accounts of Matthew and Mark, that it happened two days before the pass-over. I had much pleasure in observing that Mr. Jebb, in his Harmony, assigns it the same order as I do. I likewise find in Ward's Dissertations, p. 112. the following remark. 'John only mentions the day when Jesus came to Bethany, without specifying the time when he was entertained there by Simon the leper; whereas the other two evangelists acquaint us with the day when that was done, and what followed upon it, with relation to Judas.' And again, Wall says, Critical Notes, v. 3, p. 52. 'Wednesday he seems to have staid at Bethany, and supped there. At which supper, Mary, sister of Lazarus, poured that ointment on his body, which he interpreted to be for his burial.' And on John xii. 2. 'This seems to be the same supper which Matthew and Mark do say was at the house of Simon the leper; for there it was that Mary anointed him. But then we must not to take it to be the same night that he came to Bethany, but two days before the pass-over.'

"That Judas went to the high-priests on the evening or night of our Wednesday, may be collected from Matt. xxvi. 14—17. and the parallel places in this harmony: and he seems to have acted partly in disgust at what had passed. This is a good argument for fixing the unction for Wednesday. As it will appear that the other apostles did not suspect his treachery, we may suppose that Judas withdrew himself clandestinely, probably after our Lord had retired to privacy and devotion. Our Lord's words, Matt. xxvi. 2. may have led Mary to shew this respect to Jesus, lest no future opportunity should offer. See Lardner, ubi supra, p. 327. Dr. Priestley thinks that 'if the verses that contain this story in Matt. xxvi. 6—13. be considered, they will be found to stand very awkwardly in their present situation, where they interrupt an account of a consultation among the Jews about putting Jesus to death.' Harm. p. 100. But it seems to me, that the story has a remarkably apt connection with the preceding and subsequent history. The Jewish rulers consult how they may take Jesus by craft, and without raising a tumult among the people. An accident happens which offends one of Jesus's familiar attendants; who immediately repairs to Jesus's enemies, and receives from them a bribe to betray him in the absence of the multitude." Newcome's Harmony, p. 39, &c.

I have added the above, not from a conviction that the point is so elucidated, as to settle the controversy, but merely to place before the reader both sides of the question. Still, sub judice lis est, and any man may doubt, consistently with the most genuine piety, whether the relations given by the evangelists concerning the anointing of our Lord, should be understood of two different unctions, at two different times, in two different places, by two different persons; or whether they are not different accounts, with some varying circumstances, of one and the same transaction. I incline, at present, to the former opinion; but it would be rash to decide where so many eminently learned and wise men have disagreed.

The question considered, whether our Lord ate the pass-over with his disciples, before he suffered?

Every candid person must allow that there are great difficulties relative to the time in which our Lord ate the last pass-over with his disciples. In the Introduction to my Discourse on the nature and design of the Holy Eucharist, I have examined this subject at large, and considered the four following opinions, viz. I Our Lord did not eat the pass-over on the last year of his ministry. II. Our Lord did eat it that year; and at the same time with the Jews. III. He did eat it that year, but not at the same time with the Jews. IV. He did eat a pass-over of his own instituting, but widely differing from that eaten by the Jews. The two first opinions do not appear to be solidly supported. The two last are of the most importance, are the most likely, and may be harmonized. I shall introduce a few observations on each in this place. And I, On the opinion that "Our Lord did eat the pass-over this year, but not at the same time with the Jews."

Dr. Cudworth, who of all others has handled this subject best, has proved from the Talmud, Mishna, and some of the most reputable of the Jewish Rabbins, that the ancient Jews about our Saviour's time, often solemnized as well the pass-overs as the other feasts, upon the ferias next before and after the sabbaths. And, that as the Jews in ancient times reckoned the new moons, not according to astronomical exactness, but according to the φασις, or moon's appearance: and, as this appearance might happen a day later than the real time, consequently there might be a whole day of difference in the time of celebrating one of these feasts, which depended on a particular day of the month; the days of the month being counted from the φασις or appearance of the new moon. As he describes the whole manner of doing this, both from the Babylonish Talmud, and from Maimonides, I shall give an extract from this part of his work, that my readers may have the whole argument before them.

"In the great or outer court there was a house called Beth Yazek, where the senate sat all the 30th day of every month, to receive the witnesses of the moon's appearance, and to examine them. If there came approved witnesses on the 30th day, who could state they had seen the new moon, the chief man of the senate stood up,, and cried מקדש mekuddash, it is sanctified; and the people standing by caught the word from him, and cried, mekuddash! mekuddash! But if, when the consistory had sat all the day, and there came no approved witnesses of the phasis, or appearance of the new moon, then they made an intercalation of one day in the former month, and decreed the following one and thirtieth day to be the calends. But, if after the fourth or fifth day, or even before the end of the month, respectable witnesses came from far, and testified they had seen the new moon, in its due time; the senate were bound to alter the beginning of the month, and reckon it a day sooner, viz. from the thirtieth day.

"As the senate were very unwilling to be at the trouble of a second consecration, when they had even fixed on a wrong day, and therefore received very reluctantly the testimony of such witnesses as those last mentioned, they afterwards made a statute to this effect—That whatsoever time the senate should conclude on for the calends of the month, though it were certain they were in the wrong, yet all were bound to order their feasts according to it." This Dr. Cudworth supposes, actually took place in the time of our Lord, and "as it is not likely that our Lord would submit to this perversion of the original custom, and that following the true φασις, or appearance of the new moon, confirmed by sufficient witnesses, he and his disciples ate the pass-over on that day; but the Jews, following the pertinacious decree of the Sanhedrin, did not eat it till the day following." Dr. C. further shews from Epiphanius, that there was a contention, θορυβος, a tumult, among the Jews about the pass-over, that very year. Hence it is likely, that what was the real paschal day to our Lord, his disciples, and many other pious Jews, who adopted the true φασις phasis, was only the preparation or antecedent evening to others, who acted on the decree of the senate. Besides, it is worthy of note, that not only the Karaïtes, who do not acknowledge the authority of the Sanhedrin, but also the Rabbins themselves grant, that where the case is doubtful, the pass-over should be celebrated with the same ceremonies, two days together: and it was always doubtful, when the appearance of the new moon could not be fully ascertained.

Bishop Pearce supposes, that it was lawful for the Jews to eat the paschal lamb at any time, between the evening of Thursday, and that of Friday; and, that this permission was necessary, because of the immense number of lambs which were to be killed for that purpose: as in one year, there were not fewer than 256,500 lambs offered. See Josephus, War, b. vii. c. 9. sect. 3. In Matt. xxvi. ver. 17, it is said, Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, (τη δε πρωτη των αζυμων) the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the pass-over? As the feast of unleavened bread did not begin till the day after the pass-over, the fifteenth day of the month, Lev. xxiii. 5, 6. Numb. xxviii. 16, 17. this could not have been properly the first day of that feast: but as the Jews began to eat unleavened bread on the fourteenth day, Exod. xii. 18. this day was often termed the first of unleavened bread. Now it appears, that the Evangelists use it in this sense, and call even the paschal day by this name, see Mark xiv. 12. Luke xxii. 7.

At first view, this third opinion, which states that Christ did eat the pass-over with his disciples that year, but not in the same hour with the Jews; and that he expired on the cross the same hour in which the paschal lamb was killed, seems the most probable. For it appears, from what has already been remarked, that our Lord and his disciples ate the pass-over some hours before the Jews ate theirs; for they, according to custom, ate theirs at the end of the fourteenth day, but Christ appears to have eaten his the preceding evening, which was the beginning of the same sixth day of the week, or Friday, for the Jews began their day at sun-setting; we at midnight. Thus Christ ate the pass-over the same day with the Jews, but not on the same hour. Christ, therefore, kept this pass-over the beginning of the fourteenth day, the precise day in which the Jews had eaten their first pass-over in Egypt: see Exod. xii. 6—12. And in the same part of the same day in which they had sacrificed their first paschal lamb, viz. between the two evenings, i. e. between the sun's declining west and his setting, Jesus our pass-over was sacrificed for us. For it was the third hour, in the course of between 9 and 12, Mark xv. 25. that Christ was nailed to the cross: and in the course of the ninth hour, between 12 and 3 in the afternoon, Matt. xxvii. 46. Mark xv. 34. Jesus knowing that the antetype had accomplished every thing shadowed forth by the type, said, "it is FINISHED, τετελεσται, completed, perfected, and having thus said, he bowed his head, and dismissed his spirit. See on John xix. 14, 30.

Probably there is but one objection of any force that lies against the opinion, that our Lord ate his passover some hours before the Jews in general ate theirs; which is, that, if our Lord did eat the pass-over the evening before the Jews, in general, ate theirs, it could not have been sacrificed according to the law; nor is it at all likely that the blood was sprinkled at the foot of the altar. If, therefore, the blood was not thus sprinkled by one of the priests, that which constituted the very essence of the rite, as ordained by God, was lacking in that celebrated by our Lord.

To this it is answered—First, we have already seen that, in consequence of the immense number of sacrifices to be offered on the paschal solemnity, it is highly probable the Jews were obliged to employ two days for this work. It is not at all likely that the blood of 256,500 lambs could be shed and sprinkled at one altar, in the course of one day, by all the priests in Jerusalem, or indeed in the Holy Land; since they had but that one altar where they could legally sprinkle the blood of the victims.

Secondly, we have also seen that, in cases of doubt relative to the time of the appearance of the new moon, the Jews were permitted to hold the pass-over both days; and that it is probable such a dubious case existed at the time in question. In any of these cases, the lamb might have been killed and its blood sprinkled according to the rules and ceremonies of the Jewish church.

Thirdly, as our Lord was the true paschal lamb, who was, in a few hours after this time, to bear away the sin of the world, he might dispense with this part of the ceremony, and act as Lord of his own institution in this, as he had done before in the case of the sabbath. At any rate, as it seems probable that he ate the pass-over at this time, and that he died about the time the Jews offered theirs, it may be fully presumed that he left nothing undone towards a due performance of the rite, which the present necessity required, or the law of God could demand.

The objection, that our Lord and his disciples appear to have sat or reclined at table all the time they ate what is supposed above, to have been the pass-over, contrary to the paschal institution, which required them to eat it standing, with their staves in their hands, their loins girded, and their shoes on, cannot be considered as having any great weight in it; for, though the terms ανεκειτο, Matt. xxvi. 20. and ανεπεσε, Luke xxii. 14. are used in reference to their eating that evening, and these words signify reclining at table, or on a couch, as is the custom of the Orientals, it does not follow that they must necessarily be restrained to that meaning; nor does it appear that this part of the ceremony was much attended to, perhaps not at all, in the latter days of the Jewish church.

The second opinion which we have to examine is this: Our Lord did eat a pass-over of his own instituting, but widely different from that eaten by the Jews.

Mr. Toinard, in his Greek Harmony of the Gospels, strongly contends, that our Lord did not eat what is commonly called the pass-over this year, but another, of a mystical kind. His chief arguments are the following:

It is indubitably evident, from the text of St. John, that the night on the beginning of which our Lord supped with his disciples, and instituted the holy sacrament, was not that on which the Jews celebrated the pass-over; but the preceding evening, on which the pass-over could not be legally offered. The conclusion is evident from the following passages: John xiii. 1. Now before the feast of the pass-over, Jesus knowing, &c. Ver. 2. And supper (not the paschal, but an ordinary supper) being ended, &c. Ver. 27. That thou doest, do quickly. Ver. 28. Now no one at the table knew for what intent he spake this. Ver. 29. For some thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him: Buy what we have need of against the feast, &c. Chap. xviii. 28. Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas to the hall of judgment, and it was early; and they themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the pass-over. Chap. xix. 14. And it was the preparation of the pass-over, and about the sixth hour. Now as it appears, that at this time the disciples thought our Lord had ordered Judas to go and bring what was necessary for the pass-over, and they were then supping together, it is evident that it was not the paschal lamb on which they were supping; and it is as evident, from the unwillingness of the Jews to go into the hall of judgment, that they had not as yet eaten the pass-over. These words are plain, and can be taken in no other sense, without offering them the greatest violence.

Mr. Toinard, having found that our Lord was crucified on the sixth day of the week, (Friday) during the paschal solemnity, in the thirty-third year of the vulgar æra, and that the paschal moon of that year was not in conjunction with the sun till the afternoon of Thursday the 19th of March, and that the new moon could not be seen in Judea until the following day, (Friday) concluded, that the intelligence of the φασις, or appearance of the new moon, could not be made by the witnesses to the beth din, or senate, sooner than Saturday morning, the 21st of March. That the first day of the first Jewish month Nisan, could not commence that thirty-third year sooner than the setting of the sun on Friday, March 20th; and consequently, that Friday, April 3d, on which Christ died, was the 14th of Nisan, (not the 15th) the day appointed by the law for the celebration of the pass-over. All these points he took care to have ascertained by the nicest astronomical calculations, in which he was assisted by a very eminent astronomer and mathematician, Bullialdus (Mr. Bouilleau.)

These two last opinions, apparently contradictory, and which alone, of all those offered on the subject, deserve consideration, may be brought to harmonize. That Jesus ate the pass-over with his disciples the evening before the Jews ate theirs, seems pretty clearly proved from the text of St. Luke, and the arguments founded on that text.

All that is assumed there, to make the whole consistent, is, that the Jews that year held the pass-over both on the 13th and 14th of Nisan, because of the reasons already assigned; and that therefore Peter and John, who were employed on this business, might have got the blood legally sprinkled by the hands of a priest, which was all that was necessary to the legality of the rite.

But, secondly, should it appear improbable that such double celebration took place at this time, and that our Lord could not have eaten the pass-over that year with his disciples, as he died on the very hour on which the paschal lamb was slain, and consequently before he could legally eat the pass-over; how then can the text of St. Luke be reconciled with this fact? I answer, with the utmost ease; by substituting a pass-over for the pass-over, and simply assuming, that our Lord at this time instituted the holy EUCHARIST, in place of the PASCHAL LAMB: and thus it will appear, he ate a pass-over with his disciples the evening before his death, viz. the mystical pass-over, or sacrament of his body and blood: and that this was the pass-over which he so ardently longed to eat with his disciples before he suffered. This is the opinion of Mr. Toinard, and, if granted, solves every difficulty. Thus the whole controversy is brought into a very narrow compass: Our Lord did eat a pass-over with his disciples some short time before he died:—the question is, what pass-over did he eat—the regular legal pass-over, or a mystical one? That he ate a pass-over, is, I think, demonstrated: but whether the literal or mystical one, is a matter of doubt. On this point, good and learned men may innocently hesitate and differ: but on either hypothesis, the text of the Evangelists is unimpeachable, and all shadow of contradiction done away: for the question then rests on the peculiar meaning of names and words. On this hypothesis, the preparation of the pass-over must be considered as implying no more than—1. Providing a convenient room. 2. Bringing water for the baking on the following day, because on that day the bringing of the water would have been unlawful. 3. Making inquisition for the leaven, that every thing of this kind might be removed from the house where the pass-over was to be eaten, according to the very strict and awful command of God, Exod. xii. 15—20. xxiii. 15. xxxiv. 25. These it is probable, were the acts of preparation which the disciples were commanded to perform, Matt. xxvi. 18. Mark xiv. 13, 14. Luke xxii. 8—11. and which, on their arrival at the city, they punctually executed. See Matt. xxvi. 19. Mark xiv. 16. Luke xxii. 13. Thus every thing was prepared, and the holy sacrament instituted, which should, in the Christian church, take place of the Jewish pass-over, and continue to be a memorial of the sacrifice which Christ was about to make, by his death on the cross: for as the paschal lamb had showed forth his death till he came, this death fulfilled the design of the rite, and sealed up the vision and prophecy.

All preparations for the true paschal sacrifice being now made, Jesus was immediately betrayed, shortly after apprehended, and in a few hours expired upon the cross. It is therefore very likely, that he did not literally eat the pass-over this year; and may I not add, that it is more than probable, that the pass-over was not eaten in the whole land of Judea on this occasion. The rending of the vail of the temple, Matt. xxvii. 51. Mark xv. 38. Luke xxiii. 45. the terrible earthquake, Matt. xxvii. 51—54. the dismal and unnatural darkness, which was over the whole land of Judea, from the sixth hour (twelve o'clock) to the ninth hour, (i. e. three o'clock in the afternoon) with all the other prodigies which took place on this awful occasion, we may naturally conclude, were more than sufficient to terrify and appal this guilty nation, and totally to prevent the celebration of the paschal ceremonies. Indeed, the time in which killing the sacrifices, and sprinkling the blood of the lambs, should have been performed, was wholly occupied with these most dreadful portents; and it would be absurd to suppose, that under such terrible evidences of the divine indignation, any religious ordinances or festive preparations could possibly have taken place.

My readers will probably be surprised to see the preceding opinions so dissentient among themselves, and the plausible reasons by which they are respectively supported, where each seems by turns to prevail. When I took up the question, I had no suspicion that it was encumbered with so many difficulties. These I now feel and acknowledge; nevertheless, I think the plan of reconciling the texts of the Evangelists, particularly St. Luke and St. John, which I have adopted above, is natural; and I am in hopes will not appear altogether unsatisfactory to my readers. On the subject, circumstanced as it is, hypothesis alone can prevail; for indubitable evidence and certainty cannot be obtained. The morning of the resurrection, is probably the nearest period in which accurate information on this point can be expected. Je suis trompé, says Bouilleau, si cette question peut être jamais bien eclaircie. "If I be not mistaken, this question will never be thoroughly understood." It would be presumptuous to say, Christ did eat the pass-over this last year of his ministry: it would be as hazardous to say he did not eat it. The middle way is the safest; and it is that which is adopted above. One thing is sufficiently evident, that Christ our paschal lamb has been sacrificed for us; and that he has instituted the holy eucharist, to be a perpetual memorial of that his precious death until his coming again: and they who with a sincere heart, and true faith in his passion and death, partake of it, shall be made partakers of his most blessed body and blood. Reader, praise God for the atonement, and rest not without an application of it to thy own soul.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVII.

Verse 1. When the morning was come] As soon as it was light—took counsel against Jesus. They had begun this counsel the preceding evening, see chap. xxvi. 59. But as it was contrary to all forms of law to proceed against a person's life by night, they seem to have separated for a few hours, and then, at the break of day, came together again, pretending to conduct the business according to the forms of law.

To put him to death] They had already determined his death, and pronounced the sentence of death on him. Chap. xxvi. 66. And now they assemble under the pretence of reconsidering the evidence, and deliberating on it, to give the greater appearance of justice to their conduct. They wished to make it appear, that "they had taken ample time to consider of it, and from the fullest conviction, by the most satisfactory and conclusive evidence, they had now delivered him into the hands of the Romans, to meet that death to which they had adjudged him."

Verse 2. They—delivered him to Pontius Pilate] The Sanhedrin had the power of life and death in their own hands in every thing that concerned religion; but as they had not evidence to put Christ to death, because of false doctrine, they wished to give countenance to their conduct by bringing in the civil power, and therefore they delivered him up to Pilate as one who aspired to regal dignities, and whom he must put to death, if he professed to be Cæsar's friend. Pontius Pilate governed Judea ten years under the emperor Tiberius, but having exercised great cruelties against the Samaritans, they complained of him to the emperor, in consequence of which he was deposed, and sent in exile to Vienna, in Dauphiny, where he killed himself two years after.

Verse 3. Judas—when he saw that he was condemned, repented] There is much of the wisdom and goodness of God to be seen in this part of Judas's conduct. Had our Lord been condemned to death on the evidence of one of his own disciples, it would have furnished infidels with a strong argument against Christ, and the Christian religion. "One of his own disciples knowing the whole imposture, declared it to the Jewish rulers, in consequence of which he was put to death as an impostor and deceiver." But the traitor being stung with remorse, came and acknowledged his crime, and solemnly declared the innocence of his Master, threw back the money which they gave him to induce him to do this villainous act;—and to establish the evidence which he now gave against them and himself, in behalf of the innocence of Christ, hanged himself, or died through excessive grief and contrition. Thus the character of Christ was rescued from all reproach; infidelity deprived of the power to cry "imposture!" and the Jewish rulers overwhelmed with eternal infamy. If it should ever be said, "One who knew him best delivered him up as an impostor"—to this it may be immediately answered, "The same person, struck with remorse, came and declared his own guilt, and Christ's innocence; accused and convicted the Jewish rulers, in the open council, of having hired him to do this iniquitous action, threw them back the bribe they had given him, and then hanged himself through distress and despair; concluding his iniquity in this business, was too great to be forgiven. Let him who chuses, after this plenary evidence to the innocence of Christ, to continue the objection, and cry out imposture! take heed that he go not and do LIKEWISE. Caiaphas, Pilate, and Judas have done so already, and I have known several who have called Christ an impostor, who have cut their own throats, shot, drowned, or hanged themselves. God is a jealous God, and highly resents every thing that is done or said against that eternal truth that came to man through Jesus Christ, by the Holy Spirit. Indeed there is one class of Deists, viz. those who are vicious in their lives, and virulent in their opposition to Christianity, who generally bring themselves to an untimely end.

Verse 4. Innocent blood.] Αιμα αθωον, a hebraism for an innocent man. But instead of αθωον, innocent, two ancient MSS. Syriac, Vulgate, Sahidic, Armenian, and all the Itala; Origen, Cyprian, Lucifer, Ambrose, Leo, read δικαιον, righteous, or just.

What is that to us?] What is it?—A great deal. You should immediately go and reverse the sentence you have pronounced, and liberate the innocent person. But this would have been justice, and that would have been a stranger at their tribunal.

Verse 5. In the temple] Ναος signifies, properly, the temple itself, into which none but the priests were permitted to enter; the temple, [a] and departed, and went and hanged himself.

6 And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood.

7 And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field to bury strangers in.

8 Wherefore that field was called [b] The field of blood unto this day.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

9 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, [c] And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, [d] whom they of the children of Israel did value;

10 And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.

Hanged himself.] Or was strangled—απηγξατο. Some eminent critics believe that he was only suffocated by excessive grief, and thus they think the account here given, will agree with that in Acts i. 18. Mr. Wakefield supports this meaning of the word with great learning and ingenuity. I have my doubts—the old method of reconciling the two accounts appears to me quite plausible, he went and strangled himself, and the rope breaking, he fell down, and by the violence of the fall his body was bursted, and his bowels gushed out. I have thought proper, on a matter of such difficulty, to use the word strangled, as possessing a middle meaning between choking or suffocation by excessive grief, and hanging, as an act of suicide. See the note on chap. x. ver. 4. Dr. Lightfoot is of opinion, that the Devil caught him up into the air, strangled him, and threw him down on the ground with violence, so that his body was burst, and his guts shed out! This was an ancient tradition.

Verse 6. The treasury] Κορβαναν—the place whither the people brought their free-will offerings for the service of the temple so called from the Hebrew קרבן korban, AN OFFERING, from קרב karab, he drew nigh, because the person who brought the gift came nigh to that place where God manifested his glory between the cherubim, over the mercy-seat in the most holy place. It is from this idea that the phrase to draw nigh to God is taken, which is so frequently used in the Sacred Writings.

Because it is the price of blood.] "What hypocrites! As one justly exclaims, to adjudge an innocent man to death, and break the eternal laws of justice and mercy without scruple, and to be, at the same time, so very nice in their attention to a ceremonial direction of the law of Moses? Thus it is that the Devil often deludes many, even among the priests, by a false and superstitious tenderness of conscience in things indifferent, while calumny, envy, oppression of the innocent, and a conformity to the world, give them no manner of trouble or disturbance." See Quesnel.

Verse 7. To bury strangers in.] Τοις ξενοις, the strangers, probably meaning, as some learned men conjecture, the Jewish strangers who might have come to Jerusalem, either to worship, or on some other business, and died there during their stay. See here, the very money for which the blessed Jesus was sold, becomes subservient to the purpose of mercy and kindness! The bodies of strangers have a place of rest in the field, purchased by the price at which his life was valued, and the souls of strangers and foreigners have a place of rest and refuge in his blood which was shed as a ransom price for the salvation of the whole world.

Verse 8. The field of blood] In vain do the wicked attempt to conceal themselves; God makes them instrumental in discovering their own wickedness. Judas by returning the money, and the priests by laying it out, raise to themselves an eternal monument, the one of his treachery, the others of their perfidiousness, and both of the innocence of Jesus Christ. As long as the Jewish polity continued, it might be said, this is the field that was bought from the potter with the money which Judas got from the high priests for betraying his Master; which he, in deep compunction of spirit, brought back to them, and they bought this ground for a burial place for strangers: for as it was the price of the blood of an innocent man, they did not think proper to let it rest in the treasury of the temple where the traitor had thrown it, who afterwards, in despair, went and hanged himself." What a standing proof must this have been of the innocence of Christ and of their perfidy!

Verse 9. Jeremy the prophet] The words quoted here are not found in the prophet Jeremiah, but in Zech. xi. 13. But St. Jerom says, that a Hebrew of the sect of the Nazarenes shewed him this prophecy in a Hebrew apocryphal copy of Jeremiah; but probably they were inserted there, only to countenance the quotation here.

One of Colbert's, a MS. of the eleventh century, has Ζαχαριου Zechariah, so has the later Syriac in the margin, and a copy of the Arabic quoted by Bengel. In a very elegant and correct MS. of the Vulgate, in my possession, written in the fourteenth century, Zachariam is in the margin, and Jeremiam in the text, but the former is written by a later hand. Jeremiah is wanting in two MSS. the Syriac, later Persic, two of the Itala, and in some other Latin copies. It is very likely that the original reading was δια του προφητου, and the name of no prophet mentioned. This is the more likely, as Matthew often omits the name of the prophet in his quotations. See chap. i. 22. ii. 5. 15 xiii. 35. xxi. 4. Bengel approves of the omission.

It was an ancient custom among the Jews, says Dr. Lightfoot, to divide the Old Testament into three parts, the first beginning with the Law was called THE LAW: the second beginning with the Psalms was called THE PSALMS: the third beginning with the prophet in question was called JEREMIAH: thus then the writings of Zechariah, and the other prophets being included in that division that began with Jeremiah, all quotations from it would go under the name of this prophet. If this be admitted, it solves the difficulty at once. Dr. Lightfoot quotes Baba Bathra, and Rabbi David Kimchi's preface to the prophet Jeremiah, as his authorities; and insists that the word Jeremiah is perfectly correct as standing at the head of that division from which the Evangelist quoted, and which gave its denomination to all the rest.

Verse 11. Before the governor] My old MS. English Bible translates ηγεμων, Wey, cheef justyse, Presedent

Art thou the King of the Jews?] The Jews had undoubtedly delivered him to Pilate as one who was rising up against the imperial authority, and assuming the regal office. See on ver. 2.

Verse 12. He answered nothing.] An answer to such accusations was not necessary, they sufficiently confuted themselves.

Verse 14. Marvelled greatly.] Silence under calumny manifests the utmost magnanimity. The chief priests did not admire this because it confounded them; but Pilate, who had no interest to serve by it, was deeply affected. This very silence was predicted, Isai. liii. 7.

Verse 15. The governor was wont to release] Whence this custom originated among the Jews is not known,—probably it was introduced by the Romans themselves, or by Pilate, merely to oblige the Jews, by shewing them this public token of respect; but if it originated with him, he must have had the authority of Augustus; for the Roman laws never gave such discretionary power to any governor.

Verse 16. A notable prisoner—Barabbas.] This person had, a short time before, raised an insurrection in Jerusalem, in which it appears, from Mark xv. 7. some lives were lost. In some MSS. and in the Armenian, and Syriac Hieros. this man has the surname of Jesus. Professor Birch has discovered this reading in a Vatican MS. written in 949, and numbered 354, in which is a marginal note which has been attributed to Anastasius, Bp. of Antioch, and to Chrysostom, which asserts that in the most ancient MSS. the passage was as follows: Τινα θελετε απο των δυω απολυσω υμιν, ΙΝ τον βαραββαν, η ΙΝ τον λεγομενον ΧΝ; Which of the two do you wish me to release unto you, Jesus Barabbas, or Jesus who is called Christ? As Jesus, or Joshua was a very common name among the Jews, and as the name of the father was often joined to that of the son, as Simon Barjonah, Simon, son of Jonah; so it is probable it was the case here, Jesus Barabba, Jesus, son of Abba, or Abbiah. If this name were originally written as above, which I am inclined to believe, the general omission of JESUS in the MSS. may be accounted for, from the over zealous scrupulosity of Christian copyists, who were unwilling that a murderer should, in the same verse, be honoured with the name of the Redeemer of the world. See Birch in New Test.

Verse 18. For envy] Δια φθονον, through malice. Then it was his business, as an upright Judge, to have dispersed this mob, and immediately released Jesus.

nothing to do with that just man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him.)

20 ¶ [a] But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus.

22 Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified.

Seeing malice is capable of putting even Christ himself to death, how careful should we be, not to let the least spark of it harbour in our breast. Let it be remembered that malice as often originates from envy as it does from anger.

Verse 19. I have suffered many things—in a dream] There is no doubt but God had appeared unto this woman, testifying the innocence of Christ, and shewing the evils which should pursue Pilate, if this innocent blood should be shed by his authority. See on ver. 2.

Verse 20. Ask Barabbas] Who had raised an insurrection, and committed murder—and to destroy Jesus, whose voice was never heard in their streets, and who had, during the space of three years and a half, gone about unweariedly from village to village, instructing the ignorant, healing the diseased, and raising the dead.

Verse 21. They said, Barabbas.] What a fickle crowd! A little before they all hailed him as the Son of David, and acknowledged him as a gift from God; now they prefer a murderer to him! But this it appears they did at the instigation of the chief priests. We see here how dangerous wicked priests are in the church of Christ; when pastors are corrupt, they are capable of inducing their flock to prefer Barabbas to Jesus, the world to God, and the pleasures of sense to the salvation of their souls. The invidious epithet which a certain statesman gave to the people at large, was, in its utmost latitude, applicable to these Jews,—they were a SWINISH MULTITUDE.

Verse 22. What shall I do then with Jesus? Shewing hereby, that it was his wish to release him.

Verse 23. What evil hath he done?] Pilate plainly saw that there was nothing laid to his charge, for which, consistently with the Roman laws, he could condemn him.

But they cried out the more] What strange fury and injustice! They could not answer Pilate's question, What evil hath he done? He had done none, and they knew he had done none; but they are determined on his death.

Verse 24. Pilate—took water, and washed his hands] Thus signifying his innocence. It was a custom among the Hebrews, Greeks, and Latins, to wash the hands in token of innocence, and to shew that they were pure from any imputed guilt. In case of an undiscovered murder, the elders of that city which was nearest to the place where the dead body was found, were required by the Law, Deut. xxi. 1—10. to wash their hands over the victim which was offered to expiate the crime, and make thus public protestation of their own innocence. David says, I will wash my hands in innocence, so shall I compass thine altar, Psal. xxvi. 6. As Pilate knew Christ was innocent, he should have prevented his death: he had the armed force at his command, and should have dispersed this infamous mob. Had he been charged with countenancing a seditious person, he could have easily cleared himself, had the matter been brought before the emperor. He therefore was inexcusable.

Verse 25. His blood be on us and on our children.] If this man be innocent, and we put him to death as a guilty person, may the punishment due to such a crime be visited upon us, and upon our children after us! What a dreadful imprecation! and how literally fulfilled! The notes on chap xxiv. will shew how they fell victims to their own imprecation, being visited with a series of calamities unexampled in the history of the world. They were visited with the same kind of punishment; for the Romans crucified them in such numbers when Jerusalem was taken, that there was found a deficiency of crosses for the condemned, and of places for the crosses. Their children or descendants have had the same curse entailed upon them, and continue to this day a proof of the innocence of Christ, the truth of his religion, and of the justice of God.

It has been thought that Pilate might have spared this additional cruelty of whipping; but it appears that it was a cummon custom to scourge those criminals which were to be crucified; (see Josephus De Bello, lib. ii. c. 25.) and lenity in Christ's case is not to be allowed: he must take all the misery in full tale.

Delivered him to be crucified.] Tacitus, the Roman historian, mentions the death of Christ in very remarkable terms:

Nero—quæsitissimis pœnis affecit, quos—vulgus CHRISTIANOS appellabat. Auctor nominis ejus CHRISTUS, qui Tiberio imperitante, per Procuratorem Pontium Pilatum supplicio affectus erat.—"Nero put those who commonly went by the name of Christians to the most exquisite tortures. The author of this name was CHRIST, who was capitally punished in the reign of TIBERIUS, by PONTIUS PILATE the PROCURATOR."

Verse 27. The common hall] Or, prætorium. Called so from the prætor, a principal magistrate among the Romans, whose business it was to administer justice in the absence of the consul. This place might be termed in English the court-house, or common hall.

Verse 28. Stripped him] Took off his mantle, or upper garment.

A scarlet robe.] Or, according to Mark and John, a purple robe, such as emperors and kings wore.

Verse 29. A crown of thorns] Στεφανον εξ ακανθων. It does not appear that this crown was intended to be an instrument of punishment or torture to his head, but rather, to render him ridiculous; for which cause also they put a reed in his hand, by way of sceptre, and bowed their knees, pretending to do him homage. The crown was not probably of thorns in our sense of the word: there are eminently learned men, who think that the crown was formed of the herb Acanthus; and Bishop Pearce and Michaelis are of this opinion. Mark, chap. xv. 17. and John, chap. xix. 5. term it στεφανον ακανθινον, which may very well be translated an acanthine crown, or wreath formed out of the branches of the herb acanthus, or bear's foot. This, however, is a prickly plant, though nothing like thorns, in the common meaning of that word. Many Christians have gone astray in magnifying the sufferings of Christ from this circumstance; and painters, the worst of all commentators, frequently represent Christ with a crown of long thorns, which one standing by is striking into his head with a stick. These representations engender ideas both false and absurd.

There is a passage produced from Philo by Dr. Lardner which casts much light on these indignities offered to our blessed Lord.

"Caligula, the successor of Tiberius, gave Agrippa the tetrarchy of his uncle Philip, with the right of wearing a diadem or crown. When he came to Alexandria, on his way to his tetrarchate, the inhabitants of that place, filled with envy at the thoughts of a Jew having the title of king, shewed their indignation in the following way. They brought one Carabas (a sort of an ideot) into the theatre; and having placed him on a lofty seat, that he might be seen by all, they put a diadem upon his head, made of the herb Byblos, (the ancient papyrus, or paper flag;) his body they covered with a mat or carpet, instead of a royal cloke. One seeing a piece of reed, παπυρον, (the stem, probably, of the aforesaid herb) lying on the ground, picked it up, and put it in his hand in place of a sceptre. Having thus given him a mock royal dress, several young fellows, with poles on their shoulders, came and stood on each side of him as his guards. Then there came people, some to pay their homage to him, some to ask justice, and some to consult him on affairs of state; and the crowd that stood round about, made a confused noise, crying Mario, that being, as they say, the Syriac word for LORD; thereby shewing, that they intended to ridicule Agrippa, who was a Syrian." See PHILO, Flacc. p. 970. and Dr. Lardner, Works, vol. I. p. 159.

There is the most remarkable coincidence between this account and that given by the Evangelists; and the conjecture concerning the acanthus, will probably find no inconsiderable support from the byblos and papyrus of Philo. This plant, Pliny says, grows to ten cubits long in the stem; and the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, king of the Jews!

30 And [a] they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head.

31 And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, [b] and led him away to crucify him.

flowers were used ad deos coronandos, for CROWNING THE GODS. See Hist. Nat. lib xiii. c. 11.

The reflections of pious Quesnel on these insults offered to our blessed Lord are worthy of serious attention. "Let the crown of thorns make those Christians blush, who throw away so much time, pains, and money, in beautifying and adorning a sinful head. Let the world do what it will to render the royalty and mysteries of Christ contemptible, it is my glory to serve a King thus debased; my salvation, to adore that which the world despises; and my redemption, to go unto God through the merits of him who was crowned with thorns."

Verse 30. And they spit upon him] "Let us pay our adoration," says the same pious writer, "and humble ourselves in silence at the sight of a spectacle which faith alone renders credible, and which our senses would hardly endure. Jesus Christ, in this condition, preaches to the kings of the earth this truth: that their sceptres are but reeds, with which themselves shall be smitten, bruised, and crushed at his tribunal, if they do not use them here to the advancement of his kingdom."

Verse 32. A man of Cyrene—him they compelled to bear his cross.] In John, chap. xix. 16, 17. we are told Christ himself bore the cross, and this, it is likely, he did for a part of the way; but being exhausted with the scourging and other cruel usage which he had received, he was found incapable of bearing it alone; therefore they obliged Simon, not, I think, to bear it entirely, but to assist Christ by bearing a part of it. It was a constant practice among the Romans, to oblige criminals to bear their cross to the place of execution: insomuch that Plutarch makes use of it as an illustration of the misery of vice. "Every kind of wickedness produces its own particular torment, just as every malefactor, when he is brought forth to execution, carries his own cross." See Lardner's Credib. Vol. I. p. 160.

Verse 33. A place called Golgotha] From the Hebrew גלגלת or גלגלתה golgoleth, a skull, probably so called from the many skulls of those who had suffered crucifixion and other capital punishments, scattered up and down in the place. It is the same as Calvary, Calvaria, i. e. calvi capitis area, the place of bare skulls. Some think the place was thus called, because it was in the form of a human skull. It is likely that it was the place of public execution, similar to the Gemoniæ Scalæ at Rome.

Verse 34. They gave him vinegar—mingled with gall] Perhaps the word χολη, commonly translated gall, signifies no more than bitters of any kind. It was a common custom to administer a stupifying potion compounded of sour wine, which is the same as vinegar, from the French vinaigre, frankincense, and myrrh, to condemned persons; to help to alleviate their sufferings, or so disturb their intellect, that they might not be sensible of them. The Rabbins say, that they put a grain of frankincense into a cup of strong wine; and they ground this on Prov. xxxi. 6. Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, i. e. who is condemned to death. Some person out of kindness, appears to have administered this to our blessed Lord; but he, as in all other cases, determining to endure the fulness of pain, refused to take what was thus offered to him, chusing to tread the wine-press alone. Instead of οξος, vinegar, several excellent MSS. and Versions have οινον, wine; but as sour wine is said to have been a general drink of the common people, and Roman soldiers, it being the same as vinegar, it is of little consequence which reading is here adopted. This custom of giving stupifying potions to condemned malefactors, is alluded to in Prov. xxxi. 6. Give strong drink, שכר shekar, inebriating drink, to him who is ready to PERISH; and wine to him who is BITTER of soul—because he is just going to suffer the punishment of death. And thus the Rabbins, as we have seen above, understand it. See Lightfoot and Schoetgen.

Michaelis offers an ingenious exposition of this place. "Immediately after Christ was fastened to the cross, they gave him, according to Matt. xxvii. 34. vinegar mingled with gall; but according to Mark xv. 23. they offered him wine mingled with myrrh. That St. Mark's account is the right one, is probable from this circumstance, that Christ refused to drink what was offered him, as appears from both Evangelists. Wine mixed with myrrh was given to malefactors at the place of execution, to intoxicate them, and make them less sensible to pain. Christ, therefore, with great propriety, refused the aid of such remedies. But if vinegar was offered him, which was taken merely to assuage thirst, there could be no reason for his rejecting it. Besides, he tasted it before he rejected it; and therefore he must have found it different from that which, if offered to him, he was ready to receive. To solve this difficulty, we must suppose that the words used in the Hebrew Gospel of St. Matthew, were such as agreed with the account given by St. Mark, and at the same time were capable of the construction which was put on them by St. Matthew's Greek translator. Suppose St. Matthew wrote חליא במריא (chaleea bemireera) which signifies, sweet wine with bitters, or sweet wine and myrrh, as we find it in Mark; and Matthew's translator overlooked the yod י in חליא (chaleea) he took it for חלא (chala) which signifies vinegar; and bitter, he translated by χολη, as it is often used in the Septuagint. Nay, St. Matthew may have written חלא, and have still meant to express sweet wine; if so, the difference only consisted in the points; for the same word which, when pronounced chalé, signifies sweet, denotes vinegar, as soon as it is pronounced chala."

With this conjecture Dr. Marsh (Michaelis's translator) is not satisfied; and therefore finds a Chaldee word for οινος wine, which may easily be mistaken for one that denotes οξος vinegar; and likewise a Chaldee word, which signifies σμυρνα, (myrrh) which may be easily mistaken for one that denotes χολη (gall.) "Now," says he, "חמר (chamar) or חמרא (chamera) really denotes οινος (wine) and חמין (chamets) or חמצא (chametsa) really denotes οξος, (vinegar.) Again, מורא (mura) really signifies σμυρνα, (myrrh) and מררא (murera) really signifies χολη, (gall.) If, then, we suppose that the original Chaldee text was חמרא הליט במורא (chamera haleet bemura) wine mingled with myrrh, which is not at all improbable, as it is the reading of the Syriac version, at Mark xv. 23. it might easily have been mistaken for חמצא הליט במררא (chametsa haleei bemurera) vinegar mingled with gall." This is a more ingenious conjecture than that of Michaelis. See Marsh's notes to Michaelis, Vol. III. part 2d. p. 127-28. But as that kind of sour wine, which was used by the Roman soldiers and common people, appears to have been termed οινος, and vinegar (vin aigre) is sour wine, it is not difficult to reconcile the two accounts, in what is most material to the facts here recorded.

Verse 35. And they crucified him] Crucifixion properly means the act of nailing or tying to a cross. The cross was made of two beams, either crossing at the top at right angles, like a T, or in the middle of their length like an X. There was besides, a piece on the centre of the transverse beam, to which the accusation or statement of the crime of the culprit was attached, and a piece of wood which projected from the middle, on which the person sat, as on a sort of saddle; and by which the whole body was supported. Tertullian mentions this particularly: Nobis, says he, tota crux imputatur, cum antenna scilicet sua, et cum illo SEDILIS excessu. Advers. Nationes, lib. ii. Justin Martyr, in his Dialogue with Trypho the Jew, gives precisely the same description of the cross; and it is worthy of observation, that both he and Tertullian flourished before the punishment of the cross had been abolished. The cross on which our Lord suffered was of the former kind; being thus represented in all old monuments, coins, and crosses. St. Jerom compares it to a bird flying, a man swimming, or praying with his arms extended. The punishment of the cross was inflicted among the ancient Hindoos from time immemorial for various species of theft; see Halhead's Code of Gentoo Laws, p. 248. and was common among the Syrians, Egyptians, Persians, Africans, Greeks, and Romans; it is also still in use among the Chinese, who do not nail, but tie the criminal to it. It was probably the Romans who introduced it among the Jews. Before they became subject to the Romans, they used hanging or gibbeting, but not the cross. This punishment was the most dreadful of all others, both for the shame and pain of it: and so scandalous, that it was inflicted as the last mark of detestation, upon the vilest of people. It was the punishment of robbers and murderers, provided they were slaves; but if they were free, it was thought too infamous a punishment for such, let their crimes be what they might.

The body of the criminal was fastened to the upright beam by nailing or tying the feet to it, and on the transverse piece by nailing, and sometimes tying the hands to it. As the hands and feet are the grand instruments of motion, they are provided with a greater quantity of nerves; and the nerves in those places, especially the hands, are peculiarly sensible. Now as the nerves are the instruments of all sensation or feeling, wounds in the parts where they abound, must be peculiarly painful; especially when inflicted with such rude instruments as large nails, forced through the places by the violence of a hammer; thus tearing asunder the nervous fibrillæ, delicate tendons, and small bones of those parts. This punishment will appear dreadful enough, when it is considered, that the person was permitted to hang (the whole weight of his body being borne up by his nailed hands and the projecting piece which passed between the thighs) till he perished through agony and lack of food. Some, we are informed, have lived three whole days in this state. It is true that, in some cases, there was a kind of mercy shewn to the sufferer, which will appear sufficiently horrid, when it is known that it consisted in breaking the bones of their legs and thighs to pieces with a large hammer, in order to put them the sooner out of pain! Such a coup de grace as this, could only spring from those tender mercies of the wicked, which God represents as cruelty itself. Some were permitted to hang on the cross, till eaten up by birds of prey, which often began to tear them before life was extinct. Horace alludes to this punishment, and from what he says, it seems to have been inflicted on slaves, &c. not on trifling occasions, but for the most horrible crimes.

The anguish occasioned by crucifixion, was so intense, that crucio, (a cruce) among the Romans, was the common word by which they expressed suffering and torment in general.

And parted his garments, casting lots] These were the Roman soldiers, who had crucified him: and it appears from this circumstance, that in those ancient times, the spoils of the criminal were claimed by the executioners, as they are to the present day. It appears that they divided a part, and cast lots for the rest: viz. for his seamless coat, John xix. 23, 24.

That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots.] The whole of this quotation should be omitted, as making no part originally of the genuine text of this Evangelist. It is omitted by almost every MS. of worth and importance, by almost all the Versions, and the most reputable of the primitive Fathers, who have written or commented on the place. The words are plainly an interpolation, borrowed from John xix. 24. in which place they will be properly noticed.

Verse 36. They watched him] To prevent his disciples or relatives, from taking away the body, or affording any relief to the sufferer.

Verse 37. His accusation] It was a common custom to affix a label to the cross, giving a statement of the crime for which the person suffered. This is still the case in China, when a person is crucified. Sometimes a person was employed to carry this before the criminal, while going to the place of punishment.

It is with much propriety, that Matthew calls this αἰτία, accusation; for it was false, that ever Christ pretended to be KING OF THE JEWS, in the sense the inscription held forth: he was accused of this, but there was no proof of the accusation; however it was affixed to the cross. From John xix. 21. we find that the Jews wished this to be a little altered: Write, said they, that HE said, I am king of the Jews; thus endeavouring by the addition of a vile lie, to countenance their own conduct, in putting him to death. But this Pilate refused to do. Both Luke, chap. xxiii. 38. and John, chap. xix. 20. say, that this accusation was written in Greek, Latin, and Hebrew. In those three languages, we may conceive the label to stand thus, according to the account given by St. John; the Hebrew being the mixed dialect then spoken.

phetic declaration, Isai. liii. 12. and the Jews placed him between these two, perhaps to intimate, that he was the worst felon of the three.

Verse 39. Wagging their heads] In token of contempt.

Verse 40. Thou that destroyest] Who didst pretend that thou couldst have destroyed the temple, and built it up again in three days—This malicious torturing of our Lord's words, has been noticed before. Cruelty is obliged to take refuge in lies, in order to vindicate its infamous proceedings.

If thou be the Son of God] Or rather, Υιος του Θεου, A son of God, i. e. a peculiar favourite of the Most High; not Ο Υιος του Θεου, THE Son of God. "It is not to be conceived," says a learned man, "that every passenger who was going to the city, had a competent knowledge of Christ's supernatural conception by the Holy Spirit, or an adequate comprehension of his character as the Messiah, and (κατ' εξοχην) THE SON OF GOD. There is not a single passage, where Jesus is designed to be pointed out as the MESSIAH, THE SON OF GOD, where the article is omitted: nor, on the other hand, is this designation ever specified without the article, thus, Ο Υιος του Θεου. See chap. xvi. 16. xxvi. 63. xxviii. 19."

Verse 41. Chief priests—Scribes and Elders] To these, several ancient MSS. and Versions add, και Φαρισαιων, and Pharisees. But though the authority for this reading is respectable, yet it does not appear that the Pharisees joined in with the others in the condemnation of our Lord. Probably his discourses and parables, related in some of the preceding chapters, which were spoken directly to them, had so far convinced them, that they would at least have no hand in putting him to death. All the infamy of this seems to fall upon the PRIESTS, Scribes, and Elders.

Verse 42. He saved others; himself he cannot save.] Or, Cannot he save himself? Several MSS. read this with the mark of interrogation as above; and this makes the sarcasm still more keen.

A high-priest who designs to destroy the temple of God; a saviour who saves not himself; and the Son of God crucified; these are the contradictions which give offence to Jews and libertines. But a high-priest who dispels the types and shadows, only that he may disclose the substance of religion, and become the minister of a heavenly sanctuary; a saviour who dies only to be the victim of salvation; and the Son of God who confines his power within the bounds of the cross, to establish the righteousness of faith: this is what a Christian adores, this is the foundation of his hope, and the fountain of his present comfort and final blessedness. See Quesnel.

We will believe him] Instead of αυτῳ, him, many excellent MSS. have επ' αυτῳ, IN him: this is a reading which Griesbach and other eminent critics have adopted.

Verse 43. If he will have him] Or, if he delight in him—ει θελει αυτον. The verbs θελω and εθελω, are used by the Septuagint in more than forty places for the Hebrew חפץ chaphets, which signifies, earnestly to desire or delight in. Now as this is a quotation from Psal. xxii. 9. He trusted on the Lord, that he would deliver him; let him deliver him, (כי חפץ בו ki chaphets bo) for he HATH DELIGHTED IN HIM:—οτι θελει αυτον, Sept. This will sufficiently vindicate the above translation; as the Evangelist quotes the words from that version, with the simple change of ει, if, for οτι, because.

Verse 44. The thieves also—cast the same in his teeth.] That is, one of the robbers; for one, we find, was a penitent, Luke xxiii. 39, 40. See this form of expression accounted for, on chap xxvi. 8.

Verse 45. There was darkness over all the land] I am of opinion, that πασαν την γην does not mean all the world, but only the land of Judea. So the word is used chap. xxiv. 30. Luke iv. 25. and in other places. Several eminent critics are of this opinion: Beza defends this meaning of the word, and translates the Greek super universam REGIONEM, over the whole COUNTRY. Besides, it is evident that the evangelists speak of things that happened in Judea, the place of their residence. It is plain enough there was a darkness in Jerusalem, and over all Judea; and probably over all the people among whom Christ had for more than three years preached the everlasting gospel; and that this darkness was supernatural is evident from this, that it happened during the Pass-over, which was celebrated only at the full moon, a time in which it was impossible for the sun to be eclipsed. But many suppose the darkness was over the whole world, and think there is sufficient evidence of this in ancient authors. PHLEGON and THALLUS, who flourished in the beginning of the second century, are supposed to speak of this. The former says, "In the fourth year of the 202d Olympiad, there was an extraordinary eclipse of the sun: at the sixth hour, the day was turned into dark night, so that the stars in heaven were seen; and there was an earthquake in Bithynia, which overthrew many houses in the city of Nice." This is the substance of what Phlegon is reputed to have said on this subject;—but 1. All the authors who quote him differ, and often very materially, in what they say was found in him. 2. Phlegon says nothing of Judea: what he says is, that in such an Olympiad (some say the 102d, others the 202d) there was an eclipse in Bithynia, and an earthquake at Nice. 3. Phlegon does not say, that the earthquake happened at the time of the eclipse. 4. Phlegon does not intimate that this darkness was extraordinary, or that the eclipse happened at the full of the moon, or that it lasted three hours. These circumstances could not have been omitted by him, if he had known them. 5. Phlegon speaks merely of an ordinary, though perhaps total eclipse of the sun, and cannot mean the darkness mentioned by the Evangelists. 6. Phlegon speaks of an eclipse that happened in some year of the 102d or 202d Olympiad; and therefore little stress can be laid on what he says, as applying to this event.

The quotation from THALLUS, made by AFRICANIUS, found in the Chronicle of SYNCELLUS, of the eighth century, is allowed by eminent critics to be of little importance. This speaks "of a darkness over all the world, and an earthquake which threw down many houses in Judea and in other parts of the earth." It may be necessary to observe, that THALLUS is quoted by several of the ancient ecclesiastical writers, for other matters, but never for this: and that the time in which he lived is so very uncertain, that Dr. Lardner supposes there is room to think, he lived rather before than after Christ.

DIONYSIUS the Areopagite, is supposed to have mentioned this event in the most decided manner: for being at Heliopolis in Egypt with his friend Apollophanes, when our Saviour suffered, they there saw a wonderful eclipse of the sun, whereupon Dionysius said to his friend, "Either God himself suffers, or sympathises with the sufferer." It is enough to say of this man, that all the writings attributed to him are known to be spurious, and are proved to be forgeries of the fifth or sixth century. Whoever desires to see more on this subject, may consult Dr. Lardner, (vol. vii. p. 371. ed. 1788.) a man whose name should never be mentioned but with respect, notwithstanding the peculiarities of his religious creed; who has done more in the service of divine revelation than most divines in Christendom; and who has raised a monument to the perpetuity of the Christian religion, which all the infidels in creation shall never be able to pull down or deface.

This miraculous darkness should have caused the enemies of Christ to understand, that he was the light of the world, and that because they did not walk in it, it was now taken away from them.

Verse 46. My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me?] These words are quoted by our Lord from Psal. xxii. 1. they are of very great importance, and should be carefully considered.

Some suppose "that the divinity had now departed from Christ, and that his human nature was left unsupported to bear the punishment due to men for their sins." But this is by no means to be admitted, as it would deprive his sacrifice of its infinite merit, and consequently leave the sin of the world without an atonement. Take deity away from any redeeming act of Christ, and redemption is ruined. Others imagine, that our Lord spoke these words to the Jews only, to prove to them that he was the Messiah. "The Jews," say they, "believed this psalm to speak of the Messiah: they quoted the eighth verse of it against Christ—He trusted in God that he would deliver him; let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him. (See this chap. ver. 43.) To which our Lord immediately answers, My God! my God! &c. thus shewing that he was the person of whom the Psalmist prophesied." I have doubts concerning the propriety of this interpretation.

It has been asked, What language is it that our Lord spoke? Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani. Some say it is Hebrew—others Syriac. I say, as the Evangelists quote it, it is neither. St. Matthew comes nearest the Hebrew, אלי אלי למה עזבתני Eli, Eli, lamah âzabthani, in the words Ηλι, Ηλι, λαμα σαβαχθανι, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani.

And St. Mark comes nearest the Syriac, chap. xv. 34.

ܐܠܗܝ ܐܠܗܝ ܠܡܢܐ ܫܒܩܬܢܝ

Alohi, Alohi, l'mono shebachtheni, in the words Ελωι, Ελωι, λαμμα σαβαχθανι, Eloi, Eloi, lamma sabachthani. It is worthy of note, that a Hebrew MS. of the twelfth century, instead of עזבתני âzabthani, forsaken me, reads שכחתני shechachthani, FORGOTTEN me. This word makes a very good sense, and comes nearer to the sabachthani of the Evangelists. It may be observed also, that the words, Why hast thou FORGOTTEN me? are often used by David and others, in times of oppression and distress. See Psal. xlii. 9.

Some have taken occasion from these words, to depreciate the character of our blessed Lord. "They are unworthy," say they, "of a man who suffers, conscious of his innocence, and argue imbecility, impatience, and despair." This is by no means fairly deducible from the passage. However, some think that the words, as they stand in the Hebrew and Syriac, are capable of a translation which destroys all objections, and obviates every difficulty. The particle למה lamah, may be translated to what—to whom—to what kind or sort—to what purpose or profit: Gen. xxv. 32. xxxii. 29. xxxiii. 15. Job ix. 29. Jer. vi. 20. xx. 18. Amos v. 18. and the verb עזב âzab signifies to leave—to deposit—to commit to the care of. See Gen. xxxix. 6. Job xxxix. 11. Psal. x. 14. and Jer. xlix. 11. The words taken in this way, might be thus translated: My God! my God! to what sort of persons hast thou left me? The words thus understood are rather to be referred to the wicked Jews, than to our Lord, and are an exclamation indicative of the obstinate wickedness of his crucifiers, who steeled their hearts against every operation of the Spirit and power of God. See Ling. Brit. Reform. by B. Martin. p. 36.

Through the whole of the Sacred Writings, God is represented as doing those things, which, in the course of his providence, he only permits to be done; therefore, the words, to whom hast thou left or given me up, are only a form of expression for, "How astonishing is the wickedness of those persons into whose hands I am fallen!" If this interpretation be admitted, it will free this celebrated passage from much embarrassment, and make it speak a sense consistent with itself, and with the dignity of the Son of God.

The words of St. Mark, chap. xv. 34. agree pretty nearly with this translation of the Hebrew: Εις τι με εγκατελιπες; To what [sort of persons, understood] hast thou left me? A literal translation of the passage in the Syriac Testament, gives a similar sense: Ad quid dereliquisti me? "To what hast thou abandoned me?" And an ancient copy of the old Itala version, a Latin translation before the time of St. Jerom, renders the words thus: Quare me in opprobrium dedisti? "Why hast thou abandoned me to reproach?"

It may be objected, that this can never agree with the ινατί, why, of Matthew. To this it is answered, that ινατί must have here the same meaning as εις τι—as the translation of למה lama; and that if the meaning be at all different, we must follow that Evangelist who expresses most literally the meaning of the original: and let it be observed, that the Septuagint often translate למה by ινατί, instead of εις τι, which evidently proves that it often had the same meaning. Of this criticism I say, Valet quod valet, Let it pass for no more than it is worth: the subject is difficult:—but whatever may be thought of the above mode of interpretation, one thing is certain, viz. That the words could not be used by our Lord, in the sense in which they are generally understood. This is sufficiently evident; for he well knew why he was come unto that hour; nor could he be forsaken of God, in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. The Deity however, might restrain so much of its consolatory support, as to leave the human nature fully sensible of all its sufferings; so that the consolations might not take off any part of the keen edge of his passion: and this was necessary to make his sufferings meritorious. And it is probable, that this is all that is intended by our Lord's quotation from the twenty-second Psalm. Taken in this view, the words convey an unexceptionable sense, even in the common translation.

Verse 47. This man calleth for Elias.] Probably these were hellenistic Jews, who did not fully understand the meaning of our Lord's words. Elijah was daily expected to appear as the forerunner of the Messiah; whose arrival, under the character of a mighty prince, was generally supposed to be at hand throughout the East. See Mal. iii. 23. Matt. ii. 2—4. xvii. 10—12.

Verse 48. Took a spunge] This being the most convenient way to reach a liquid to his mouth, tied it on a reed, that they might be able to reach his lips with it. This reed, as we learn from St. John, was a stalk of hyssop, which, in that country, must have grown to a considerable magnitude. This appears also to have been done in mercy, to alleviate his sufferings. See ver. 34.

Verse 49. After this verse, BCL. and five others add, another taking a spear, pierced his side, and there came out blood and water. Several of the Fathers add the same words here: they appear, however, to be an interpolation from John xix. 34.

Verse 50. Yielded up the ghost.] Αφηκε το πνευμα, he dismissed the spirit. He himself willingly gave up that life, which it was impossible for man to take away. It is not said that he hung on the cross till he died through pain and agony; nor is it said that his bones were broken, the sooner to put him out of pain, and to hasten his death; but that himself dismissed the soul, that he might thus become, not a forced sacrifice, but a free-will offering for sin.

Now, as our English word ghost, from the Anglo-Saxon gaꝑc gast, an inmate, inhabitant, guest, (a casual visitant,) also a spirit, is now restricted among us to the latter meaning, always signifying the immortal spirit or soul of man, the guest of the body; and as giving up the spirit, ghost, or soul, is an act not proper to man, though commending it to God, in our last moments, is both an act of faith and piety; and as giving up the ghost, i. e. dismissing his spirit from his body, is attributed to Jesus Christ, to whom alone it is proper, I therefore object against its use in every other case.

Every man, since the fall, has not only been liable to death, but has deserved it; as all have forfeited their lives because of sin. Jesus Christ, as born immaculate, and having never sinned, had not forfeited his life; and therefore may be considered as naturally and properly immortal. No man, says he, taketh it, my life, from me, but I lay it down of myself: I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again; therefore doth the Father love me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again, John x. 17, 18. Hence we rightly translate Matt. xxvii. 50. αφηκε το πνευμα, he gave up the ghost; i. e. he dismissed his spirit, that he might die for the sin of the world. The Evangelist St. John (xix. 30.) makes use of an expression to the same import, which we translate in the same way: παρεδωκε το πνευμα, he delivered up his spirit. We translate Mark xv. 37. and Luke xxiii. 46. he gave up the ghost, but not correctly, because the word in both these places is very different—εξεπνευσε, he breathed his last, or expired; though in the latter place, Luke xxiii. 46. there is an equivalent expression—O Father, into thy hands, παρατιθεμαι το πνευμα μου, I commit my spirit; i. e. I place my soul in thy hand: proving that the act was his own; that no man could take his life away from him; that he did not die by the perfidy of his disciple, or the malice of the Jews, but by his own free act. Thus HE LAID DOWN his life for the sheep. Of Ananias and Sapphira, Acts v. 5, 10. and of Herod, Acts xii. 23. our translation says they gave up the ghost; but the word in both places is εξεψυξε, which simply means to breath out, to expire, or die: but in no case, either by the Septuagint in the Old, or any of the sacred writers in the New Testament, is αφηκε το πνευμα, or παρεδωκε το πνευμα, he dismissed his spirit, or delivered up his spirit, spoken of any person but Christ. Abraham, Isaac, Ishmael, Jacob, &c. breathed their last; Ananias, Sapphira, and Herod, expired; but none, Jesus Christ excepted, gave up the ghost, dismissed, or delivered up his own spirit, and was consequently free among the dead. Of the patriarchs, &c. the Septuagint use the word εκλειπων, failing; or κατεπαυσεν, he ceased, or rested.

Verse 51. The veil of the temple was rent] That is, the veil which separated the holy place where the priests ministered, from the holy of holies, into which the high priest only entered, and that once a year, to make a general expiation for the sins of the people. This rending of the veil was emblematical, and pointed out, that the separation between Jews and Gentiles was now abolished, and that the privilege of the high priest was now communicated to all mankind: ALL might henceforth have access to the throne of grace, through the one great atonement and mediator, the Lord Jesus. See this beautifully illustrated in Heb. x. 19, 20, 21, 22.

Verse 52. And the graves were opened] By the earthquake, and many bodies of saints which slept, i. e. were dead, sleep being a common expression for death in the scriptures.

Verse 53. And came out of the graves after his resurrection] Not BEFORE, as some have thought, for Christ was himself the FIRST FRUITS of them who slept, 1 Cor. xv. 20. The graves were opened at his death, by the earthquake, and the bodies came out at his resurrection.

And appeared unto many.] Thus establishing the truth of our Lord's resurrection in particular, and of the resurrection of the body in general, by many witnesses. Quesnel's reflections on these passages may be very useful. 1. "The veil being rent, shews, that his death is to put an end to the figurative worship, and to establish the true religion. 2. The earthquake; that this dispensation of the gospel is to make known through the earth the judgments of God against sin and sinners. 3. The rocks being rent, declare that the sacrifice of Christ is to make way for the grace of repentance. 4. The graves being opened, that it is to destroy the death of sin, and confer the life of grace on sinners. 5. The rising of the bodies of the saints, shews that this death of Christ is to merit, and his gospel publish the eternal happiness of body and soul for all that believe in his name."

It is difficult to account for the transaction mentioned in verses 52 and 53. Some have thought that these two verses have been introduced into the text of Matthew from the gospel of the Nazarenes; others think that the simple meaning is this: By the earthquake several bodies that had been buried were thrown up and exposed to view, and continued above ground till after Christ's resurrection, and were seen by many persons in the city. Why the graves should be opened on Friday, and the bodies not be raised to life till the following Sunday, is difficult to be conceived. The place is extremely obscure.

Verse 54. The centurion] The Roman officer who superintended the execution, called centurio, from centum, a hundred, because he had the command of one hundred men.

Truly this was the Son of God.] An innocent, holy, and divine person; and God thus shews his disapprobation of this bloody tragedy. It is not likely that this centurion had any knowledge of the expectation of the Jews relative to the Messiah, and did not use the words in this sense. A son of God, as the Romans used the term, would signify no more than a very eminent or divine person; a hero.

Verse 55. Many women] To their everlasting honour, these women evidenced more courage, and affectionate attachment to their Lord and master, than the disciples did, who had promised to die with him rather than forsake him.

Beholding afar off] At a distance—απο μακροθεν, though this expression may be understood to refer, rather to the distance from which they came, (viz. from Galilee) than the distance they stood from the cross; yet as all malefactors were crucified naked, perhaps this may account for the distance at which these modest women stood.

Verse 56. Mary Magdalene] She probably had her name from Magdala, a village or district in Lower Galilee. See chap. xv. 39. Some think she was called Magdalene from מגרלא magdala, which signifies a plaiter of hair. See Lightfoot.

Mary the mother of James] She was mother of him called James the lesser, or junior, who was son of Alpheus or Cleopas. See Chap. x. 3. Mark xv. 40. John xix. 25. and she was sister to the Holy Virgin. Thus it appears that there were four remarkable Maries mentioned in the gospels. 1. MARY the Virgin, wife of JOSEPH. 2. MARY SALOME, her sister, wife of Cleopas, John xix. 25. 3. MARY MAGDALENE, or MARY of Magdala; and 4. MARY, the sister of Martha and Lazarus, John xi. 1. Though Baronius asserts, and Lightfoot is of the same opinion, that Mary Magdalene, and Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus, was one and the same person. It is difficult to ascertain and distinguish these women where their names occur in the gospels, so many being called by the name of Mary.

Joses] Several MSS. and Versions read Joseph.

Verse 57. When the even] This must have been about three o'clock, or a little after; for our Lord having expired about three o'clock, ver. 46. and the Jewish pass-over beginning about four, it was necessary that Joseph, who would not fail to eat the pass-over at the usual time, should have obtained, and buried the body of Christ sometime before four o'clock. But such was the general consternation occasioned by the prodigies that took place on this most awful occasion, that we may safely conjecture, that nothing was done in order, and perhaps the pass-over itself was not eaten at the usual hour, if at all, that day. See at the end of the preceding chapter.

A rich man] He was a counsellor of the great Sanhedrin, Luke xxiii. 50. and from the accounts given of him by the Evangelists, we learn that he was a man of the greatest respectability. He now acted a more honourable part than all the disciples of our Lord. He was of Arimathea, or Rama, in the tribe of Benjamin, Matt. ii. 17. but lived ordinarily in Jerusalem, as being a member of the great council.

Verse 58. Begged the body] That he might bury it honourably; otherwise, by the Jewish customs, it would have either been burned, or buried in the common place appointed for executed criminals.

Verse 59. Wrapped it in a clean linen cloth] The Jews, as well as the Egyptians, added spices to keep the body from putrefaction, and the linen was wrapped about every part to keep the aromatics in contact with the flesh. From John xix. 39, 40. we learn that a mixture of myrrh and aloes of one hundred pounds weight, had been applied to the body of Jesus when he was buried. And that a second embalmment was intended, we learn from Luke xxiii. 56. and xxiv. 1. as the hurry to get the body interred before the sabbath, did not permit them to complete the embalming in the first instance. See an account of the mode of embalming among the Egyptians, in the note on Gen. l. 2. and 26.

Verse 60. Laid it in his own new tomb] To all human appearance the body of Christ must have had the same burial place with those of the two robbers, as he was numbered with the transgressors, and suffered with them; for then he was a sacrifice, bearing the sin of the world in his own body on the tree;—but now the sacrifice is offered, the atonement made and accepted, he is no longer to be enrolled with the transgressors, and according to a prophecy delivered nearly seven hundred years before that time, he is to have the burying place of a rich man. See Isai. liii. 9, 10. Had our Lord been buried in the common burial ground of the malefactors, his resurrection could not have been so distinctly remarked, as the chief priests would never have thought of sealing the stone there, or setting a watch; but now that the body is got into the hands of a friend, they judge it necessary to make use of these precautions, in order, as they said, to prevent imposture; and from this very circumstance the resurrection of Christ had its fullest evidence, and was put beyond the power of successful contradiction. What a number of objections would not human prudence have made to Joseph's conduct, had he consulted it on this occasion? It would have represented to him, that "this was to expose himself, to bring himself into trouble, to render himself suspected, to put himself out of all capacity of doing good, to ruin himself irrecoverably, and now it could do no good to his teacher, he is now dead, and needs no longer any office of kindness from men." There is, sometimes in our whole life, but one opportunity in which God designs signally to employ us; and through our general backwardness to every good work, we are for reserving ourselves to other opportunities, in which God neither requires nor will accept our services.

Rolled a great stone to the door] Some are of opinion that this tomb was cut down into the rock, perpendicularly from the surface; and that the great stone spoken of here, covered over the entrance to it. The stone, no doubt, was intended to secure the place as much as possible.

Verse 61. Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary] The mother of James and Joses, ver. 56. The mother of our Lord had probably, by this time, been taken home to the house of John. See John xix. 26, 27.

Sitting over against the sepulchre.] These holy women, filled with that love to their Lord which death cannot destroy, cleaved to him in life, and in death were not divided. They came to the grave to see the end, and overwhelmed with sorrow and anguish, sat down to mourn.

Verse 62. The next day] This was the seventh, or Saturday, and might be what we should term the evening of the sixth, or Friday, because the Jews always ended their day when the sun set, and then began the next.

That followed the day of the preparation] That is, of the sabbath. The victuals, &c. which were to be used on the sabbath by the Jews, were always prepared the preceding evening before the sun set. It is of this preparation that the Evangelist speaks here; and it is the same which is mentioned by Mark, chap. xv. 42. by Luke, chap. xxiii. 54. and by John, chap. xix. 31. But there was another preparation which happened in the same day: viz. The preparation of the pass-over; this began about twelve o'clock, and continued till four, the time in which they ate the paschal lamb, See John xix. 14.

Verse 63. Sir, we remember, &c.] While these wicked men are fulfilling their own vicious counsels, they are subserving the great cause of Christianity. Every thing depended on the resurrection of Christ; if it did not appear that he rose from the dead, then the whole system was false, and no atonement was made. It was necessary therefore that the chief priests, &c. should make use of every precaution to prevent an imposture, that the resurrection of Christ might have the fullest evidence to support it. See on ver. 60.

The word Κυριε, is here very properly translated Sir, which, in many other places, is as improperly translated Lord. When a Roman is the speaker, or the person addressed, Κυριε should always be translated Sir: when strangers addressed our Lord, the word is a title of civil respect; and should, in general, be translated in the same way.

After three days I will rise again.] This they probably took come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, [a] He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first.

65 Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can.

66 So they went and made the sepulchre sure, [b] sealing the stone, and setting a watch.

from his saying, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will build it up. If so, they destroyed, by their own words, the false accusation they brought against him to put him to death; then they perverted the meaning, now they declare it. Thus the wise are taken in their own craftiness. Neither the Devil nor his servants ever speak truth, but when they expect to accomplish some bad purpose by it.

Verse 64. Lest his disciples come by night] Νυκτος by night, is wanting in ten of the uncial MSS. and in several others, and in most of the Versions. Erasmus, Aldus, Bengel and Boghard, with Griesbach, leave it out of the text.

Verse 65. Ye have a watch] The Jews had a corps of Roman troops consisting of several companies, as a guard for the temple, Acts iv. 1. These companies mounted guard by turns, see Luke xxii. 4. Some of these companies which were not then on duty, Pilate gave them leave to employ to watch the tomb.

Verse 66. Made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch.] Or rather, made the tomb secure by the guard, and by sealing the stone. I follow Kypke in construing μετα της κουστωδιας, with ησφαλισαντο. The guard was to take care that the disciples should not steal him away; and the seal which was probably the seal of the governor, was to prevent the guards from being corrupted so as to permit the theft. So every thing was done which human policy and prudence could, to prevent a resurrection, which these very precautions had the most direct tendency to authenticate and establish. How wonderful are the wisdom and goodness of God! and how true is it, that there is neither might nor counsel against him.

1. The death of Christ was ordered so as to be witnessed by thousands: and if his resurrection take place, it must be demonstrated; and it cannot take place without being incontestible, such are the precautions used here to prevent all imposture.

2. The more the circumstances of the death of Christ are examined, the more astonishing the whole will appear. The death is uncommon—the person uncommon—and the object uncommon; and the whole is grand, majestic, and awful. Nature itself is thrown into unusual action, and by means and causes wholly supernatural. In every part, the finger of God most evidently appears.

3. How glorious does Christ appear in his death! were it not for his thirst, his exclamation on the cross, and the piercing of his side, we should have found it difficult to believe that such a person could ever have entered the empire of death; but the divinity and the manhood equally appear, and thus the certainty of the atonement is indubitably established.

4. But who can reflect on the state of the poor disciples, during the whole of the time in which our blessed Lord lay under the empire of death, without sharing their sorrows! When he expired on the cross, their expectation was cut off; and when his body was laid in the grave, their hopes were buried; and nothing but the resurrection of Christ from the dead, could have given a resurrection to their hopes. It is true they had heard him say, that he would rise again the third day; but in this it is evident, their faith was very imperfect; and the uncertainty, perplexity, anxiety, and distress which they, in consequence, must have suffered, can neither be described nor imagined. Though we know the glorious result, yet who can help sympathising with the pious father, the virgin mother, and the disconsolate disciples!

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The resurrection of Christ declared by an angel to the two Marys at the sepulchre, 1—6. They are commissioned to announce this to the disciples, 7. They go, and are met by Christ himself, who promises to meet the disciples in Galilee, 8—10. The watch go into the city, and report to the chief priests what had taken place, 11. They give them money, to say that his disciples had stolen the body by night, while they slept, 12—15. Christ meets the eleven disciples in a mountain of Galilee, 16, 17. He gives them a commission to preach the gospel throughout the earth; to baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and promises to be with them to the end of the world, 18—20.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVIII.

Verse 1. In the end of the sabbath] Οψε δε σαββατων. After the end of the week; this is the translation given by several eminent critics: and in this way the word οψε is used by the most eminent Greek writers. Thucydides, lib. iv. chap. 93. της ημερας οψε ην—the day was ended. Plutarch, οψε των βασιλεως χρονων—after the times of the king. Philostratus, οψε των Τρωικων—after the Trojan war. See Rosenmuller. In general the Jews divided their natural day which consisted of twenty-four hours, into day and night. Their artificial day began at the rising, and ended at the setting of the sun; all the rest of the time, from the setting to the rising of the sun, they termed night: hence the same word in Hebrew, signifies both evening and night, Gen. i. 5. Mark vi. 47. Matthew has employed the word in this extensive sense here, pointing out the latter part of the Jewish night, that which immediately preceded the rising of the sun, and not that first part which we call the evening. The transaction mentioned here, evidently took place early on the morning of the third day after our Lord's crucifixion; what is called our Sunday morning, or first day of the next week.

Came—to see the sepulchre.] That is, they set out at this time in order to visit the tomb of our Lord, and also to weep there, John xi. 31. and to embalm the body of our Lord, Luke xxiv. 1. St. Matthew omits Mary Salome, mentioned by Mark; and Joanna, the wife of Chuza Herod's steward, mentioned by Luke. The other Mary was the wife of Cleopas, and mother of James and Joses, mentioned before, chap. xxvii. 56. Were not Mary and Salome two distinct persons?

Verse 2. A great earthquake] Σεισμος; a shaking or commotion of any kind: probably the word means no more than the confusion caused among the guards by the angel's appearance; all this had taken place before the women reached the sepulchre.

The angel of the Lord descended from heaven] Matthew is very particular in this, to shew that the word angel is not to be taken in the sense of an ordinary messenger, who might have come from Joseph of Arimathea, or from any other; but in the sense of an extraordinary messenger, who descended from GOD, out of heaven, for this very purpose. It is likely that the angel had descended, rolled away the stone, and was sitting on it, before the women reached the tomb.

Verse 3. His countenance] His appearance, η ιδεα αυτου: or, his face, for so the word is used in some of the best Greek writers. It seems from Mark xvi. 5. that this angel had assumed the appearance of a young man.

Like lightning] Coruscations of glory continually flaming from his face. This might produce the confusion mentioned ver. 2.

His raiment white as snow] He was clothed in garments emblematical of the glad tidings which he came to announce. It would have been inconsistent with the message he brought, had the angel appeared in black robes, such as those preposterously wear, who call themselves his successors in the ministry of a once suffering, but now risen and highly exalted Saviour. But the world is as full of nonsense as of sin; and who can correct and bring it to reason and piety?

Verse 4. The keepers—became as dead men.] God can by one and the same means, comfort his servants, and terrify his enemies. The resurrection of Christ is a subject of terror to the servants of sin, and a subject of consolation to the sons of God; because it is a proof of the resurrection of both, the one to shame and everlasting contempt; the other to eternal glory and joy.

Verse 5. I know that ye seek Jesus] Speaking after the manner of men, these women deserved to be the first witnesses of the resurrection of Christ: during life they ministered to him, and in death they were not divided. They attended him to the CROSS, notwithstanding their attachment to him exposed them to the most eminent danger; and now they come to watch and weep at his TOMB. The common opinion is, that women are more fickle and less courageous than men. The reverse of this I believe to be the truth, in those who are thoroughly converted to God; and who, previously to conversion, whether man or woman, can be trusted in any case?

Verse 6. Come, see the place] The tomb in which our Lord was laid, was no doubt like the rest of the Jewish burying places, a receptacle for the several dead of a whole family,

Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

7 And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, [a] he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you.

8 And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run to bring his disciples word.

9 ¶ And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, [b] Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him.

10 Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell [c] my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

(11 ¶ Now when they were going, behold, some of the watch came into the city, and shewed unto the chief priests all the things that were done.

divided into separate niches, where each had his place. Come and see the place—was tantamount to, come and see the niche in which he was laid—it is now empty—nor was there any other body in the place, for the tomb was a new one, in which no man had ever been laid, John xix. 41. so there could be no deception in the case.

Verse 7. Go quickly, and tell his disciples] Thus these faithful women proclaim the gospel to those, who were afterwards to be the teachers of the whole human race! Behold what honour God puts upon those who persevere in his truth, and continue to acknowledge him before men!

That he is risen from the dead] There is a remarkable saying of R. Judah Hakkodesh, which some critics quote on this subject. "After THREE DAYS the SOUL of the Messiah shall RETURN to its body, and he shall GO OUT of that STONE in which he shall be BURIED."

Goeth before you into Galilee] As himself promised, chap. xxvi. 32.

Verse 8. They departed quickly from the sepulchre] At the desire of the angel they went into the tomb, to have the fullest certainty of the resurrection.

Fear and great joy] Fear, produced by the appearance of this glorious messenger of God; and great joy occasioned by the glad tidings of the resurrection of their Lord and Master. At the mention of unexpected good news, fear and joy are generally intermingled.

——Vix sum apud me, ita animus commotus est metu,

TERENT. Andr. v. 945.

"I am almost beside myself, my mind is so agitated with fear, hope, and joy, at this unexpected good news."

Verse 9. And as they went to tell his disciples] This clause is wanting in the Codex Vatican. and Codex Bezæ, and in twenty others, and in most of the Versions. The omission is approved by Mill, Bengel, and Schmid. Griesbach leaves it in the text with a note of doubtfulness. It appears to be superfluous. To connect this with the next clause, the particle καὶ and, is obliged to be suppressed in all the translations. I think the verse should begin with And behold he goeth, &c. and the former clause be suppressed. Probabiliter delenda, says Professor White, in his Crisews Griesbachianæ, speaking of the preceding words.

Jesus met them] Christ bestows his graces and consolations by degrees, first by his angels, and then by himself. He does not reveal himself to incredulous and disobedient souls; he appears not even to those women till he has tried their faith and obedience by his ministering angels.

All hail] Hale þeþe ge, health be to you! Anglo-Saxon. Χαίρετε, be ye safe, rejoice.

Verse 10. Be not afraid] They were seized with fear at the sight of the angel; and this was now renewed by this unexpected appearance of Christ. See the note on ver. 8.

Go tell my brethren] This is the first time our Lord called his disciples by this endearing name: they no doubt thought that their Lord would reproach them with their past cowardice and infidelity; but in speaking thus, he gives them a full assurance in the most tender terms, that all that was past, was as buried for ever.

Verse 11. Some of the watch] Or guards. Probably the rest still remained at the tomb, waiting for orders to depart; and had sent these, to intimate to their employers the things that had taken place.

Verse 12. With the elders] That is, the senators of the great Sanhedrin or Jewish council of state; elsewhere called the elders of the people; they could now meet, as the sabbath was over.

Verse 13. His disciples came by night] This was as absurd as it was false. On one hand the terror of the disciples, the smallness of their number (only eleven) and their almost total want of faith. On the other, the great danger of such a bold enterprize, the number of armed men who guarded the tomb, the authority of Pilate, and of the Sanhedrin, must render such an imposture as this utterly devoid of credit.

Stole him away while we slept.] Here is a whole heap of absurdities. 1st. Is it likely that so many men would all fall asleep in the open air, at once? 2dly. Is it at all probable that a Roman guard should be found off their watch, much less asleep, when it was instant death, according to the Roman military laws, to be found in this state? 3dly. Could they be so sound asleep as not to awake with all the noise which must be necessarily made by removing the great stone, and taking away the body? 4thly. Is it at all likely that these disciples could have had time sufficient to do all this, and to come and return without being perceived by any person? And 5thly. If they were asleep, how could they possibly know that it was the disciples that stole him, or indeed that any person or persons stole him! for being asleep, they could see no person. From their own testimony, therefore, the resurrection may be as fully proved as the theft.

Verse 14. If this come to the governor's ears] Pilate—we will persuade him that it is for his own interest and honour to join in the deception—and we will render you secure—we will take care that you shall not suffer that punishment for this pretended breach of duty, which otherwise you might expect.

Verse 15. Until this day.] That is to say, the time in which Matthew wrote his Gospel; which is supposed by some to have been eight, by others eighteen, and by others thirty years after our Lord's resurrection.

Verse 16. Then the eleven disciples went] When the women went and told them that they had seen the Lord, and that he had promised to meet them in Galilee. From the eleventh to the fifteenth verse inclusive, should be read in a parenthesis, as the sixteenth verse is the continuation of the subject mentioned in the tenth.

Verse 17. But some doubted.] That is, Thomas only at first doubted. The expression simply intimates, that they did not all believe at that time. See the same form noticed on chap. xxvi. 8. and chap. xxvii. 44.

Verse 18. And Jesus came and spake unto them] It is supposed by some, that the reason why any doubted, was, that when they saw Jesus at first, he was at a distance: but when he came up, drew near to them, they were fully persuaded of the identity of his person.

All power is given unto me] Or, All authority in heaven and upon earth is given unto me. One fruit of the sufferings and resurrection of Christ is represented to be, his having authority or right in Heaven to send down the Holy Spirit—to raise up his followers thither—and to crown them in the kingdom of an endless glory. In Earth, to convert sinners—to sanctify, protect, and perfect his church; to subdue all nations to himself: and, finally, to judge all mankind. If Jesus Christ were not equal with the Father, could he have claimed this equality of power, without being guilty of impiety and blasphemy? Surely not: and does he not, in the fullest manner, assert his Godhead, and his equality with the Father, by claiming and possessing all the authority in heaven and earth? i. e. all the power and authority by which both empires are governed?

Verse 19. Go ye therefore] Because I have the authority aforesaid, and can send whomsoever I will, to do whatsoever I please:—teach, μαθητευσατε, make disciples of all nations, bring them to an acquaintance with God, who bought them, and then baptize them in the name of the Father. It is natural to suppose, that adults were the first subjects of baptism; for as the Gospel was in a peculiar manner sent to the Gentiles, they must hear and receive it, before they could be expected to renounce their old prejudices and idolatries, and come into the bonds of the Christian covenant. But certainly no argument can be drawn from this concession against the baptism of children. When the Gentiles and Jews had received the faith and blessings of the Gospel, it is natural enough to suppose they should wish to get their children incorporated with the visible church of Christ; especially if, as many pious and learned men have believed, baptism succeeded to circumcision, which I think has never yet been disproved. The Apostles knew well, that the Jews not only circumcised the children of proselytes, but also baptized them; and as they now received a commission to teach and proselyte all the nations, and baptize them in the name of the Holy Trinity, they must necessarily understand that infants were included: nor could they, the custom of their country being considered, have understood our Lord differently, unless he had, in the most express terms, said, that they were not to baptize children, which neither he nor his Apostles ever did. And as to the objection, that the baptized were obliged to profess their faith, and that, therefore, only adults should be baptized, there is no weight at all in it; because what is spoken of such, refers to those who, only at that period of life, heard the Gospel, and were not born of parents who had been Christians; therefore they could not have been baptized into the Christian faith, for as much as no such faith was at their infancy, preached in the world. That the children, and even infants of proselytes, were baptized among the Jews, and reputed in consequence clean, and partakers of the blessings of the Covenant, see proved at large by Wetstein, in his note on Matt. iii. 16.—See the note on chap. iii. 6. and particularly on Mark xvi. 16.

In the name of the Father, &c.] Baptism, properly speaking, whether administered by dipping or sprinkling, signifies a full and eternal consecration of the person to the service and honour of that Being in whose name it is administered; but this consecration can never be made to a creature; therefore the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, are not creatures. Again, baptism is not made in the name of a quality or attribute of the Divine Nature; therefore the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit are not qualities or attributes of the Divine Nature. The orthodox, as they are termed, have generally considered this text a decisive proof of the doctrine of the Holy Trinity: and what else can they draw from it? Is it possible for words to convey a plainer sense than these do? And do they not direct every Reader to consider the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, as three distinct Persons? "But this I can never believe." I cannot help that—you shall not be persecuted by me for differing from my opinion. I cannot go over to you: I must abide by what I believe to be the meaning of the Scriptures. Dr. Lightfoot has some good thoughts on this commission given to the Apostles:

"I. Christ commands them to go and baptize the nations: but how much time was past before such a journey was taken! And when the time was now come that this work should be begun, Peter doth not enter upon it without a previous admonition given him from heaven. And this was occasioned hereby, that according to the command of Christ, the gospel was first to be preached to Judea, Samaria, and Galilee.

"II. He commands them to baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; but among the Jews they baptized only in the name of Jesus, see Acts ii. 38. and viii. 16. and xix. 5. For this reason, that thus the baptizers might assert, and the baptized confess, Jesus to be the true Messias; which was chiefly controverted by the Jews. Of the same nature is that apostolic blessing, Grace and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ. Where then is the Holy Ghost? He is not excluded, however he be not named. The Jews did more easily consent to the Spirit of the Messias, which they very much celebrate, than to the person of the Messias. Above all others they deny and abjure Jesus of Nazareth. It belonged to the Apostles therefore, the more earnestly to assert Jesus (to be the Messias) by how much the more vehemently they opposed him: which being once cleared, the acknowledging of the Spirit of Christ would be introduced, without delay or scruple. Moses (in Exod. vi. 14.) going about to reckon up all the tribes of Israel, goes no further than the tribe of Levi; and takes up with that to which his business and story at that present related. In like manner the Apostles, for the present, baptize in the name of Jesus, and bless in the name of the Father and of Jesus, that thereby they might more firmly establish the doctrine of Jesus, which met with such sharp and virulent opposition; which doctrine being established among them, they would soon agree about the Holy Ghost.

"III. Among the Jews, the controversy was about the true Messias; among the Gentiles, about the true God. It was therefore proper among the Jews to baptize in the name of Jesus, that he might be vindicated to be the true Messias. Among the Gentiles, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; that they might be hereby instructed in the doctrine of the true God.—Let this be particularly noted.—

"IV. The Jews baptized proselytes, into the name of the Father, that is, into the profession of God, whom they called by the name of Father. The Apostles baptize the Jews into the name of Jesus the Son, and the Gentiles into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

"V. The Father hath revealed himself in the Old Covenant; the Son in the New; in human flesh by his miracles, doctrine, resurrection and ascension; the Holy Ghost in his gifts and miracles. Thus the doctrine of the ever blessed Trinity grew by degrees to full maturity. For the arriving to the acknowledgement of which, it was incumbent upon all who professed the true God to be three in one, to be baptised into his name." LIGHTFOOT'S Works, vol. II. p. 274.

Verse 20. Teaching them to observe all things] Men are ignorant of divine things, and must be taught. Only those can be considered as proper teachers of the ignorant, who are thoroughly instructed in whatsoever Christ has commanded. Persons who are entrusted with the public ministry of the word, should take care that they teach not human creeds and confessions of faith, in place of the Sacred Writings; but those things, and those only, which Jesus has commanded.

And, lo, I am with you alway] και ιδου εγω μεθ' υμων ειμι πασας τας ημερας—literally, Behold, I am with you every day. A minister of Christ should consider, that while his soul simply and uniformly follows Jesus, he shall be made a constant instrument of bringing many sons and daughters to glory. The dark, it is true, must be enlightened, the ignorant instructed, the profligate reclaimed, the guilty justified, and the unholy sanctified; and who is sufficient for this work? He, with whom the Son of God is EVERY DAY, and none other.

Unto the end of the world] Some translate, εως της συντελειας του αιωνος, to the end of this age; meaning the Apostolic Age, or Jewish dispensation, and then they refer the promise of Christ's presence to the working of miracles, and explain this by Mark xvi. 17—19. By my name they shall cast out dæmons, &c. &c. But though the words, are used in this sense in several places, see chap. xiii. 39, 40, 49. and xxiv. 3. yet it is certain they were repeatedly used among the primitive ecclesiastical writers, to denote the consummation of all things; and it is likely, that this is the sense in which they are used here, which the Anglo-Saxon has happily expressed: And Ic beo mid eop ealle dagar oð populde ge-endunge—And I, be with you all days, until world ending: and this is indispensably necessary, because the presence and influence of Jesus Christ are essentially requisite in every age of the world, to enlighten, instruct, and save the lost. The promise takes in not only the primitive Apostles, but also all their successors in the Christian ministry, as long as the earth shall endure.

Amen.] This word is omitted by some of the oldest and most authentic MSS. and by some Versions and Fathers. When it is considered, that the word amen simply means so be it! we may at once perceive, that it could not be added by our Lord. For our Lord could not pray that his own will might be done, or his own promise fulfilled. The word is, therefore, utterly impertinent as a part of the sacred text, and could neither have been added by our Lord, nor by the Evangelist. The amens at the end of the sacred books, have no other authority than what they derive from the transcribers of copies; and at best, are only to be considered as the pious wish of the writer, or of the Church, that the promises contained in the sacred volume may be accomplished.

In the MSS. and Versions there are various subscriptions, or epigraphs, to this Gospel: the following are the principal.

"The Gospel according to Matthew—written by him in Jerusalem—in Palestine—in the East—in the Hebrew dialect—in Hebrew—eight years after the ascension of Christ—interpreted by John—by James the brother of the Lord."

The subscription in some copies of the Arabic version is very full: "The end of the copy of the Gospel of Matthew the Apostle. He wrote it in the land of Palestine, by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, in the Hebrew tongue, eight years after the bodily ascension of Jesus the Messiah into heaven, in the first year of the reign of Claudius Cæsar, king of Rome."

These are sufficient to shew how little credit should be attached to the subscriptions found at the end of the sacred books, either in the MSS. or in the Versions.

1. In concluding my notes on this Evangelist, I cannot express myself better than in the words of the late Mr. Wakefield, to whom this commentary has been in many instances indebted. "I have now finished my observations on the Gospel of Matthew: a piece of history, it must be acknowledged, the most singular in its composition, the most wonderful in its contents, and the most important in its object, that was ever exhibited to the notice of mankind. For simplicity of narrative, and an artless relation of facts, without any applause or censure, or digressive remarks, on the part of the historian, upon the characters introduced in it; without any intermixture of his own opinion, upon any subject whatsoever; and for a multiplicity of internal marks of credibility, this Gospel certainly has no parallel among human productions."

2. One thing the pious and intelligent reader has, no doubt, already noticed: there is not one truth, or doctrine, in the whole oracles of God, which is not taught in this Evangelist. The outlines of the whole spiritual system are here correctly laid down: even Paul himself has added nothing; he has amplified and illustrated the truths contained in this Gospel: but even under the direct inspiration of the Holy Ghost, neither he nor any other of the Apostles have brought to light any one truth, the prototype of which has not been found in the words or acts of our blessed Lord, as related by Matthew, in the work which has already passed under review. The Gospel by St. Matthew is the grand text-book of Christianity: the other Gospels are collateral evidences of its truth, and the Apostolic Epistles are comments on the text. In the commencement of this work, I stated my wish, "to assist my fellow labourers in the vineyard to lead men to HIM who is the fountain of all excellence, goodness, truth and happiness:—to magnify his LAW, and make it honourable:—to shew the wonderful provision made in his GOSPEL for the recovery and salvation of a sinful world;—to prove that God's great design is to make his creatures HAPPY; and that such a salvation as it becomes God to give, and such as man needs to receive is within the grasp of every human soul." General preface, before Genesis, p. xix. And having thus far done what I could, in reference to these great and important purposes, here I register my thanks to the ever-blessed God, Father, Word, and Holy Spirit, that he has permitted me to cast my mite into this sacred treasury, to add my feeble testimony to His Eternal Truth; and has spared me, in the midst of many infirmities and oppressive labours, to see the conclusion of this gospel, a consummation which I had long devoutly wished, but which I had scarcely hoped ever to see realised.

May the divine Author of this sacred book, give the Reader a heart-felt experience of all the truths it contains, make and keep him wise unto salvation, build him up in this most holy faith, and give him an inheritance among the blessed, through Christ Jesus, the Friend of mankind, and the Saviour of sinners; who is the Object and End of this glorious system of truth. And to Him, with the Father and Eternal Spirit, be glory and dominion, thanksgiving, and obedience for ever and ever. Amen and amen!

☞ For an account of the VERSIONS mentioned in the preceding Notes, for the present, the Reader is entreated to refer to the General Preface before the book of Genesis, p. xxx. But a more particular account of these, as well as of the different MSS. noted by the letters A. B. C. D. &c. will be given in a General Preface to the four Gospels, which it is hoped will be ready, by the time the four gospels shall have passed through the press. Till then, the Writer begs the Reader's indulgence.

For an explanation of the Chronological Notes, the Reader is referred to the Advertisement at the end of the Preface. This will explain the reason, why the crucifixion of our Lord appears, by the side-notes at the head of the page, to have taken place in the twenty-ninth year of his age; because the vulgar or common reckoning is four years short; these four years being added, will bring our Lord's death to the true time, viz. thirty-three years from his birth. This note the Reader will have the goodness to bear in mind.

As a few other Eras are introduced at the head of the commentary on Mark, it may be necessary to mention them here. 1. The CÆSAREAN Era of ANTIOCH: was a monument which the city of Antioch erected to the honour of Julius Cæsar, in commemoration of his victory at Pharsalia. This was obtained forty-eight years before the commencement of the Christian Era. 2. The SPANISH Era. This was kept in commemoration of the entire subduction of Spain by Augustus Cæsar, which took place in the year of Rome 715; or thirty-nine years before the Vulgar Era of Christ.—3. The JULIAN Era, or as it is sometimes called the Era of JULIUS CÆSAR; this had for its foundation the reformation of the Roman calendar by Julius Cæsar; and the change was made forty-five years before the birth of Christ.

It is intended to print the four gospels, and Acts of the Apostles, before any more of the Old Testament is put to press, for the reasons assigned in the Preface to the book of Joshua, p. iii. and iv. which the Reader is requested to consult.

PREFACE TO THE GOSPEL

ACCORDING TO

ST. MARK.

WITH A SHORT ACCOUNT OF HIS LIFE.

FOR an explication of the word GOSPEL, and the title SAINT, see the Preface to Matt. p. ii.—v.

MARK. This person, the second in the commonly received order of the four Evangelists, was named JOHN MARK, and was the son of a pious woman called Mary, who dwelt at Jerusalem: she was an early believer, and the disciples used to meet at her house. Peter, having been delivered out of prison by an angel, came to the house of Mary, mother of John whose surname was Mark, where many were gathered together praying, Acts xii. 12. This very first mention of John Mark, assures us of Peter's intimacy in that family: it is almost universally allowed, that Mark, mentioned by Peter, 1 Epist. chap. v. 13. is this Evangelist, and that he is the same with him who is called sister's son to Barnabas, Col. iv. 10. and is supposed to have been converted by Peter to the Christian faith. He travelled from Jerusalem to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas, Acts xii. 25. and some short time after, he accompanied them to other countries as their minister, Acts xiii. 5. When they returned to the Continent, and came on shore at Perga in Pamphylia, he departed from them and returned to Jerusalem, ver. 13. Afterwards he would have gone with Paul and Barnabas, but the former refused to take him, because of his having left them at Pamphylia; Paul and Barnabas then separated, and Mark accompanied his uncle Barnabas to Cyprus, Acts xv. 36—41. Afterwards Paul and he were fully reconciled, as evidently appears from 2 Tim. iv. 11. Take Mark and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry. This appears also from Philemon, ver. 24. where Mark is stiled Paul's fellow-labourer; and from Col. iv. 10. where we find the Apostle recommending him in a particular manner to the church of God at that place. He is generally supposed to have been particularly intimate with St. Peter, to have written his Gospel at ROME, A. D. 64. and to have died at Alexandria in Egypt, in the eighth year of the reign of Nero. Dr. LARDNER has fully proved that Mark the Evangelist, and John Mark nephew to Barnabas, were one and the same person. See his Works, vol. vi. p. 77, &c.

How Mark composed his Gospel, is a question not yet decided among learned men. Many of the primitive fathers, such as Papias, Clemens Alexandrinus, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, Eusebius, &c. believed that he was only the amanuensis of St. Peter; that this Apostle, through modesty, would not put his name to the work, but dictated the whole account, and Mark wrote it down from his mouth. St. Augustine appears to have been the first who maintained that Mark abridged St. Matthew's Gospel; and that it is not to be considered as an original work—on this opinion, several remarks will be made in the course of these notes. Others suppose that Mark compiled it, partly out of Matthew's Gospel, and partly out of the Gospel of Luke. But most of these are conjectures which appear to have very little foundation. Critics are also divided, concerning the language in which it was written, and the people to whom it was sent. Some have contended for a Latin original, because of several Latin words found in it, such as σπεκυλατωρ, chap. vi. 27. κεντυριων, xv. 39, 44, 45. συσσημον, xiv. 44. But such words are better accounted for, by supposing that his Gospel was written for the use of the Roman people: and that it is on this account, that he wholly passes by the genealogy of our Lord, as being a point of no consequence to Gentile converts, though very necessary for the Jews, and especially the Jews of Palestine. That it was originally written in Greek, is a point now acknowledged by almost all learned men.

It may be necessary to state the things omitted by Mark in the beginning of his Gospel, which are mentioned by Matthew and Luke.

1. The Preface, found in Luke and John, chap. i.
2. The Conception of Elizabeth, Luke i. 5—25.
3. The Salutation of Mary, Luke i. 26—38.
4. Mary's Visit to Elizabeth, Luke i. 39—56.
5. John Baptist's Birth, Luke i. 57—79.
6. The Angel's appearance to Joseph, Matt. i. 18—25.
7. The Birth of Christ, Matt. i. 25. Luke ii. 1—7.
8. The Genealogy of Christ, Matt. i. 1—17. Luke iii. 1—76.
9. The appearance of the Angel to the Shepherds, Luke ii. 8—20.
10. The Circumcision of Christ, Matt. i. 25. Luke ii. 21.
11. The Presentation of Christ in the temple, Luke ii. 22—38.
12. The coming of the Magi, Matt. ii. 1—12.
13. The Flight into Egypt, Matt. ii. 13—15.
14. Herod's Murder of the Innocents, Matt. ii. 16—18.
15. The Return of the holy family from Egypt, Matt. ii. 19—23. Luke ii. 39.
16. Christ's Journey to Jerusalem when twelve years of age, Luke ii. 40—48.

From the particulars enumerated here, it appears, that the things omitted by Mark, are also omitted by John, except the Preface; and that St. Luke is the most circumstantial.

For other particulars relative to this Gospel, see at the end of the last chapter.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The beginning of the gospel] It is with the utmost propriety, that Mark begins the gospel dispensation by the preaching of John the Baptist, he being the forerunner of Jesus Christ, and the first proclaimer of the incarnated Messiah. Gospel—for the meaning of the word, see the preface to Matthew.

Son of God] To point out his divine origin; and thus glancing at his miraculous conception. This was an essential character of the Messiah. See Matt. xvi. 16. xxvi. 63. Luke xxii. 67, &c.

Verse 2. As it is written in the prophets] Rather, As it is written by Isaiah the prophet. I think this reading should be adopted, instead of that in the common text. It is the reading of the Codex Bezæ, Vatican, and several other MSS. of great repute. It is found also in the Syriac, Persic, Coptic, Armenian, Gothic, Vulgate, and Itala versions, and in several of the Fathers. As this prophecy is found both in Isaiah and Malachi, probably the reading was changed to τοις προφηταις, the prophets, that it might comprehend both. In one of ASSEMAN's Syriac copies, both Isaiah and Malachi are mentioned. See all the authorities in Griesbach, 2d edit. and see the parallel place in Matthew, chap. iii. 3. where the prophet Isaiah is mentioned, which seems fully to establish the authority of this reading.

Verse 3. The voice of one crying] See on Matt. iii. 1—3.

Verse 4. John] The original name is nearly lost in the Greek Ιωαννης, and in the Latin Johannes, and almost totally so in the English John. The original name is יהוחנן Yehochanan, compounded of יהוה חנן Yehovah chanan, the grace or mercy of Jehovah: a most proper and significant name for the forerunner of the God of ALL GRACE. It was John's business to proclaim the gospel of the grace of God, and to point out that Lamb or sacrifice of God, which takes away the sin of the world.

For the remission of sins.] Or, toward the remission—εις αφεσιν. They were to repent, and be baptized in reference to the remission of sins. REPENTANCE prepared the soul for it, and BAPTISM was the type or pledge of it. See on Matt. iii. 2.

Verse 5. All the land] See on Matt. iii. 4—6.

Confessing their sins.] It was an invariable custom among the Jews, to admit no proselyte to baptism, till he had, in the most solemn manner, declared that he for ever had renounced all idolatrous worship, all heathenish superstitions; and promised an entire and unreserved submission to the law of Moses. This was necessary for a proselyte adult—a child dedicated to God by baptism, must be brought up in this faith.

Verse 6. John was clothed, &c.] See the note on Matt. iii. 4.

Verse 7. The latchet of whose shoes] The shoe of the ancients, was properly only a sole tied round the foot and ancle with strings or thongs. See on Matt. iii. 11.

Verse 8. I indeed have baptized you with water] As if he had said: This baptism is not to be rested in; it is only an emblem of that which you must receive from him who is mightier than I. It is he only who can communicate the Holy Spirit; and water baptism is nothing, but as it points out, and leads to, the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The subject of these two verses, is not found in Matthew nor John; but is mentioned with some varying circumstances by Luke, chap. iii. 16.

Verses 9—11. See the subject of these verses, which contain the account of our Lord's baptism, explained Matt. iii. 13—17.

Verse 12. The Spirit driveth him] Εκβαλλει, putteth him forth. St. Matthew says, chap. iv. 1. ανηχθη, was brought up. See this important subject of our Lord's temptation, explained at large, Matt. iv. 1—11.

Verse 13. With the wild beasts] This is a curious circumstance, which is mentioned by none of the other Evangelists; and seems to intimate, that he was in the most remote, unfrequented, and savage part of the desert; which, together with the diabolic influence, tended to render the whole scene the more horrid. Perhaps this very circumstance is mentioned, as emblematical of that savage and brutal cruelty, with which he was persecuted to death by the Jews and Gentiles, instigated thereto by the malice of Satan.

Verse 14. Preaching the gospel of the kingdom] See the notes on Matt. iii. 2. and on the office of the Preacher or herald, at the end of that chapter.

Verse 15. The time is fulfilled] That is, the time appointed for sending the Messiah: and particularly the time specified by Daniel, chap. ix. 24—27. Here are four points worthy of deep attention, in the preaching of the Son of God.

1. Every thing that is done, is according to a plan laid by the divine wisdom, and never performed till the time appointed was filled up.

2. That the kingdom and reign of sin are to be destroyed, and the kingdom of grace and heaven, established in their place.

3. That the kingdom of God, and his reign by grace, begins with repentance for past sins.

4. That this reign of grace is at hand; and that nothing but an obstinate perseverance in sin and impenitence, can keep any soul out of it; and that NOW is the accepted time to enter in.

Verse 16. As he walked by the sea, &c.] See on Matt. iv. 18—22.

Andrew his brother] Instead of the common reading, αδελφον αυτου, his brother, the best MSS. and Versions have αδελφον του Σιμωνος, the brother of Simon, which should be received into the text. The most eminent critics approve of this reading.

Verse 21. Capernaum] See Matt. iv. 13.

He entered into the synagogue] Their synagogues—εν ταις συναγωγαις αυτων, according to the Syriac, which has the word in the plural.

Verse 22. As one that had authority] From God, to do what he was doing; and to teach a pure and beneficent system of truth.

And not as the Scribes.] Who had no such authority, and whose teaching was not accompanied by the power of God to the souls of the people; 1. because the matter of the teaching did not come from God; and 2. because the teachers themselves were not commissioned by the Most High. See the note on Matt. vii. 28.

Verse 23. A man with an unclean spirit] This dæmoniac is only mentioned by Mark and Luke, chap. iv. 31. It seems the man had lucid intervals; else he could not have been admitted into the synagogue. Unclean or impure spirit—a common epithet for those fallen spirits: but here it may mean, one who filled the heart of him he possessed, with LASCIVIOUS thoughts, images, desires, and propensities. By giving way to the first attacks of such a spirit, he may soon get in, and take full possession of the whole soul.

Verse 24. What have we to do with thee] Or, What is it to 25 And Jesus [a]rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

28 And immediately his fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

us and to thee? or, What business hast thou with us? That this is the meaning of the original, τι ημιν και σοι; Kypke has sufficiently shewn. There is a phrase exactly like it in 2 Sam. xvi. 10. What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? מה לי ולכם בני צרויה ma li v'lacem beney Tseruiah, What business have ye with me, or, Why do ye trouble me, ye sons of Tseruiah? The Septuagint translate the Hebrew, just as the Evangelist does here, τι εμοι και υμιν; it is the same idiom in both places; as there can be no doubt but the dæmoniac spoke in Hebrew, or in the Chaldee-Syriac dialect of that language, which was then common in Judea. See on Matt. viii. 29.

Art thou come to destroy us?] We may suppose this spirit to have felt and spoken thus: "Is this the time of which it hath been predicted, that in it, the Messiah should destroy all that power which we have usurped and exercised over the bodies and souls of men? Alas! it is so: I now plainly see who thou art—the Holy One of God, who art come to destroy that unholiness, in which we have our residence, and through which we have our reign in the souls of men." An unholy spirit is the only place where Satan can have his full operation, and shew forth the plenitude of his destroying power.

Verse 25. And Jesus rebuked him] A spirit of this cast will only yield to the sovereign power of the Son of God. All watchings, fastings, and mortifications, considered in themselves, will do little or no good. Uncleanness of every description, will only yield to the rebuke of God.

Verse 26. And when the unclean spirit had torn him] And had thrown him down in the midst, Luke iv. 35. και σπαραξαν, and convulsed him. Never was there a person possessed by an unclean spirit, who did not suffer a convulsion, perhaps a total ruin of nature by it. Sins of uncleanness, as the Apostle intimates, are against the body; they sap the foundation of life, so that there are very few of this class, whether male or female, that live out half their days: they generally die martyrs to their lusts. When the propensities of the flesh are most violent in a person who is determined to serve God, it is often a proof that these are the last efforts of the impure spirit, who has great rage, because he knows his time is but short.

Verse 27. What thing is this?] Words of surprise and astonishment.

And what new doctrine] I have added the particle And, from the Syriac, as it helps the better to distinguish the members of the sentence: but there is a vast diversity in the MSS. on this verse. See Griesbach.

For with authority] They had never heard such a gracious doctrine, and never saw any teaching supported by miracles before. How much must this person be superior to men! they are brought into subjection by unclean spirits; this person subjects unclean spirits to himself.

Verse 28. And immediately his fame spread abroad] The miracle which he had performed was 1. great; 2. evidenced much benevolence in the worker of it: and 3. was very public; being wrought in the synagogue. The many who saw it, published it wherever they went; and thus, the fame of Christ as an incomparable teacher, and unparalleled worker of miracles, became soon spread abroad through the land.

The word ευθεως, immediately, occurs more frequently in this Evangelist, than in any other writer of the New Covenant: it is very often superfluous, and may often be omitted in the translation, without any prejudice to the sense of the passage in which it is found. It seems to be used by St. Mark, as our ancient writers used forsooth, and such like words.

Verse 29. See this account of the healing of Peter's mother-in-law, explained at large, Matt. viii. 14—17.

Verse 32. When the sun did set] See on Matt. viii. 14.

Verse 34. Because they knew him.] To be the Christ, is added here by several ancient and respectable MSS. and Versions; but it appears to be only a gloss.

Verse 35. In the morning—a great while before day] By πρωι the morning, is to be understood the whole space of three hours, which finished the fourth watch of the night.

And there prayed.] Not that he needed any thing, for in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; but that he might be a pattern to us. Every thing that our blessed Lord did, he performed either as our pattern, or as our sacrifice.

Verse 36. And Simon—followed after him.] Κατεδιωξαν, followed him eagerly. They had now begun to taste the good word of God; and thought they could never hear too much of it. Many possess this spirit when first converted to God: Oh! what a pity that they should ever lose it! The soul that relishes God's word, is ever growing in grace by it.

Verse 37. All men seek for thee.] Some to hear; some to be healed; some to be saved; and some perhaps, through no good motive. There are all sorts of followers in the train of Christ—but how few walk steadily, and persevere unto the end!

Verse 38. The next towns] Κωμοπολεις, properly signifies such towns as resembled cities for magnitude and number of inhabitants, but which were not walled as were cities. The Codex Bezæ, most of the Versions, and all the Itala read, Let us go into the neighbouring villages, AND INTO THE CITIES.

For therefore came I forth.] Εις τουτο, for this purpose am I come forth—to preach the gospel to every creature, that all might hear, and fear, and return unto the Lord. The towns and the villages will not come to the preacher—the preacher must go to them, if he desires their salvation. In this also, Jesus has left his ministering servants an example, that they should follow his steps. Let no minister of God think he has delivered his own soul, till he has made an offer of salvation to every city and village within his reach.

Verse 39. And he preached] He continued preaching—Ην κηρυσσων: this is the proper meaning of the words—he never slackened his pace—he continued proclaiming the glad-tidings of salvation to all—there was no time to be lost—immortal souls were perishing for lack of knowledge; and the grand adversary was prowling about, seeking whom he might devour. This zealous, affectionate, and persevering diligence of Christ, should be copied by all his servants in the ministry; it is not less necessary now than it was then. Thousands, thousands of Christians so called, are perishing for lack of knowledge. O God, send forth more and more faithful labourers into thy vineyard!

Verse 40. There came a leper] See the notes on Matt. viii. 2, &c. Should any be inclined to preach on this cleansing of the leper, Mark is the best Evangelist to take the account from, because he is more circumstantial than either Matthew or Luke.

I. Consider this leper.

1. He heard of Jesus and his miracles.
2. He came to him for a cure, conscious of his disease.
3. He earnestly besought him to grant the mercy he needed.
4. He fell down on his knees, (with his face to the earth, Luke v. 12) thus shewing his humbled state, and the distress of his soul.
5. He appealed to his love—if thou wilt; with a full conviction of his ability—thou canst; in order to get healed.

II. Consider Jesus.

1. He is moved with tender compassion towards him: this is the alone source of all human salvation.
2. He stretches forth his hand, shewing thus his readiness to relieve him.
3. He touches him: though this was prohibited by the law, and rendered him who did it in any common case, legally unclean.
4. He proves at once his infinite love and unlimited power, forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean.

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

42 And as soon as he had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.

43 And he straitly charged him, and forthwith sent him away;

44 And saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things [a] which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

45 [b] But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: [c] and they came to him from every quarter.

b Luke 5. 15.——c ch. 2. 13.

by his word and by his act: I will; be thou cleansed: and immediately his leprosy was removed. But see on Matt. viii. 2.

Verse 43. Straitly charged] See the reason for this Matt. viii. 4. This verse is wanting in two copies of the Itala.

Verse 45. Began to publish it much] Began to publish πολλα, many things; probably all that he had heard about our Lord's miraculous works.

And to blaze abroad the matter] That is, his own healing: thinking he could never speak too much, nor too well, of him who had thus mercifully and miraculously cleansed him.

Jesus could no more openly enter into the city] A city of Galilee, probably Chorazin or Bethsaida, in which he did not appear, for fear of exciting the jealousy of the secular government; or the envy and malice of the Jewish rulers.

And they came to him from every quarter.] So generally had the poor man, who was cleansed of his leprosy, spread abroad his fame. And can we suppose, that of all these people who came to him from all parts, and to whom he preached the glad-tidings of the kingdom, by the power and authority of God, few or none were saved? This is a common opinion; but every person who seriously considers it, must see that it is unfounded. Without doubt, Christ had thousands that were brought to God by his ministry; though in general, only those are mentioned, who were constant attendants on his person. It would be strange, if while God manifested in the flesh, was preacher, there should be few brought to the knowledge of themselves, and of the truth! In this respect he does not permit his faithful ministers to labour in vain. The Son of man sowed the seed of the kingdom; and it afterwards produced a plentiful harvest. Multitudes of Jews were converted by the preaching of the gospel, and the first Christian church was founded at Jerusalem.

CHAPTER II.

Christ preaches in Capernaum, 1, 2. A paralytic person is brought to him, whose sins are pronounced forgiven, 3—5. The Scribes accuse him of blasphemy, 6, 7. He vindicates himself, and proves his power to forgive sins, by healing the man's disease, 8—11. The people are astonished and edified, 12. He calls Levi from the receipt of custom, 13, 14. Eats in his house with publicans and sinners, at which the Pharisees murmur, 15, 16. He vindicates his conduct, 17. Vindicates his disciples, who were accused of not fasting, 18—22; and for plucking the ears of corn on the Sabbath day, 23—26: and teaches the right use of the Sabbath, 27, 28.

so much as about the door: and he preached the word unto them.

3 ¶ And they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four.

4 And when they could not come nigh unto him for the press, they uncovered the roof where he was: and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay.

5 When Jesus saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee.

6 But there were certain of the scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts,

7 Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies? [a] who can forgive sins but God only?

8 And immediately [b] when Jesus perceived in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, he said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?

9 [c] Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?

10 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (he saith to the sick of the palsy,)

11 I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house.

12 And immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all; insomuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion.

13 ¶ [d] And he went forth again by the sea side; and all the multitude resorted unto him, and he taught them.

14 [e] And as he passed by, he saw Levi the son of Alpheus sitting [f] at the receipt of custom, and said unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him.

15 ¶ [g] And it came to pass, that, as Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans and sinners sat also together with Jesus and his disciples: for there were many, and they followed him.

Borne of four.] Four men, one at each corner of the sofa or couch on which he lay—this sick man appears to have been too feeble to come himself, and too weak to be carried in any other way.

Verse 4. They uncovered the roof] The houses in the East are generally made flat-roofed, that the inhabitants may have the benefit of taking the air on them; they are also furnished with battlements round about, Deut. xxii. 8. Judg. xvi. 27. and 2 Sam. xi. 2. to prevent persons from falling off; and have a trap door by which they descend into the house. This door, it appears, was too narrow to let down the sick man and his couch; so they uncovered the roof, removed a part of the tiles, and having broken it up, taken away the lathes or timber, to which the tiles had been attached, they then had room to let down the afflicted man. See Luke v. 19. and on Matt. x. 27. xxiv. 17.

Verse 7. Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies?] See this explained Matt. ix. 3, &c.

Verse 12. He—took up the bed] The words of PROSPER on this place are worthy of notice.

"What is sin but a deplorable fall, a grovelling on the earth, a repose in the creature, often followed by an universal palsy of the soul; namely, an utter inability to help itself, to break off its evil habits, to walk in the ways of God, to rise or to take one good step towards him? Grace can repair all in a moment: because it is nothing but the almighty will of God, who commands, and does whatever he commands."

Verse 14. Levi] The same as Matthew; he appears to have been a Jew, though employed in the odious office of a tax-gatherer. For an account of his call, see his Gospel, chap. ix. 9, &c.

Verse 16. Sinners] By αμαρτωλοι, the Gentiles or heathen are generally to be understood in the Gospels, for this was a term the Jews never applied to any of themselves. See the note on Matt. ix. 10.

17 When Jesus heard it, he saith unto them, [a] They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

18 ¶ [b] And the disciples of John, and of the Pharisees used to fast: and they come and say unto him, Why do the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast, but thy disciples fast not?

19 And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them? as long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast.

20 But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days.

Verse 17. To repentance.] This is omitted by ABDKL, twenty-seven others; both the Syriac, Persic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Gothic, Vulgate; six copies of the Itala; Euthymius and Augustin. Griesbach has left it out of the text; Grotius, Mill, and Bengel approve of the omission. See on Matt. ix. 13. I leave it as in the parallel place above quoted. Properly speaking, the righteous cannot be called to repentance. They have already forsaken sin, mourned for it, and turned to God. In the other parallel place, Luke v. 32. all the MSS. and Versions retain μετανοιαν repentance.

Verse 18. Why do the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast] See this largely explained on Matt. ix. 14, &c. The following vices are very common to Pharisees.

1. They are more busied in censuring the conduct of others, than in rectifying their own.

2. They desire that every one should regulate his piety by theirs; and embrace their particular customs, and forms of devotion.

3. They speak of and compare themselves with other people, only that they may have an opportunity of distinguishing and exalting themselves.

On the nature, times, and duration of fasting, see Matt. vi. 16. and ix. 15.

Verse 20. In those days.] But instead of εν εκειναις ταις ημεραις, many of the best MSS. and Versions read, εν εκεινη τη ημερα, in that day; viz. the day in which Jesus Christ should be delivered up to the Jews and Gentiles. Mill and Bengel approve of this reading, and Griesbach adopts it. The former part of the verse seems to vindicate the common reading.

Verse 21. No man—seweth] See Matt. ix. 16. No man seweth a piece of unscoured cloth upon an old garment. In the common editions, this verse begins with και and, but this is omitted by almost every MS. and Version of note. The construction of the whole verse is various in the MSS. the translation given here, and in Matt. ix. 16. is intelligible, and speaks for itself.

Verse 23. Went through the corn fields] See on Matt. xii. 1.

Verse 26. The days of Abiathar the high priest] It appears from 1 Sam. xxi. 1. which is the place referred to here, that Ahimelech was then high priest at Nob: and from 1 Sam. xxii. 20. xxiii. 6. and 1 Chron. xviii. 16. it appears, that Abiathar was the son of Ahimelech. The Persic reads Abimelech instead of Abiathar. Theophylact supposes that Abiathar was the priest, and Ahimelech or Abimelech the high priest, and thus endeavours to reconcile both the Sacred Historians. Others reconcile the accounts thus, Ahimelech was called Ahimelech Abiathar, אב ab, father, understood; and Abiathar was called Abiathar Ahimelech, בן ben, son, understood. Probably they both officiated in the high priesthood; and the name of the office was indifferently applied to either.

Shewbread] See Matt. xii. 4.

Verse 27. The sabbath was made for man] That he might have the seventh part of his whole time to devote to the purposes of bodily rest, and spiritual exercises. And in these respects it is of infinite use to mankind. Where no sabbath is observed, there disease, poverty, and profligacy generally prevail. Had we no sabbath, we should soon have no religion. This whole verse is wanting in the Codex Bezæ, and in five of the Itala.

Verse 28. The Son of man is Lord] See on Matt. xii. 7, 8. Some have understood this as applying to men in general, and not to Christ. The Son of man, any man, is Lord of the Sabbath; i. e. it was made for him, for his ease, comfort, and use, and to these purposes he is to apply it. But this is a very harsh, and at the same time a very lax mode of interpretation; for it seems to say that a man may make what use he pleases of the sabbath; and were this true, the moral obligation of the sabbath would soon be annihilated.

God ordained the sabbath not only to be a type of that rest which remains for the people of God, but to be also a mean of promoting the welfare of men in general.

The ordinances of religion should be regulated according to their end, which is the honour of God, and the salvation of men. It is the property of the true religion to contain nothing in it but what is beneficial to man. Hereby God plainly shews, that it is neither out of indigence or interest, that he requires men to worship and obey him; but only out of goodness, and to make them happy. God prohibited work on the Sabbath day, lest servants should be oppressed by their masters, that the labouring beasts might have necessary rest, and that men might have a proper opportunity to attend upon his ordinances, and get their souls saved. To the sabbath under God, we owe much of what is requisite and necessary as well for the body as the soul.

It was a maxim with the Jews, as it should be with all men, that he who neglected to preserve life when it was in his power; was to be reputed a murderer. Every principle of sound justice requires that he should be considered in this light. But if this be the case, how many murderers are there against whom there is no law but the law of God?

To kill—but instead of αποκτειναι, several MSS. and Versions have απολεσαι to destroy. Wetstein and Griesbach quote Theophylact for this reading; but it is not in my copy. Paris Edit. 1635.

Verse 5. With anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts] These words are not found in any of the other Evangelists. For πωρωσει hardness, or rather callousness, the Codex Bezæ, and four of the Itala read νεκρωσει, deadness; the Vulgate and some of the Itala, cæcitate, blindness. Join all these together, and they will scarcely express the fulness of this people's wretchedness. By a long resistance to the grace and spirit of God, their hearts had become callous, they were past feeling. By a long opposition to the light of God, they became dark in their understanding, were blinded by the deceitfulness of sin; and thus were past seeing. By a long continuance in the practice of every evil work, they were cut off from all union with God, the fountain of spiritual life; and becoming dead in trespasses and sins, they were incapable of any resurrection but through a miraculous power of God.

With anger—what was the anger which our Lord felt? That which proceeded from excessive grief, which was occasioned by their obstinate stupidity and blindness: therefore it was no uneasy passion, but an excess of generous grief.

Verse 7. Galilee] See Matt. iv. 13, 15.

Verse 8. Tyre—Sidon, &c.] See Matt. xi. 21.

When they had heard what great things he did, came unto him.] So, if Christ be persecuted and abandoned by the wicked, there are a multitude of pious souls who earnestly seek and follow him. He who labours for God, will always find more than he loses, in the midst of all his contradictions and persecutions.

Verse 9. A small ship] πλοιαριον. The lytil boot, Old English MS. It was doubtless something of the boat kind, which probably belonged to some of the disciples. Our Lord was at this time, teaching by the sea of Galilee. The word ship is utterly improper in many places of our Translation; and tends to mislead the people.

Verse 10. They pressed upon him] Rushed upon him, επιπιπτειν—through eagerness to have their spiritual and bodily maladies immediately removed.

Plagues.] Rather disorders, μαστιγας; properly such disorders as were inflicted by the Lord. The word plague also tends to mislead.

Verse 11. Thou art the Son of God.] Two MSS. and the latter Syriac, have Thou art the Christ, the Son of God. One of Stephens's MSS. has, Thou art the Holy One of God. A MS. in the library of Leicester has συ ει ο Θεος, υιος, Thou art God, the son. This is an uncommon reading, which is not confirmed by any MS. yet discovered.

Verse 14. He ordained twelve] Εποιησε, he made twelve. Here is nothing of what we call ordaining. Christ simply appointed them to be with him; and that he might send them occasionally to preach, &c.

To preach] The Codex Bezæ, Saxon, and all the Itala, except one, add το ευαγγελιον, the Gospel.

Verse 15. To have power to heal—and to cast out devils] The business of a minister of Christ is, 1st. To preach the Gospel; 2dly. To be the physician of souls; and 3dly. To wage war with the Devil, and destroy his kingdom.

Verse 16. Simon, &c.] See on Matt. x. 2, &c.

Verse 17. Sons of thunder] A Hebraism for thunderers; probably so named, because of their zeal and power in preaching the Gospel.

The term Boanerges is neither Hebrew nor Syriac. Calmet and others think that there is reason to believe, that the Greek transcribers have not copied it exactly. בני רעם beney râam, which the ancient Greeks would pronounce Beneregem, and which means, sons of thunder, was probably the appellative used by our Lord: or בני רעש Beni reges, sons of tempest, which comes nearest to the Boanerges of the Evangelist. St. Jerom, on Dan. i. gives בני רעם (which he writes Benereem, softening the sound of the ע ain) as the more likely reading; and Luther, supposing our Lord spoke in Hebrew, gives the proper Hebrew term above mentioned, which he writes Bnehargem. Some think, that the reason why our Lord gave this appellative to the sons of Zebedee was, their desire to bring fire down from heaven, i. e. a storm of thunder and lightning, to overturn and consume a certain Samaritan village, the inhabitants of which would not receive their Master. See the account in Luke ix. 53, 54. It was a very usual thing among the Jews to give surnames, which signified some particular quality or excellence, to their Rabbins. See several instances in Schoetgen.

Verse 19. Into a house.] As Christ was now returned to Capernaum, this was probably the house of Peter, mentioned chap. ii. 1.

Verse 20. Eat bread.] Had no time to take any necessary refreshment.

Verse 21. His friends] Or, relations. On this verse several MSS. differ considerably. I have followed the reading of the Syriac, because I think it the best: οι παρ' αυτου signify merely his relatives, his brethren, &c. see ver. 31. and the phrase is used by the best writers to signify relatives, companions, and domestics. See Kypke in loc.

They said, He is beside himself.] It was the enemies of Christ that raised this report; and his relatives, probably thinking that it was true, went to confine him. Let a Christian but neglect the care of his body for a time, in striving to enter in at the strait gate; let a minister of Christ but impair his health by his pastoral labours, presently "he is distracted;" he has "not the least conduct nor discretion." But let a man forget his soul, let him destroy his health by debaucheries, let him expose his life through ambition, and he may, notwithstanding, pass for a very prudent and sensible man!

Schoetgen contends, that the multitude, and not Christ, is here intended. Christ was in the house: the multitude, οχλος, ver. 20. pressed upon him so, that he could not eat bread. His disciples, or friends, went out, κρατησαι αυτον, (scil. οχλον) to restrain it, viz. the multitude, to prevent them from rushing into the house and disturbing their Master, who was now taking some refreshment. This conjecture should not be lightly regarded.

Verse 22. He hath Beelzebub] See on Matt. xii. 24—26.

25 And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.

26 And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end.

27 [c] No man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man; and then he will spoil his house.

28 [d] Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme:

29 But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation:

33 And he answered them, saying, Who is my mother, or my brethren?

Eternal damnation] Or, everlasting judgment, αιωνιου κρισεως. But instead of κρισεως, BL and two others read αμαρτηματος, sin. The Codex Bezæ, two others, and some of the Fathers, read αμαρτιας, a word of the same import. Grotius, Mill, and Bengel, prefer this latter reading; and Griesbach has queried the common reading, and put αμαρτηματος in the margin. Sin or trespass is the reading of the Coptic, Armenian, Gothic, Vulgate, and all the Itala but two. 2 And he taught them many things by parables, [b]and said unto them in his doctrine,

3 Hearken; Behold, there went out a sower to sow:

4 And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up.

5 And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth:

6 But when the sun was up, it was scorched; and because it had no root, it withered away.

7 And some fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 2. He taught them many things by parables] See every part of this parable of the sower explained on Matt. xiii. 1, &c.

Verse 4. The fowls] του ουρανου, of the air, is the common reading; but it should be omitted, on the authority of nine uncial MSS. upwards of one hundred others, and almost all the Versions. Bengel and Griesbach have left it out of the text. It seems to have been inserted in Mark, from Luke viii. 5.

Verse 9. And he said—He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.] The Codex Bezæ, later Syriac in the margin, and seven copies of the Itala, add, και ο συνιων συνιετω, and whoso understandeth, let him understand.

Verse 10. They that were about him] None of the other Evangelists intimate that there were any besides the twelve with him: but it appears there were several others present; and though they were not stiled Disciples, yet they appear to have seriously attended to his public and private instructions.

Verse 11. Unto you it is given to know] Γνωναι, to know, is omitted by ABKL. ten others, the Coptic, and one of the Itala. The omission of this word makes a material alteration in the sense; for without it, the passage may be read thus—To you the mystery of the kingdom of God is given; but all these things are transacted in parables to those without. Griesbach leaves it doubtful. And Professor White says, probabiliter delendum. I should be inclined to omit it, were it not found in the parallel passages in Matthew and Luke, in neither of whom it is omitted by any MS. or Version. See the Dissertation on parabolical writing at the end of Matt. chap. xiii.

Verse 13. Know ye not this parable?] The scope and design of which is so very obvious.

How then will ye know all parables?] Of which mode of teaching ye should be perfect masters, in order that ye may be able successfully to teach others. This verse is not found in any of the other Evangelists.

Verse 15. THESE are they] Probably our Lord here refers to the people to whom he had just now preached, and who, it is likely, did not profit by the word spoken.

Where the word is sown] Instead of this clause, four copies of the Itala read the place thus—They who are sown by the way side, are they WHO RECEIVE THE WORD NEGLIGENTLY. There are thousands of this stamp in the Christian world. Reader, art thou one of them?

A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3

the word is sown: but when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.

16 And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness;

17 And have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time: afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

18 And these are they which are sown among thorns; such as hear the word, 19 And the cares of this world, [a] and the deceitfulnes of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

20 And these are they which are sown on good ground; such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirtyfold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

21 ¶ [b] And he said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a [c] bushel, or under a bed? and not to be set on a candlestick?

22 [d] For there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested; neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad.

23 [e] If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

24 And he saith unto them, Take heed what ye hear: [f] with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you: and unto you that hear shall more be given.

25 [g] For he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

26 ¶ And he said, [h] So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground;

27 And should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

Verse 19. The deceitfulness of riches] This is variously expressed in different copies of the Itala: the errors—delights of the world—completely alienated (abalienati) by the pleasures of the world. The lusts of other things—which have not been included in the anxious cares of the world—and the deceitfulness of riches. All, all, choke the word!

Verse 21. Is a candle—put under a bushel?] The design of my preaching is to enlighten men; my parables not being designed to hide the truth, but to make it more manifest.

Verse 22. For there is nothing hid, &c.] Probably our Lord means, that all that had hitherto been secret, relative to the salvation of a lost world, or only obscurely pointed out by types and sacrifices, shall now be uncovered and made plain by the everlasting Gospel. See on Matt. v. 15. x. 26.

Verse 24. And unto you that hear shall more be given.] This clause is wanting in DG. Coptic, and four copies of the Itala; and in others where it is extant, it is variously written. Griesbach has left it out of the text, and supposes it to be a gloss on, Whosoever hath, to him shall be given.

Verse 25. He that hath] See on Matt. xiii. 12.

Verse 26. So is the kingdom of God] This parable is mentioned only by Mark, a proof that Mark did not abridge Matthew. Whitby supposes it to refer to the good ground spoken of before, and paraphrases it thus: "What I have said of the seed sown upon good ground, may be illustrated by this parable. The doctrine of the kingdom received in a good and honest heart, is like seed sown by a man in his ground, properly prepared to receive it; for when he hath sown it, he sleeps and wakes day after day, and looking on it, he sees it spring and grow up, through the virtue of the earth in which it is sown, though he knows not how it doth so; and when he finds it ripe, he reaps it, and so receives the benefit of the sown seed. So is it here: the seed sown in the good and honest heart brings forth fruit with patience; and this fruit daily increaseth, though we know not how the Word and Spirit work that increase; and then Christ the husbandman at the time of the harvest, gathers in this good seed into the kingdom of heaven." I see no necessity of enquiring how Christ may be said to sleep, and rise night and day; Christ being like to this husbandman only in sowing and reaping the seed.

Verse 27. And should sleep, and rise night and day] That is, he should sleep by night, and rise by day; for so the words are obviously to be understood.

c Matt. 13. 31. Luke 13. 18. Acts 2. 41. & 4. 4. & 5. 14. & 19. 20.

He knoweth not how.] How a plant grows is a mystery in nature, which the wisest philosopher in the universe cannot fully explain.

Verse 28. Bringeth forth—of herself] Αυτοματη. By its own energy, without either the influence or industry of man. Similar to this is the expression of the poet:

Namque aliæ, NULLIS HOMINUM COGENTIBUS ipsæ
SPONTE SUA veniunt. VIRG. Geor. l. ii. v. 10.

"Some (trees) grow of their own accord, without the labour of man." All the endlessly varied herbage of the field is produced in this way.

The full corn] Πληρη σιτον, FULL wheat; the perfect, full grown, or ripe corn. Lucian uses κενος καρπος, EMPTY fruit; for imperfect, or unripe fruit. See Kypke.

The kingdom of God, which is generated in the soul by the word of life, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, is first very small, there is only a blade, but this is full of promise, for a good blade shews there is a good seed at bottom; and that the soil in which it is sown is good also. Then the ear, the strong stalk grows up, and the ear is formed at the top; the faith and love of the believing soul increase abundantly, it is justified freely through the redemption that is in Christ; it has the ear which is shortly to be filled with the ripe grain, the outlines of the whole image of God. Then the full corn. The soul is purified from all unrighteousness, and having escaped the corruption that is in the world, it is made a partaker of the divine nature, and is filled with all the fulness of God.

Verse 29. He putteth in the sickle] Αποστελλει, he sendeth out the sickle, i.e. the reapers, the instrument, by a metonomy, being put for the persons who use it. This is a common figure. It has been supposed that our Lord intimates here, that as soon as a soul is made completely holy, it is taken into the kingdom of God. But certainly the parable does not say so. When the corn is ripe, it is reaped for the benefit of him who sowed it: for it can be of little or no use till it be ripe: so when a soul is saved from all sin, it is capable of being fully employed in the work of the Lord: it is then, and not till then, fully fitted for the master's use. God saves men to the uttermost, that they may here perfectly love him, and worthily magnify his name. To take them away the moment they are capable of doing this, would be, so far, to deprive the world and the church of the manifestation of the glory of his grace. "But the text says, immediately he sendeth out the sickle," and this means that the person dies, and is taken into glory as soon as he is fit for it." No, for there may be millions of cases, where, though to die would be gain, yet to live may be far better for the church; and for an increase of the life of Christ to the soul. See Phil. i. 21, 24. Besides, if we attempt to make the parable speak here, what seems to be implied in the letter: then we may say, with equal propriety, that Christ sleeps and wakes alternately; and that his own grace grows, he knows not how, in the heart in which he has planted it. Ver. 27.

On these two parables we may remark;

1. That a preacher is a person employed by God, and sent out to sow the good seed of his kingdom in the souls of men.

2. That it is a sin against God to stay in the field, and not sow.

3. That it is a sin to pretend to sow, when a man is not furnished by the keeper of the granary with any more seed.

4. That it is a high offence against God to change the master's seed, to mix it, or to sow bad seed in the place of it.

5. That he is not a seeds-man of God who desires to sow by the way side, &c. and not on the proper ground; i. e. he who loves to preach only to genteel congregations, to people of sense and fashion, and feels it a pain and a cross to labour among the poor and the ignorant.

6. That he who sows with a simple, upright heart, the seed of his Master, shall (though some may be unfruitful) see the seed take deep root, and notwithstanding the unfaithfulness and sloth of many of his hearers, he shall doubtless come with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him. See Quesnel.

Verse 30. Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God?] How amiable is this carefulness of Jesus! How instructive to the preachers of his word? He is not solicitous to seek fine turns of eloquence to charm the minds of his auditors, nor to draw such descriptions and comparisons as may surprise them: but studies only to make himself understood; to instruct to advantage; to give true ideas of faith and holiness, and to find out such expressions as may render necessary truths easy and intelligible to the meanest capacities. The very wisdom of God seems to be at a loss to find out expressions low enough for the slow apprehensions of men. How dull and stupid is the creature! How wise and good the Creator! And how foolish the preacher who uses fine and hard words in his preaching, which, though admired by the shallow, convey no instruction to the multitude.

Verse 31. A grain of mustard seed] See on Matt. xiii. 31, 32.

'Tis probably an interpolation: the text reads better without it.

As they were able to hear] Ακουειν, or to understand, always suiting his teaching to the capacities of his hearers. I have always found that preacher most useful, who could adapt his phrase to that of the people to whom he preached. The one a man should do, and the other he need not leave undone.

Verse 34. He expounded all things to his disciples.] That they might be capable of instructing others. Outside hearers, those who do not come into close fellowship with the true disciples of Christ, have seldom more than a superficial knowledge of divine things.

In the fellowship of the saints, where Jesus the teacher is always to be found, every thing is made plain,—for the secret of the Lord is with them who fear him.

Verse 35. Let us pass over unto the other side.] Our Lord was now by the Sea of Galilee.

Verse 36. THEY took him even as he was in the ship.] That is, the disciples; he was now εν τω πλοιω, in the boat, i. e. his own boat which usually waited on him, and out of which it appears he was then teaching the people. There were several others there which he might have gone in, had this one not been in the place. The construction of this verse is exceedingly difficult, the meaning appears to be this: the disciples sailed off with him just as he was in the boat out of which he had been teaching the people; and they did not wait to provide any accommodations for the passage. This I believe to be the meaning of the inspired penman.

Verse 37. A great storm of wind] See on Matt. viii. 24.

Verse 38. On a pillow] Προσκεφαλαιον probably means a little bed, or hammock, such as are common in small vessels. I have seen several in small packets, or passage boats, not a great deal larger than a bolster.

Verse 39. Peace, be still.] Be silent! Be still! There is uncommon majesty and authority in these words. Who but God could act thus? Perhaps this salvation of his disciples in the boat might be designed to shew forth that protection and deliverance which Christ will give to his followers, however violently they may be persecuted by earth or hell. At least this is a legitimate use which may be made of this transaction.

Verse 40. Why are ye so fearful?] Having me with you.

How is it that ye have no faith?] Having already had such proofs of my unlimited power and goodness.

Verse 41. What manner of man is this] They were astonished at such power proceeding from a person who appeared to be only like one of themselves. It is often profitable to entertain each other with the succour and support which we receive from God in times of temptation and distress; and to adore, with respectful awe, that sovereign power and goodness by which we have been delivered.

Having spoken so largely of the spiritual and practical uses to be made of these transactions, where the parallel places occur in the preceding Evangelist, I do not think it necessary to repeat those things here, and must refer the Reader to the places marked in the margin.

2 And when he was come out of the ship, immediately there met him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit,

3 Who had his dwelling among the tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains:

4 Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.

5 And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones. A. M. 4031. A. D. 27. An. Olymp. CCI. 3.

6 But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped him,

7 And cried with a loud voice, and said, [b] What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the most high God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not.

8 For he said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. The Gadarenes.] Some of the MSS. have Gergasenes, and some of them Gerasenes. Griesbach seems to prefer the latter. See the note on Matt. viii. 28.

The Gadarenes were included within the limits of the Gergasenes. Dr. Lightfoot supposes that of the two dæmoniacs mentioned here, one was of Gadara, and consequently a heathen, the other was a Gergesenian, and consequently a Jew; and he thinks that Mark and Luke mention the Gadarene dæmoniac, because his case was a singular one, being the only heathen cured by our Lord, except the daughter of the Syrophœnician woman.

Verse 2. A man with an unclean spirit] There are two mentioned by Matthew, who are termed dæmoniacs. See on chap. i. 23.

Verse 3. Who had his dwelling among the tombs] See Matt. viii. 28.

Verse 4. With fetters and chains] His strength, it appears, was supernatural, no kind of chains being strong enough to confine him. With several, this man would have passed for an outrageous madman; and diabolic influence be entirely left out of the question; but it is the prerogative of the inspired penman only, to enter into the nature and causes of things, and how strange is it, that because men cannot see as far as the spirit of God does, therefore they deny his testimony. "There was no Devil, there can be none:" why? "Because we have never seen one, and we think the doctrine absurd." Excellent reason! And do you think that any man who conscientiously believes his Bible will give any credit to you? Men sent from God to bear witness to the truth, tell us there were dæmoniacs in their time; you say "no, they were only diseases." Whom shall we credit? The men sent from God, or you?

Verse 5. Crying, and cutting himself with stones.] In this person's case we see a specimen of what Satan could do in all the wicked, if God should permit him: but even the Devil himself has his chain; and he who often binds others, is always bound himself.

Verse 6. Worshipped him] Did him homage; compelled thereto by the power of God. How humiliating to Satan, thus to be obliged to acknowledge the superiority of Christ!

Verse 7. What have I to do with thee] Or, What is it to thee and me, or why dost thou trouble thyself with me? See on chap. i. 24. and Matt. viii. 29. where the idiom and meaning are explained.

Jesus] This is omitted by four MSS. and by several in Luke viii. 28. and by many of the first authority in Matt. viii. 29. See the note on this latter place.

Verse 9. Legion: for we are many.] Could a disease have spoken so? "No, there was no Devil in the case; the man spoke according to the prejudice of his countrymen." And do you think that the spirit of God could employ himself in retailing such ridiculous and nonsensical prejudices? "But the Evangelist gives these as this madman's words, and it was necessary, that as a faithful historian, he should mention these circumstances." But this objection is destroyed by the parallel place in Luke, chap. viii. 30. where the inspired writer himself observes, that the dæmoniac was called Legion, because many dæmons had entered into him.

12 And all the devils besought him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them.

13 And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, (they were about two thousand;) and were choked in the sea.

14 And they that fed the swine fled, and told it in the city, and in the country. And they went out to see what it was that was done.

Verse 10. Out of the country.] Strange, that these accursed spirits should find it any mitigation of their misery to be permitted to exercise their malevolence in a particular district! But as this is supposed to have been a heathen district, therefore the dæmons might consider themselves in their own territories; and probably they could act there with less restraint than they could do in a country where the worship of God was established. See on ver. 1.

Verse 11. A great herd of swine] See the notes on Matt. viii. 30.

Verse 12. ALL the devils] Παντες all, is omitted by many MSS. and Versions: Griesbach leaves it out of the text. Οι δαιμονες is omitted also by several: Griesbach leaves it doubtful. Probably it should be read thus, And they besought him, saying.

Verse 13. Gave them leave.] For επετρεψεν, DH. three others, and three copies of the Itala, have επεμψεν, sent them.

Verse 14. The swine] Instead of τους χοιρους, BCDL. three others, Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, Vulgate and Itala, read αυτους them—And they that fed THEM fled. Griesbach has adopted this reading.

Verse 15. That—had the legion] This is omitted by D. and two others, Æthiopic, Persic, Vulgate, and all the Itala but one. Mill, Bengel, and Griesbach think it should be omitted.

Verse 19. Suffered him not] Ο δε Ιησους, howbeit Jesus, is omitted by ABKLM. twenty-seven others, both the Syriac, both the Persic, Coptic, Gothic, Vulgate, and one of the Itala. Mill and Bengel approve of the omission, and Griesbach leaves it out of the text.

Go home to thy friends, &c.] This was the cause why Jesus would not permit him to follow him now, because he would not have the happiness of his relatives deferred, who must exceedingly rejoice at seeing the wonders which the Lord had wrought.

Verse 20. Decapolis] See on Matt. iv. 25.

Verse 23. My little daughter] Το θυγατριον μου, that little daughter of mine. The words express much tenderness and concern. Luke observes, chap. viii. 42. that she was his only daughter, and was about twelve years of age.

a Lev. 15. 25. Matt. 9. 20.

b Luke 6. 19. & 8. 46.——c Matt. 9. 22. ch. 10. 52. Acts 14. 9.

Verse 25. A certain woman] See Matt. ix. 20.

Verse 26. Had suffered many things of many physicians,—and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse] No person will wonder at this account, when he considers the therapeutics of the Jewish physicians, in reference to hemorrhages, especially of the kind with which this woman was afflicted.

Rabbi Jochanan says, "Take of gum Alexandria, of alum, and of crocus hortensis, the weight of a zuzee each; let them be bruised together, and given in wine to the woman that hath an issue of blood. But if this fails,

"Take of Persian onions nine logs, boil them in wine, and give it her to drink: and say, Arise from thy flux. But should this fail,

"Set her in a place where two ways meet, and let her hold a cup of wine in her hand; and let somebody come behind and affright her, and say, Arise from thy flux. But should this do no good,

"Take a handful of cummin and a handful of crocus, and a handful of fœnu-greek; let these be boiled, and given to her to drink, and say, Arise from thy flux. But should this also fail,

"Dig seven trenches, and burn in them some cuttings of vines not yet circumcised (vines not four years old); and let her take in her hand a cup of wine, and let her be led from this trench and sit down over that; and let her be removed from that, and set down over another: and in each removal say unto her, Arise from thy flux." Dr. Lightfoot gives these as a sample, out of many others extracted from Bab. Shabb. fol. 110.

And from some of these nostrums it is evident, the woman could not be bettered, and from some others it is as evident, that she must be made worse; and from all together it is indubitably certain, that she must have suffered many things;—and from the persons employed, the expense of the medicaments, and the number of years she was afflicted, as she was not a person of great opulence, it is most perfectly credible that she spent all that she had. She was therefore a fit patient for the Great Physician.

The case of this woman was a very afflicting one. 1. Because of the nature of her malady; it was such as could not be made public, without exposing her to shame and contempt. 2. It was an inveterate disorder; it had lasted twelve years. 3. It was continual; she appears to have had no interval of health. 4. Her disorder was aggravated by the medicines she used—she suffered much, &c. 5. Her malady was ruinous both to her health and circumstances—she spent all that she had. 6. She was now brought to the last point of wretchedness, want, and despair; she was growing worse, and had neither money nor goods to make another experiment to procure her health. 7. She was brought so low by her disorder, as to be incapable of earning any thing to support her wretched life a little longer. It has been said, and the saying is a good one, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." Never could the power and goodness of God be shewn in a more difficult and distressful case. And now Jesus comes, and she is healed.

Verse 27. Came in the press behind] She had formed her resolution in faith, she executes it notwithstanding her weakness, &c. with courage; and now she finds it crowned with success.

Verse 31. Thou seest the multitude thronging thee, &c.] Many touch Jesus, who are not healed by him: the reason is, they do it not by faith, through a sense of their wants, and a conviction of his ability and willingness to save them. Faith conveys the virtue of Christ into the soul, and spiritual health is the immediate consequence of this received virtue.

Verse 33. Fearing and trembling] See Matt. ix. 22.

Verse 34. Be whole of thy plague.] Rather, continue whole, not be whole, for she was already healed: but this contains a promise necessary to her encouragement, that her disorder should afflict her no more.

Verse 35. Why troublest thou the Master] These people seem to have had no other notion of our Lord than that of an eminent physician, who might be useful while there was life, but afterwards could do nothing.

Verse 36. Jesus—saith] These words were spoken by our Lord to the afflicted father, immediately on his hearing of the death of his child, to prevent that distress which he otherwise must have felt on finding that the case was now, humanly speaking, hopeless.

Verse 38. He cometh] But, ερχονται they came is the reading of ABCDF. four others, and several Versions.

Wept and wailed] See on Matt. ix. 23.

Verse 40. The father and the mother] Prudence required that they should be present, and be witnesses of the miracle.

And them that were with him] That is, Peter, James and John ver. 37. It is remarkable, that our Lord gave a particular preference to these three disciples, beyond all the rest, on three very important occasions: 1. They were present at the transfiguration. 2. At the raising of Jairus's daughter. 3. At his agony in the garden of Gethsemane.

Where the damsel was lying] Ανακειμενον lying. This word is very doubtful. BDL. one other, Coptic, and latter Arabic with five of the Itala omit it. Other MSS. express the same idea in five different words: Griesbach leaves it out of the text. See his Testament.

Verse 41. Talitha cumi ܛܠܝܬܐ ܩܘܡܝ This is mere Syriac, the proper translation of which the Evangelist has given. The Codex Bezæ has a very odd and unaccountable reading here, ραββι. θυβιτα κουμι, my master, damsel arise. Suidas quotes this place under the word Αββακουμ thus, ταλιθα κουμ. κουμ is the reading of several ancient MSS. but it is certainly a faulty one.

Verse 43. Something should be given her to eat.] For though he had employed an extraordinary power to bring her to life, he wills that she should be continued in existence by the use of ordinary means. The advice of the heathen is a good one.

Nec Deus intersit, nisi dignus vindice nodus Inciderit. HORAT.

"When the miraculous power of God is necessary, let it be resorted to: when it is not necessary, let the ordinary means be used,"—to act otherwise would be to tempt God.

While Christ teaches men the knowledge of the true God, and the way of salvation, he at the same time teaches them lessons of prudence, economy, and common sense. And it is worthy of remark, that all who are taught of him, are not only saved, but their understandings are much improved. True religion, civilization, mental improvement, common sense, and orderly behaviour go hand in hand.

Verse 3. Is not this the carpenter] Among the ancient Jews, every father was bound to do four things for his son. 1. To circumcise him. 2. To redeem him. 3. To teach him the law, 4. To teach him a trade. And this was founded on the following just maxim: "He who teaches not his son to do some work, is as if he taught him robbery!" It is therefore likely that Joseph brought up our Lord to his own trade.

Joses] Several good MSS. read Ιωσητος Joset, and one, with several Versions, read Joseph.

Verses 4—6. See this curious subject explained, Matt. xiii. 55—58.

Verse 8. A staff only] It is likely he desired them to take only one with every two, merely for the purpose of carrying any part of their clothes on, when they should be obliged to strip them off by reason of the heat; for walking staves, or things of this kind, were forbidden, see Matt. x. 10. But probably no more is designed than simply to state, that they must not wait to make any provision for the journey, but go off just as they were, leaving the provision necessary in the present case, to the care of Divine Providence. St. James is represented in ancient paintings, as carrying a gourd bottle on a STAFF across his shoulder.

Verse 9. Shod with sandals] The sandal seems to have been similar to the Roman solea, which covered only the sole of the foot, and was fastened about the foot and ancle with straps. The sandal was originally a part of the woman's dress; ancient authors represent them as worn only by women. In Matt. x. 10. the disciples are commanded to take no shoes, υποδηματα, which word is nearly of the same import with σανδαλια, sandals; but, as our Lord intimates to them that they should be free from all useless incumbrances, that they might fulfil his orders with the utmost diligence and dispatch, so we may suppose that the sandal was a lighter kind of wear, than the shoe: and indeed the word sandal, which is mere Chaldee סנדל might be properly translated a light shoe; as it is compounded of סן sin a shoe (see Targum, Deut. xxv. 9, 10.) and דל dal, thin, slender or mean, as being made not only lighter than the hypodema or shoe, but (probably) also of meaner materials. See many excellent observations on this subject in Martinius's Etymolog. Lexicon, under the word Sandalium.

Verse 11. And whosoever shall not receive you] Ος αν τοπος μη δεξηται, whatsoever PLACE will not receive you: this is the reading of BL. four others, and the latter Syriac in the margin.

Verily, &c.] All this clause is omitted in BCDL. two others, one Arabic, one Persic, Coptic, Armenian, Vulgate, and all the Itala but three. Mill and Beza approve of the omission, and Griesbach leaves it out of the text. It has probably been transferred here from Matt. x. 15. See this subject from ver. 7. to ver. 11. explained at large on Matt. x. 1—15.

Verse 13. Anointed with oil many that were sick] This is only spoken of here, and in James v. 14. This ceremony was in great use among the Jews; and in certain cases it might be profitable. But in the cases mentioned here, which were merely miraculous, it could avail no more of itself than the imposition of hands. It was used symbolically as an emblem of that ease, comfort, and joy, which they prayed God to impart to the sick. For various examples of its use among the Jews, see Lightfoot and Wetstein on this place.

Verse 14. And king Herod heard] την ακοην αυτου, his fame is added by KM. fifteen others, and in the margin of several. It seems necessary to complete the sense.

Verse 15. OR as one of the prophets.] η or, is omitted by ABCEGHKLMS—BHV. and one hundred others, Syriac, all the Arabic, all the Persic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Gothic, Slavonic, Vulgate, two Itala, Origen, Victor, and Theophylact. Bengel, Wetstein, and Griesbach leave it out of the text: the omission of it mends the sense much.

Verse 19. Would have killed] Εζητει, SOUGHT to kill him. C. and five of the Itala.

22 And when the daughter of the said Herodias came in, and danced, and pleased Herod and them that sat with him, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

23 And he sware unto her, [c] Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.

24 And she went forth, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, The head of John the Baptist.

25 And she came in straightway with haste unto the king, and asked, saying, I will that thou give me by and by in a charger, the head of John the Baptist.

26 [d] And the king was exceeding sorry; yet for his oath's sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her.

27 And immediately the king sent [e] an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he went and beheaded him in the prison,

High captains] Χιλιαρχοις; literally, chiefs or captains over a thousand men, military chiefs.

Chief estates] Πρωτοις; probably such as might be called nobles by title only, having no office civil or military; probably, magistrates. See KYPKE on the place.

Verse 23. Unto the half of my kingdom] A noble price for a dance! This extravagance in favour of female dancers has the fullest scope in the East even to the present day. M. Anquetil du Perron, in the preliminary discourse to his Zend Avesta, p. 344. and 345. gives a particular account of the dancers at Surat. This account cannot be transcribed in a comment on the Gospel of God, however illustrative it might be of the conduct of Herodias and her daughter Salome: it is too abominable for a place here. He observes, that the rich vie with each other in the presents they make them of money and jewels; and that persons of opulence have even ruined themselves by the presents they made to those victims of debauch. He mentions a remarkable case, which may throw light on this passage; "That the dancer Laal-koner gained such a complete ascendancy over the Mogul Emperor Maaz-eddin, that he made her joint governess of the empire with himself."

Verse 26. For their sakes which sat with him] Probably these persons joined in with the request, and were glad of this opportunity to get this Light of Israel extinguished; he being a public reprover of all their vices.

Verse 30. The apostles gathered themselves together] For they went different ways before, by two and two, ver. 7. and now they return and meet Christ at Capernaum.

Verse 31. Rest awhile] Rest is necessary for those who labour; and a zealous preacher of the Gospel will as often stand in need of it as a galley slave.

Verse 33. The people] Or, οχλοι, the multitudes. This is wanting in many MSS. but it seems necessary to make the sense clear. There is scarcely a verse in the whole New Testament that has suffered so much from transcribers as this verse. Amidst the abundance of various readings, one can scarcely tell what its original state was. The various readings may be seen in Griesbach.

37 He answered and said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they say unto him, [d] Shall we go and buy two hundred [e] pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat?

Verse 34. Much people, &c.] See this miracle explained on Matt. xiv. 14, &c.

Verse 40. By hundreds and by fifties.] "That is," says Mr. Wesley, "fifty in a rank, and an hundred in file. So, a hundred multiplied by fifty made just five thousand." But if they sat fifty deep, how could the disciples conveniently serve them with the bread and fish?

Verse 41. And blessed] I think the word God should be inserted here, as in Matt. xiv. 19. See the Note there. The food we receive from God is already blest, and does not stand in need of being blessed by man: but God, who gives it, deserves our warmest thanksgivings, as frequently as we are called to partake of his bounty.

Verse 43. Twelve baskets] These were either the baskets used by the disciples, see Matt. xiv. 20. or baskets belonging to some of the multitude, who might have brought some with them to carry provisions, or other things necessary for the sick, whom they brought to Christ to be healed.

Verse 44. Were about five thousand] ωσει, about, is omitted by a great majority of the best MSS. and by the principal Versions. It is wanting in several editions: Bengel, Wetstein, and Griesbach, leave it out of the text. It is omitted by some in the parallel place, Matt. xiv. 21. but it stands without any variation in Luke ix. 14. and John vi. 10. This miracle is mentioned by all the four Evangelists. It is one of the most astonishing that Christ has wrought. It is a miracle which could not be counterfeited, and a full proof of the divinity of Christ.

Verse 45. To the other side before unto Bethsaida] John says, chap. vi. 17. to Capernaum. It is probable our Lord ordered them to steer to one or other of these two places, which were about four miles distant, and on the same side of the sea of Galilee.

It had its name of Gennesaret from גן gen, a garden, and כר sar, a prince, either because the king had a garden there, or because of its great fertility.

Verse 54. They knew him] Επιγνοντες, they recollected him; for he had before preached and wrought miracles in different places of the same country.

Verse 56. Villages] Probably small towns near cities.

Country] Villages at a distance from cities and large public towns. See the notes on Matt. xiv. 34—36.

Christ went about doing good—he confined his ministry and miracles to no place—wherever he went, they stood in need of his help; and whenever they required his assistance, they had it granted immediately. Our Lord's conduct in these respects, is a perfect pattern for every preacher of his gospel.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. Came from Jerusalem] Probably for the express purpose of disputing with Christ, that they might entangle him in his talk. Malice and envy are never idle—they incessantly hunt the person they intend to make their prey.

Verse 2. They found fault.] This is wanting in ABEHLV.

(3 For the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands [a]oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders.

4 And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups, and [b] pots, brasen vessels, and of [c] tables.)

5 [d] Then the Pharisees and Scribes asked him, Why walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashen hands?

6 He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, [e] This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

9 And he said unto them, Full well ye [f] reject nineteen others, and several Versions: Mill and Bengel approve the omission, and Griesbach rejects the word. If the 3d and 4th verses be read in a parenthesis, the 2d and 5th verses will appear to be properly connected, without the above clause.

Verse 3. Except they wash their hands] Πυγμη, the hand to the wrist—Unless they wash the hand up to the wrist, eat not. Several translations are given of this word—that above is from Dr. Lightfoot, who quotes a tradition from the Rabbins stating that the hands were to be thus washed. This sort of washing was, and still continues to be an act of religion in the eastern countries. It is particularly commanded in the Koran, Surat v. ver. 7. "O believers, when ye wish to pray, wash your faces, and your hands up to the elbows,—and your feet up to the ankles." Which custom it is likely Mohammed borrowed from the Jews. The Jewish doctrine is this, "If a man neglect the washing, he shall be eradicated from this world." But instead of πυγμη, the fist or hand, the Codex Bezæ has πυκνη, frequently: and several of the Itala have words of the same signification.

Verse 4. And when they come] This clause is added by our translations, to fill up the sense; but it was probably a part of the original: for εαν ελθωσι is the reading of the Codex Bezæ, Vulgate, Armenian, and most of the Itala. The clause in my old MS. Bible is read thus: and thei turninge ageinfro chepinge. The words seem essentially necessary to a proper understanding of the text; and if not admitted on the above authority, they must be supplied in Italics, as in our common translation.

Except they wash] Or dip; for βαπτιζωνται may mean either. But instead of the word in the text, the famous Codex Vaticanus, (B) eight others, and Euthymius, have ραντιζωνται, sprinkle. However, the Jews sometimes washed their hands previously to their eating: at other times, they simply dipped or plunged them into the water.

Of Cups] Ποτηριων; any kind of earthen vessels.

Pots] Of measures—ξεστων, from the singular ξεστης, a measure for liquids, formed from the Latin sextarius, equal to a pint and a half English. See this proved by Wetstein on this place. My old MS. renders it cruetis.

Of Brasen vessels] Χαλκιων—these if polluted, were only to be washed, or passed through the fire; whereas the earthen vessels were to be broken.

And of tables.] Beds, couches—και κλινων. This is wanting in BL. two others, and the Coptic. It is likely it means no more than the forms or seats, on which they sat to eat. A bed or a couch was defiled, if any unclean person sat or leaned on it—a man with an issue—a leper—a woman with child, &c. As the word βαπτισμους, baptisms, is applied to all these; and as it is contended, that this word and the verb whence it is derived, signify dipping or immersion alone, its use in the above cases refutes that opinion; and shews that it was used, not only to express dipping or immersion, but also sprinkling and washing. The cups and pots were washed; the beds and forms perhaps sprinkled; and the hands dipped up to the wrist.

Verse 5. Why walk not thy disciples] See on Matt. xv. 2—9.

Verse 6. Honoureth me] Με τιμα—but the Codex Bezæ and three copies of the Itala, have με αγαπα, loveth me:—the Ethiopic has both readings.

Verse 8. Washing of pots and cups, &c.] This whole clause is wanting in BL. five others, and the Coptic: one MS. omits this and the whole of the ninth verse. The eighth verse is not found in the parallel place of Matt. xv.

Verse 9. Full well] Καλως;—a strong irony. How noble is your conduct! from conscientious attachment to your own traditions, ye have annihilated the commandments of God!

That ye may keep] But στησητε, that ye may establish, is the reading of D. three others, Syriac, all the Itala, with Cyprian, Jerom, and Zeno. Griesbach thinks it should be received in the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

10 For Moses said, [a] Honour thy father and thy mother; and, [b] Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death;

11 But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is [c] Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me; he shall be free.

12 And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother;

13 Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many such like things do ye.

14 ¶ [d] And when he had called all the people unto him, he said unto them, Hearken unto me every one of you, and understand:

15 There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him: but the things which come out of him, those are they that defile the man.

16 [e] If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

17 [f] And when he was entered into the house from the people, his disciples asked him concerning the parable.

18 And he saith unto them, Are ye so without understanding also? Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing from without entereth into the man, it cannot defile him;

Verse 30. Laid upon the bed.] The dæmon having tormented her, so that her bodily strength was exhausted, and she was now laid upon the couch to take a little rest. The Æthiopic has a remarkable reading here, which gives a very different, and I think a better sense. And she found her daughter CLOTHED, SITTING upon the couch, and the dæmon gone out.

Verse 32. They bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech] Though from the letter of the text, it does not appear that this man was absolutely deprived of speech; for μογιλαλος literally signifies, one that cannot speak plainly—a stammerer: yet it is certain also, that the word means a dumb person; and it is likely that the person in question was dumb, because he was deaf; and it is generally found, that he who is totally deaf, is dumb also. Almost all the Versions understand the word thus: and the concluding words seem to confirm this—He maketh both the deaf to hear, and the DUMB, κωφους, to speak.

Verse 33. And he spit, and touched his tongue] This place is exceedingly difficult. There is scarcely an action of our Lord's life but one can see an evident reason for, except this. Various interpretations are given of it—none of them satisfies my mind. The Abbé Giradeau spiritualizes it thus: 1. He took him aside from the multitude—When Christ saves a sinner, he separates him from all his old evil companions, and from the spirit and maxims of an ungodly world. 2. He put his fingers in his ears—to shew that they could be opened only by the finger, i. e. the power of God, and that they should be shut to every word and voice, but what came from him. 3. Spitting out, he touched his tongue—to shew that his mental taste and relish should be entirely changed; that he should detest those things which he before esteemed, and esteem those which he before hated. 4. Looking up to heaven—to signify that all help comes from God, and to teach the new convert to keep continually looking to, and depending upon him. 5. He groaned—to shew the wretched state of man by sin, and how tenderly concerned God is, for his present and eternal welfare; and to intimate, that men should seek the salvation of God in the spirit of genuine repentance, with strong crying and tears. 6. He said, Be opened—Sin is a shutting of the ears against the words of God; and a tying of the tongue, to render it incapable of giving God due praise. But when the all-powerful grace of Christ reaches the heart, the ear is unstopped, and the man hears distinctly—the tongue is unloosed, and the man speaks correctly.

After all, it is possible that what is attributed here to Christ, belongs to the person who was cured. I will give my sense of the place in a short paraphrase.

And Jesus took him aside from the multitude: and [the deaf man] put his fingers into his ears, intimating thereby to Christ that they were so stopped that he could not hear; and having spat out, that there might be nothing remaining in his mouth to offend the sight, when Christ should look at his tongue, he touched his tongue, shewing to Christ that it was so bound, that he could not speak: and he looked up to heaven, as if to implore assistance from above; and he groaned, being distressed because of his present affliction, and thus implored relief: or not being able to speak, he could only groan and look up, expressing by these signs, as well as he could, his afflicted state, and the desire he had to be relieved. Then Jesus having compassion upon him, said, Be opened; and immediately his ears were opened, so that he could hear distinctly; and the impediment to his speaking was removed, so that he spake properly. The original will admit of this interpretation; and this I am inclined to believe, is the true meaning of this otherwise (to me and many others) unaccountable passage.

poor man: and because he had pronounced the word Ephphathach with peculiar and authoritative emphasis, the Evangelist thought proper to retain the original word; though the last letter in it could not be expressed by any letter in the Greek alphabet.

Verse 35. He spake plain.] ὀρθως, distinctly, without stammering. One MS. has, And he spoke, praising God. There is no doubt of this: but the Evangelist, I think, did not write these words.

Verse 36. Tell no man] See on Matt. viii. 4. This miracle is not mentioned by any other of the Evangelists. Another proof that Mark did not abridge Matthew. For a practical review of the different important subjects of this chapter, see Matt. xv. &c. and particularly the observations at the end.

Verse 37. He hath done all things well] This has been, and ever will be true of every part of our Lord's conduct. In creation, providence, and redemption, he hath done all things well. The wisest Philosophers are agreed, that considering Creation as a whole, it would be impossible to improve it. Every thing has been made in number, weight, and measure; there really is nothing deficient, nothing redundant; and the good of the creature seems evidently more consulted than the glory of the Creator. The creature's good is every where apparent; but to find out how the Creator is glorified by these works, requires the eye of the Philosopher. And as he has done all things well in Creation, so has he in Providence: here also every thing is in number, weight, measure, and time. As Creation shews his Majesty, so Providence shews his bounty. He preserves every thing he has made, all depend on him: and by him are all things supported. But how glorious does he appear in the work of Redemption! how magnificent, ample, and adequate the provision made for the salvation of a lost world! Here, as in providence, is enough for all, a sufficiency for each, and an abundance for eternity. He loves every man, and hates nothing that he has made; nor can the God of all grace be less beneficent than the Creator and Preserver of the universe.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. The multitude being very great] Or rather, There was again a great multitude. Instead of παμπολλου, very great, I read παλιν πολλου, again a great, which is the reading of BDGLM. fourteen others, all the Arabic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Gothic, Vulgate, and Itala, and of many Evangelistaria. Griesbach approves of this reading. There had been such a multitude gathered together once before, who were fed in the same way. See chap. vi. 34, &c.

Verse 2. Having nothing to eat] If they had brought any provisions with them, they were now entirely expended; and they stood in immediate need of a supply.

Verse 3. For divers of them came from far.] And they could not possibly reach their respective homes without perishing, unless they got food.

A. M. 4032. A. D. 28. An. Olymp. CCI. 4.

4 And his disciples answered him, From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness?

5 [a] And he asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven.

6 And he commanded the people to sit down on the ground: and he took the seven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his disciples to set before them; and they did set them before the people.

7 And they had a few small fishes: and [b] he blessed, and commanded to set them also before them.

8 So they did eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets.

9 And they that had eaten were about four thousand: and he sent them away.

10 ¶ And [c] straightway he entered into a ship with his disciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.

11 [d] And the Pharisees came forth, and began to question with him, seeking of him a sign from heaven, tempting him.

12 And he sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation.

13 And he left them, and entering into the ship, again departed to the other side.

14 ¶ [e] Now the disciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf. A. M. 4032. A.D. 28. An. Olymp. CCI. 4.

15 [f] And he charged them, saying, Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod.

16 And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is [g] because we have no bread.

17 And when Jesus knew it, he saith unto them, Why reason ye, because ye have no bread? [h] perceive ye not yet, neither understand? have ye your heart yet hardened?

18 Having eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember, 19 [i] When I brake the five loaves among five thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They say unto him, Twelve.

20 And [k] when the seven among four thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? And they said, Seven.

21 And he said unto them, How is it that [l] ye do not understand?

22 ¶ And he cometh to Bethsaida; and they bring a blind man unto him, and besought him to touch him.

23 And he took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when [m] he had spit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw ought.

do not make a proper improvement of the light and grace which they receive from God, their candlestick is removed, even the visible church becomes there extinct; and the candle is put out—no more means of spiritual illumination are afforded to the unfaithful inhabitants: Rev. ii. 5.

When he had spit on his eyes] There is a similar transaction to this mentioned by John, chap. ix. 6. It is likely this was done merely to separate the eyelids; as in certain cases of blindness, they are found always gummed together. It required a miracle to restore the sight, and this was done in consequence of Christ having laid his hands upon the blind man: it required no miracle to separate the eyelids, and therefore natural means only were employed—this was done by rubbing them with spittle; but whether by Christ or by the blind man, is not absolutely certain. See on chap. vii. 33. It has always been evident, that false miracles have been wrought without reason or necessity, and without any obvious advantage; and they have thereby been detected: on the contrary, true miracles have always vindicated themselves by their obvious utility and importance; nothing ever being effected by them that could be performed by natural means.

If he saw aught.] Ει, if, is wanting in the Syriac, all the Persic and Arabic, and in the Æthiopic; and τι βλεπεις; dost thou see any thing? is the reading of CD. Coptic, Æthiopic, all the Arabic and Persic.

Verse 24. I see men as trees, walking.] His sight was so imperfect, that he could not distinguish between men and trees, only by the motion of the former.

Verse 25. And saw every man clearly.] But instead of απαντας, all men, several excellent MSS. and the principal Versions have απαντα, all things, every object; for the view he had of them before was indistinct and confused. Our Lord could have restored this man to sight in a moment, but he chose to do it in the way mentioned in the text, to shew that he is sovereign of his own graces; and to point out, that however insignificant means may appear in themselves, they are divinely efficacious when he chooses to work by them; and that however small the first manifestations of mercy may be, they are nevertheless the beginnings of the fulness of the blessings of the gospel of peace. Reader, art thou in this man's state? Art thou blind? Then come to Jesus that he may restore thee. Hast thou a measure of light? Then pray that he may lay his hands again on thee, that thou mayest be enabled to read thy title clear, to the heavenly inheritance.

Verse 26. He sent him away to his house] So it appears that this person did not belong to Bethsaida, for in going to his house, he was not to enter into the village.

This miracle is not mentioned by any other of the Evangelists. It affords another proof that Mark did not abridge Matthew's gospel, Verse 27. And Jesus went out, &c.] See on Matt. xvi. 13—20.

Verse 29. Thou art the Christ.] Three MSS. and some Versions add, the son of the living God.

Verse 32. And he spake that saying] Concerning the certainty and necessity of his sufferings—openly: with great plainness, παρρησια, confidence, or emphasis, so that the disciples now began fully to understand him. This is an additional observation of St. Mark. For Peter's reproof, see on Matt. xvi. 22, &c.

Verse 34. Whosoever will come after me] It seems that Christ formed, on the proselytism of the Jews, the principal qualities which he required in the proselytes of his covenant.

The first condition of proselytism among the Jews, was, that he that came to embrace their religion, should come voluntarily, and that neither force nor influence should be employed in this business. This is also the first condition required by Jesus Christ, and which he considers as the foundation of all the rest;—if a man be willing to come after me.

The second condition required in the Jewish proselyte was, that he should perfectly renounce all his prejudices, his errors, his idolatry, and every thing that concerned his false religion; and that he should entirely separate himself from his most intimate friends and acquaintances. It was on this ground that the Jews called proselytism a new birth; and proselytes newborn, and new men, and our Lord requires men to be born again, not only of water, but by the Holy Ghost. See John iii. 5. All this our Lord includes in this word, Let him renounce himself. To this the following scriptures refer; Matt. x. 33. John iii. 3 and 5. 2 Cor. v. 17.

The third condition on which a person was admitted into the Jewish church as a proselyte, was, that he should submit to the yoke of the Jewish law, and bear patiently the inconveniences and sufferings with which a profession of the Mosaic religion might be accompanied. Christ requires the same condition, but instead of the yoke of the law, he brings in his own doctrine, which he calls his yoke, Matt. xi. 29: and his cross, the taking up of which, not only implies a bold profession of Christ crucified, but also a cheerful submitting to all the sufferings and persecutions to which he might be exposed, and even to death itself.

The fourth condition was, that they should solemnly engage to continue in the Jewish religion, faithful even unto death. This condition Christ also requires; and it is comprised in this word. Let him FOLLOW me, see the following verses, and see on the subject of proselytism, Ruth i. 16, 17.

Verse 35. For whosoever will save his life] On this and the following verses, see Matt. xvi. 24, &c.

Verse 38. Whosoever—shall be ashamed of me] Our Lord hints here at one of the principal reasons of the incredulity of the Jews,—they saw nothing in the person of Jesus Christ which corresponded to the pompous notions which they had formed of the Messiah.

If Jesus Christ had come into the world as a mighty and opulent man, clothed with earthly glories and honours, he would have had a multitude of partizans, and most of them hypocrites.

And of my words] This was another subject of offence to the Jews; the doctrine of the cross must be believed; a suffering Messiah must be acknowledged; and poverty and affliction must be borne; and death, perhaps, suffered in consequence of becoming his disciples.

Of him, and of his words, in this sense, the world is, to this day, ashamed.

Of him also shall the son of man be ashamed] As he refused to acknowledge me before men, so will I refuse to acknowledge him before God and his angels. Terrible consequence of the rejection of Christ! And who can help him whom the only Saviour eternally disowns? Reader! Lay this subject seriously to heart: and see the notes on Matt. xvi. 24, &c. and at the end of that chapter.

All the subjects contained in this chapter are very interesting; but particularly, 1. The miraculous feeding of the multitudes, which is a full, unequivocal proof of the supreme divinity of Jesus Christ: in this miracle he truly appears in his creative energy, with which he has associated the tenderest benevolence and humanity. The subject of such a prince must ever be safe; the servants of such a master must ever have kind usage: the follower of such a teacher can never want nor go astray.

2. The necessity of keeping the doctrine of the gospel uncorrupt is strongly inculcated in the caution to avoid the leaven of the Pharisees and of Herod: the doctrine of the cross must not only be observed and held inviolate, but that doctrine must never be mixed with worldly politics. Time serving is abominable in the sight of God: it shews that the person has either no fixed principle of religion, or that he is not under the influence of any.

NOTES ON CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. There be some] This verse properly belongs to the preceding chapter, and to the preceding discourse. It is in this connexion in Matt. xvi. 27, 28. See the notes there.

Verse 2. And after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, &c.] For a full account of the nature and design of the transfiguration, see on Matt. xvii. 1, &c.

A high mountain] I have conjectured, Matt. xvii. 1, that this was one of the mountains of Galilee, some say Hermon, some Tabor; but Dr. Lightfoot thinks a mountain near Cæsarea Philippi to be more likely.

Was transfigured] Four good MSS. and Origen add here, AND WHILE THEY WERE PRAYING he was transfigured; but this appears to be added from Luke ix. 29.

Verse 10. And they kept that saying] This verse is wanting in two MSS. and one of the Itala.

What the rising from the dead should mean.] Οταν εκ νεκρων αναστη When he should arise from the dead, is the reading of D. six others, Syriac, all the Persic, Vulgate, all the Itala and Jerom. Griesbach approves of it.

There is nothing that answers to this verse either in Matthew or Luke.

Verse 12. And how it is written] Rather, as also it is written, 14 ¶ [a] And when he came to his disciples, he saw a great multitude about them, and the scribes questioning with them.

15 And straightway all the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed, and running to him saluted him.

16 And he asked the scribes, What question ye [b] with them?

17 And [c] one of the multitude answered and said, Master, I have brought unto thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit;

18 And wheresoever he taketh him, he [d] teareth him: and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I spake to thy disciples that they should cast him out; and they could not.

19 He answereth him, and saith, O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him unto me.

20 And they brought him unto him: and [e] when he saw him straightway the spirit tare him; and he fell on the ground and wallowed, foaming.

Instead of και ωως, AND HOW it is written, I read καθως, AS ALSO it is written of the Son of man, &c. This reading is supported by AKM. seventeen others, the latter Syriac in the margin, Slavonic, and Armenian. Some think the propriety of adopting this reading is self-evident.

Verse 15. Were greatly amazed] Probably, because he came so unexpectedly; but the cause of this amazement is not very evident.

Verse 17. A dumb spirit] That is, a Dæmon who afflicted those in whom it dwelt, with an incapacity of speaking. The Spirit itself could not be either deaf or dumb. These are accidents that belong only to organized animate bodies.

See this case explained, Matt. xvii. 14, &c.

Verse 18. Pineth away] By these continual torments; so he was not only deaf and dumb but sorely tortured besides.

Verse 20. When he saw him—the spirit tare him; and he fell on the ground, &c.] When this Dæmon saw Jesus, he had great rage, knowing that his time was short; and hence the extraordinary convulsions mentioned above.

Verse 22. If THOU canst DO any thing] I have already tried thy disciples, and find they can do nothing in this case; but if thou hast any power, in mercy use it in our behalf.

Verse 23. If THOU canst BELIEVE] This was an answer to the enquiry above. I can furnish a sufficiency of power, if thou canst but bring faith to receive it. Why are not our souls completely healed? Why is not every Dæmon cast out? Why are not pride, self-will, love of the world, lust, anger, peevishness, with all the other bad tempers and dispositions which constitute the mind of Satan, entirely destroyed? Alas! it is because we do not believe; Jesus is able; more, Jesus is willing; but we are not willing to give up our idols, we give not credence to his word; therefore hath sin a being in us, and dominion over us.

Verse 24. Lord, I believe] The word Lord is omitted by ABCDL, both the Syriac, both the Arabic, latter Persic, Æthiopic, Gothic, and three copies of the Itala. Griesbach leaves it out; the omission, I think, is proper, because it is evident the man did not know our Lord, and therefore could not be expected to accost him with a title expressive of that authority, which he doubted whether he possessed, unless we grant that he used the word κυριε, after the Roman custom, for sir.

Help thou mine unbelief.] That is, assist me against it. Give me a power to believe.

28 [a] And when he was come into the house, his disciples asked him privately, Why could not we cast him out?

29 And he said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting.

30 ¶ And they departed thence, and passed through Galilee; and he would not that any man should know it.

31 [b] For he taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day.

32 But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him.

laid on the pronoun;—thou didst resist the command of my disciples, now I command thee to come out. If this had been only a natural disease, for instance the epilepsy, as some have argued, could our Lord have addressed it, with any propriety, as he has done here; Thou deaf and dumb spirit, come out of him, and enter no more into him! Is the doctrine of dæmoniacal influence false? If so, Jesus took the most direct method to perpetuate the belief of that falsity, by accommodating himself so completely to the deceived vulgar. But this was impossible, therefore the doctrine of dæmoniacal influence is a true doctrine, otherwise Christ would never have given it the least countenance or support.

Verse 29. Prayer and fasting] See on Matt. xvii. 21.

This dæmon may be considered as an emblem of deeply rooted vices, and inveterate habits, over which the conquest is not generally obtained, but through extraordinary humiliation.

This case is related by both Matthew and Luke, but it is greatly amplified in Mark's account, and many new circumstances related. Another proof that Mark did not abridge Matthew.

Verse 30. They—passed through Galilee] See on Matt. xvii. 22—27.

Verse 32. But they understood not] This whole verse is wanting in two MSS. in the first edition of Erasmus, and in that of Aldus. Mill approves of the omission. It does not appear likely, from Matthew's account, that three of the disciples, Peter, James, and John, could be ignorant of the reasons of Christ's death and resurrection, after the transfiguration: on the contrary, from the circumstances there related, it is very probable, that from that time they must have had at least a general understanding of this important subject; but the other nine might have been ignorant of this matter, who were not present at the transfiguration; and probably it is of these that the Evangelist speaks here. See the observations on the transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 9, &c. and xviii. 1.

Verse 33. And being in the house] That is, Peter's house, where he ordinarily lodged. This has been often observed before.

Verse 34. Who should be the greatest.] See on Matt. xviii. 1—5.

Verse 38. We saw one casting out devils in thy name] It can scarcely be supposed, that a man, who knew nothing of Christ, or who was only a common exorcist, could be able to work a miracle in Christ's name: we may therefore safely imagine, that this was either one of John the Baptist's disciples, who, at his master's command, had believed in Jesus, or one of the seventy, whom Christ had sent out, Luke x. 1—7. who, after he had fulfilled his commission, had retired from accompanying the other disciples; but as he still held 39 But Jesus said, Forbid him not: [a] for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me.

40 For [b] he that is not against us, is on our part.

41 [c] For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward.

fast his faith in Christ, and walked in good conscience, the influence of his Master still continued with him, so that he could cast out dæmons as well as the other disciples.

He followeth not us] This first clause is omitted by BCL. three others, Syriac, Armenian, Persic, Coptic, and one of the Itala. Some of the MSS. and Versions leave out the first, some the second clause: only one of them is necessary. Griesbach leaves out the first.

We forbade him] I do not see that we have any right to attribute any other motive to John than that which he himself owns —because he followed not us—because he did not attach himself constantly to thee, as we do, we thought he could not be in a proper spirit.

Verse 39. Forbid him not] If you meet him again, let him go on quietly in the work, in which God owns him. If he were not of God, the dæmons would not be subject to him, and his work could not prosper. A spirit of bigotry has little countenance from these passages. There are some who are so outrageously wedded to their own creed and religious system, that they would rather let sinners perish, than suffer those who differ from them to become the instruments of their salvation. Even the good that is done they either deny or suspect, because the person does not follow them. This also is vanity and an evil disease.

Verse 40. He that is not against us, is on our part.] Or rather, Whosoever is not against YOU, is for YOU. Instead of ἡμῶν, us, I would read ὑμῶν, you, on the authority of ADS HV. upwards of forty others, Syriac, Armenian, Persic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Gothic, Slavonic, Vulgate, Itala, Victor, and Opt. This reading is more consistent with the context—He followed not US,—well, he is not against YOU; and he who is not against you in such a work, may be fairly presumed to be on your side.

There is a parallel case to this mentioned in Numb. xi. 26—19. which, for the elucidation of this passage, I will transcribe. "The Spirit rested upon Eldad and Medad, and they prophesied in the camp. And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp. And Joshua—the servant of Moses—said, My lord Moses, forbid them. And Moses said unto him, Enviest THOU for MY sake? Would God, that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them." The Reader will easily observe, that Joshua and John were of the same bigoted spirit; and that Jesus and Moses acted from the spirit of candour and benevolence. See the notes on Numb. xi. 25—29.

Verse 41. A cup of water to drink] See the notes on Matt. x. 42. xviii. 6—8.

Verse 43. The fire that never shall be quenched] That is, the inextinguishable fire. This clause is wanting in L. three others, the Syriac, and latter Persic. Some eminent critics suppose it to be a spurious reading; but the authorities which are for it, are by no means counterbalanced by those which are against it. The same clause, in ver. 45. is omitted in BCL. seven others, Syriac, latter Persic, Coptic, and one Itala. Eternal fire is the expression of Matthew.

Verse 44. Where their worm dieth not] The bitter reflection "I might have avoided sin, but I did not; I might have been saved, but I would not," must be equal to ten thousand tormentors. What intolerable anguish must this produce in a damned soul!

Their worm. It seems every one has his worm, his peculiar remorse for the evils he did, and for the grace he rejected; while the fire, the state of excruciating torment, is common to all. Reader! may the living God save thee from this worm, and from this fire! Amen.

The fire is not quenched.] The state of punishment is continual; there is no respite, alleviation, nor end!

Verse 43—48. Thy hand—foot—eye—cause thee to offend] See the notes on Matt. v. 29, 30.

Verse 49. For every one shall be salted with fire] Every one of those who shall live and die in sin: but there is great difficulty in this verse. The Codex Bezæ, and some other MSS. have omitted the first clause; and several MSS. keep the first, and omit the last clause—and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt. There appears to be an allusion to Isai. lvi. 24. It is generally supposed that our Lord means, that as salt preserves the flesh with which it is connected, from corruption; so this everlasting fire, το πυρ το ασβεστον this inconsumable fire, will have the property not only of assimilating all things cast into it, to its own nature; but of making them inconsumable like itself.

Scaliger supposes, that instead of πας-πυρι, πασα πυρια, every sacrifice (of flour,) should be read, "Every sacrifice (of flour) shall be salted, and every burnt-offering shall be salted." This, I fear, is taking the text by storm. Some take the whole in a good sense, as refering to the influence of the Spirit of God in the hearts of believers, which shall answer the same end to the soul in preserving it from the contagion that is in the world, as salt did in the sacrifices offered to God to preserve them from putrefaction. Old Trapp's note on the place pleases me as much as any I have seen: "The spirit, as salt, must dry up those bad humours in us, which breed the never-dying worm; and, as fire, must waste our corruptions, which else will carry us on to the unquenchable fire." Perhaps the whole is an allusion to the purification of vessels, and especially such metallic vessels as were employed in the service of the sanctuary. Probably the following may be considered as a parallel text: Every thing that may abide the fire, ye shall make go through the fire, and it shall be clean; and all that abideth not the fire, ye shall make go through the water, Numb. xxxi. 23. Ye, disciples, are the Lord's sacrifice; ye shall go through much tribulation, in order to enter into my kingdom: but ye are salted, ye are influenced by the Spirit of God, and are immortal, till your work is done; and should ye be offered up, martyred, this shall be a means of establishing more fully the glad-tidings of the kingdom: and this spirit shall preserve all who believe on me from the corruption of sin, and from eternal perdition. That converts to God are represented as his offering, see Isai. lvi. 20. the very place which our Lord appears to have here in view.

If this passage be taken according to the common meaning, it is awful indeed! Here may be seen the greatness, multiplicity, and eternity, of the pains of the damned. They suffer without being able to die; they are burned without being consumed; they are sacrificed without being sanctified; are salted with the fire of hell, as eternal victims of the Divine Justice. We must of necessity be sacrificed to God, after one way or other, in eternity; and we have now the choice either of the unquenchable fire of his justice, or of the everlasting flame of his love. Quesnel.

Verse 50. If the salt have lost his saltness] See on Matt. v. 13.

Have salt in yourselves] See that ye have at all times the preserving principle of divine grace in your hearts, and give that proof of it which will satisfy your own minds, and convince or silence the world: live in brotherly kindness and peace with each other: thus shall all men see that you are free from ambition, (see ver. 34.) and that you are my disciples indeed. That it is possible for the salt to lose its savour, and yet retain its appearance, in the most perfect manner, see proved in the note on Matt. v. 13.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

Verse 1. He arose] Κακειθεν αναστας may be translated, he departed thence. The verb ανιστημι has this sense in some of the purest Greek writers. See Kypke. Many transactions took place between those mentioned in the preceding chapter, and these that follow, which are omitted by Matthew and Mark; but they are related both by Luke and John. See Lightfoot, and Bishop Newcome.

Verse 2. Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife?] See this question about divorce, largely explained on Matt. xix. 3—12.

Verse 12. And if a woman shall put away her husband] From this it appears, that in some cases, the wife assumed the very same right of divorcing her husband, that the husband had of divorcing his wife; and yet this is not recorded any where in the Jewish laws, as far as I can find, that the women had such a right. Indeed were the law which gives the permission, all on one side, it would be unjust and oppressive; but where it is equally balanced, the right being the same on each side, it must serve as a mutual check, and prevent those evils it is intended to cure. Among the Jews there are several instances of the women having taken other men, even during the life of their own husbands. Nor do we find any law by which they were punished. Divorce never should be permitted but on this ground "The parties are miserable together, and they are both perfectly willing to be separated." Then, if every thing else be proper, let them go different ways, that they may not ruin both themselves, and their hapless offspring.

Verse 13. And they brought young children] See on Matt. xix. 13—15.

Verse 16. And he took them up in his arms] One of the Itala reads in sinu suo—"in his bosom." Jesus Christ loves little children; and they are objects of his most peculiar care. Who can account for their continual preservation and support while exposed to so many dangers, but on the ground of a peculiar and extraordinary providence?

And blessed them.] Then, though little children, they were capable of receiving Christ's blessing. If Christ embraced them, why should not his church embrace them? Why not dedicate them to God by baptism? whether that be performed by sprinkling, washing, or immersion; for we need not dispute about the mode: on this point let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind. I confess it appears to me grossly heathenish and barbarous, to see parents who profess to believe in that Christ who loves children, and among them those whose creed does not prevent them from using infant baptism, de-his hands upon them, and blessed them.

17 ¶ [a] And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?

18 And Jesus said unto him, why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God.

19 Thou knowest the commandments, [b] Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother.

20 And he answered and said unto him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth.

21 Then Jesus beholding him, loved him, and said unto him, one thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have [c] treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow me.

22 And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions.

23 ¶ [d] And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

24 And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them [e] that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!

25 It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, Who then can be saved?

27 And Jesus looking upon them saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: for [f] with God all things are possible.

28 ¶ [g] Then Peter began to say unto him, Lo we have left all, and have followed thee.

29 And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's;

30 [h] But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses and brethren, and sisters, priving their children of an ordinance by which no soul can prove that they cannot be profited; and through an unaccountable bigotry or carelessness withhold from them the privilege of even a nominal dedication to God; and yet these very persons are ready enough to fly for a minister to baptize their child when they suppose it to be at the point of death! A heart disengaged from the world, and a complete renunciation of it and its concerns; that he might become a proper and successful labourer in the Lord's vineyard. See Matt. xix. 21. To say that it was something else he lacked, when Christ explains here his own meaning, is to be wise above what is written.

Verse 22. And he was sad at that saying] This young man had perhaps been a saint, and an eminent apostle had he been poor! From this, and a multitude of other cases, we may learn, that it is oftentimes a misfortune to be rich—but who is aware of this? and who believes it?

truth of these promises, and some in flat opposition to the text have said, they are all to be understood spiritually. But thus far is plain, that though those who have left all for the sake of Christ, do find among genuine Christians, spiritual relatives, which are as dear to them as fathers, mothers, &c. yet they have the promise of receiving a hundredfold, often literally fulfilled: for wherever a Christian travels among Christians, the shelter of their houses, and the product of their lands, are at his service as far as they are requisite. Besides, these words were spoken primarily to the disciples, and pointed out their itinerant manner of life; and how, travelling about from house to house, preaching the gospel of the grace of God, they should, among the followers of Christ, be provided with every thing necessary in all places, as if the whole were their own. I have often remarked that the genuine messengers of God in the present day, have, as noted above, this promise literally fulfilled.

With persecutions] For while you meet with nothing but kindness form true Christians, you shall be despised, and often afflicted by those who are enemies to God and goodness—but for your comfort ye shall have in the world to come, αιωνι τω ερχομενω, the coming world (that world which is on its way to meet you) eternal life.

Verse 32. And he took again the twelve] Or thus: For having again taking the twelve, &c. I translate και for, which signification it often bears, see Luke i. 22. John xii. 35. and elsewhere. This gives the reason of the wonder and fear of the disciples, FOR he began to tell them on the way what was to befal him. This sense of και I find is also noticed by Rosenmuller. See on Matt. xx. 17—19.

Verse 35. And James and John—come unto him] The request here mentioned, Matthew says, chap. xx. 20. was made by Salome their mother: the two places may be easily reconciled thus. The mother introduced them, and made the request as if from herself; Jesus knowing whence it had come, immediately addressed himself to James and John, who were standing by; and the mother is no farther concerned in the business. Verse 46. Blind Bartimeus] בר bar in Syriac signifies son. It appears that he was thus named because Timeus, Talmeus or Talmai, was the name of his father, and thus the son would be called Bar-talmeus, or Bartholomew. Some suppose υιος Τιμαιου the son of Timeus, to be an interpolation. Bartimeus the son of Timeus, ο τυφλος, THE blind man. It was because he was the most remarkable, that this Evangelist mentions him by name, as a person probably well known in those parts.

Verse 50. And he, casting away his garment] He cast off his outward covering, a blanket, or something of the kind, which kept him from the inclemency of the weather; that he might have nothing to hinder him from getting speedily to Christ. If every penitent were as ready to throw aside his self-righteousness and sinful incumbrances, as this blind man was to throw aside his garment, we should have fewer delays in conversions than we now have; and all that have been convinced of sin would have been brought to the knowledge of the truth. The Reader will at least pardon the introduction of the following anecdote, which may appear to some as illustrative of the doctrine grounded on this text.

A great revival of religion took place in some of the American States, about the year 1773, by the instrumentality of some itinerant preachers sent from England. Many, both whites and blacks were brought to an acquaintance with God, who bought them. Two of these, a white man and a negro, meeting together, began to speak concerning the goodness of God to their souls (a custom which has ever been common among truly religious people.) Among other things they were led to enquire how long each had known the salvation of God; and how long it was after they were convinced of their sin and danger, before each got a satisfactory evidence of pardoning mercy. The white man said, "I was three months in deep distress of soul, before God spoke peace to my troubled, guilty conscience." "But it was only a fortnight," replied the negro, "from the time I first heard of Jesus, and felt that I was a sinner, till I received the knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins." "But what was the reason," said the white man, "that you found salvation sooner than I did?" "This is the reason," replied the other, "you white men have much clothing upon you, and when Christ calls, you cannot run to him; but we poor negroes have only this, (pointing to the mat or cloth which was tied round his waist) and when we hear the call, we throw it off instantly, and run to him."

Thus the poor son of Ham illustrated the text without intending it, as well as any doctor in the universe. People who have been educated in the principles of the Christian religion, imagine themselves on this account, Christians; and when convinced of sin, they find great difficulty to come as mere sinners to God, to be saved only through the merits of Christ. Others, such as the negro in question, have nothing to plead but this, we have never heard of thee, and could not believe in thee of whom we had not heard; but this excuse will not avail now, as the true light is come—therefore they cast off this covering, and come to Jesus. See this miraculous cure explained at large on Matt. xx. 29—34.

Verse 52. Followed Jesus in the way.] Instead of τω Ιησου Jesus, several eminent critics read αυτω, him. This is the reading of ABCDL. fourteen others; Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, latter Syriac in the margin, two Persic, Vulgate, all the Itala, and Origen, once. Jesus is the common reading, but this sacred name having occurred so immediately before, there could be no necessity for repeating it here, nor would the repetition have been elegant.

This very remarkable cure gives us another proof, not only of the sovereign power, but of the benevolence of Christ: nor do we ever see that sovereign power used, but in the way of benevolence. How slow is God to punish! how prone to spare! To his infinite benevolence can it be any gratification to destroy any of the children of men? No! We must take great heed not to attribute to his sovereignty, acts which are inconsistent with his benevolence and mercy. I am afraid this is a prevailing error; and that it is not confined to any religious party exclusively.

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. He sendeth—two of his disciples] This was done but a few days before the pass-over. See our Lord's entry into Jerusalem illustrated, on Matt. xxi. 1—17.

Verse 2. Whereon never man sat] No animal was allowed to be employed in sacred uses, even among the heathen, that had previously been used for any domestic or agricultural purpose; and those which had never been yoked, were considered as sacred. See several proofs of this in the note on Numb. xix. 2. and add this from Ovid:

Bos tibi, Phœbus ait, solis occurret in arvis, Nullum passa jugum curvique immunis aratri.
Met. lib. iii. v. 10.

The Delphic oracles this answer give:
Behold among the fields a lonely cow,
Unworn with yokes, unbroken to the plough.

Verse 3. And straightway he will send him hither.] From the text, I think it is exceedingly plain, that our Lord did not beg, but borrow the colt; therefore the latter clause of this

7 And they brought the colt to Jesus, and cast their garments on him; and he sat upon him.

9 And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, saying, [b] Hosanna! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord:

10 Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord: [c] Hosanna in the highest!

verse should be understood as the promise of returning him. Is not the proper translation the following? And if any one say to you, why do ye this? Say; The Lord hath need of him, and will speedily send him back hither—και ευθεως αυτον αποστελλει ωδε. Some eminent critics take the same view of the passage.

Verse 6. And they let them go] Having a full assurance that the beast should be safely and speedily restored.

Verse 10. In the name of the Lord] Omitted by BCDLU. some others, and several Versions. Griesbach leaves it out.

Hosanna in the highest!] See on Matt. xxi. 9.

Verse 11. When he had looked round about upon all things] He examined every thing—to see if the matters pertaining to the divine worship were properly conducted—to see that nothing was wanting—nothing superfluous.

And now the eventide was come] The time in which he usually left Jerusalem, to go to Bethany.

Verse 13. For the time of figs was not yet.] Rather, For it was not the season of gathering figs yet. This I am fully persuaded is the true sense of this passage, ου γαρ ην καιρος συκων. For a proof that καιρος here signifies the time of gathering the figs, see the LXX. in Psal. i. 3. He bringeth forth his fruit, εν καιρω αυτου, in his season; i. e. in the time in which fruits should be ripe, and fit for gathering. See also Mark xii. 2. And at the season, τω καιρω, the time of gathering the fruits of the vineyard. Matt. xxi. 34. When the time of the fruit drew near; ὁ καιρος των καρπων, the time in which the fruits were to be gathered, for it was then that the Lord of the vineyard sent his servants to receive the fruits; i. e. so much of them as the holder of the vineyard was to pay to the owner by way of rent; for in those times rent was paid in kind.

To the above may be added Job v. 26. Thou shalt come to thy grave in FULL AGE, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season; κατα καιρον, in the time in which it should be reaped.

When our Lord saw this fig-tree by the way-side, apparently flourishing, he went to it to gather some of the figs—being on the way-side, it was not private, but public property; and any traveller had an equal right to its fruit. As it was not as yet the time for gathering-in the fruits, and yet about the time when they were ready to be gathered, our Lord with propriety expected to find some. But as this happened about five days before that pass-over, on which Christ suffered, and the pass-over that year fell on the beginning of April, it has been asked, "how could our Lord expect to find ripe figs in the end of March?" Answer, Because figs were ripe in Judea as early as the pass-over. Besides, the fig-tree puts forth its fruit first, and afterwards its leaves. Indeed this tree, in the climate which is proper for it, has fruit on it all the year round, as I have often seen. All the difficulty in the text may be easily removed by considering that the climate of Judea is widely different from that of Great Britan. The summer begins there in March, and the harvest at the pass-over, as all travellers into those countries testify: therefore as our Lord met with this tree five days before the pass-over, it is evident, 1st. That it was the time of ripe figs; and 2dly. That it was not the time of gathering them, because this did not begin till the pass-over, and the transaction here mentioned, took place five days before.

For farther satisfaction on this point, let us suppose. I. That this tree was intended to point out the state of the Jewish people. 1. They made a profession of the true religion. 2. They considered themselves the peculiar people of God, and despised and reprobated all others. 3. They were only hypocrites, having nothing of religion but the profession, leaves, and no fruit.

II. That our Lord's conduct towards this tree is to be considered as emblematical of the treatment, and final perdition which was to come upon this hypocritical and ungodly nation. 1. It was a proper time for them to have borne fruit: Jesus had been preaching the doctrine of repentance and salvation among them for more than three years; the choicest influences of heaven had descended upon them, and every thing was done in this vineyard that ought to be done, in order to make it fruitful. 2. The time was now at hand in which God would require fruit, good fruit, and if it did not produce such, the tree should be hewn down by the Roman axe. Therefore, 1. The tree is properly the Jewish nation. 2. Christ's curse, the sentence of destruction which had now gone out against it; and 3. its withering away, the final and total ruin of the Jewish state by the Romans. His cursing the fig-tree was not occasioned by any resentment at being disappointed at not finding fruit on it, but to point out unto his disciples, the wrath which was coming upon a people who had now nearly filled up the measure of their iniquity.

A fruitless soul that has had much cultivation bestowed on it, may expect to be dealt with as God did with this unrighteous nation. See on Matt. xxi. 19, &c.

Verse 15. And they come] Several MSS. and Versions have παλιν, again. This was the next day after our Lord's triumphant entry into Jerusalem, for on the evening of that day he went to Bethany and lodged there, ver. 11. and Matt. xxi. 17. and returned the next morning to Jerusalem.

Verse 16. Should carry any vessel] Among the Jews the word כלי keli, vessel, had a vast latitude of meaning, it signified arms, Jer. xxi. 4. Ezek. ix. 1. clothes, Deut. xxii. 5. and instruments of music, Psal. lxxi. 22. It is likely that the Evangelist uses the Greek word σκευος in the same sense, and by it points out any of the things which were bought and sold in the temple.

Verse 17. And he taught—them] See on Matt. xxi. 12.

Verse 19. He went out of the city.] To go to Bethany.

Verse 22. Have faith, in God.] Εχετε πιστιν Θεου is a mere Hebraism: have the faith of God, i. e. have strong faith, or the strongest faith, for thus the Hebrews expressed the superlative degree; so the mountains of God mean exceeding great mountains, the hail of God, exceeding great hail, &c.

Verse 25. When ye stand praying] This expression may mean no more than, When ye are disposed, or have a mind to pray, i. e. whenever ye perform that duty. And it is thus used and explained in the Koran, Surat. v. ver. 7. See on Matt. xxi. 20—22. But, the Pharisees loved to pray standing, that they might be seen of men.

Verse 32. They feared the people] Or rather, We fear, &c. Instead of εφοβουντο they feared; the Codex Bezæ, seven others, latter Syriac, Arabic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and all the Itala, read φοβουμεν, or φοβουμεθα. The common reading appears to me quite improper.

We fear the people. Εαν, if, before ειπωμεν, we shall say, is omitted by ABCEFGHLS. and more than fifty others. Bengel leaves it out of the text, and puts a note of interrogation after Εξ ανθρωπων; and then the whole passage reads thus: But shall we say, Of men? They feared the people, &c. This change renders the adoption of φοβουμεν, we fear, unnecessary. Several critics prefer this mode of distinguishing the text. However the critics may be puzzled with the text, the scribes, chief priests and elders were worse puzzled with our Lord's question. They must convict themselves or tell a most palpable falsehood. They told the lie, and so escaped for the present.

1. Envy, malice, and double-dealing have always a difficult part to act, and are ultimately confounded by their own projects, and ruined by their own operations. On the other hand, simplicity and sincerity are not obliged to use a mask, but always walk in a plain way.

2. The case of the barren fig-tree which our Lord cursed, has been pitifully misunderstood and misapplied. The whole account of this transaction, as stated above, I believe to be correct; it is so much in our Lord's usual manner, that the propriety of it will scarcely be doubted. He was ever acting the part of the philosopher, moralist, and divine, as well as that of the saviour of sinners. In his hand, every providential occurrence and every object of nature, became a means of instruction: the stones of the desert, the lilies of the field, the fowls of heaven, the beasts of the forest, fruitful and unfruitful trees, with every ordinary occurrence, were so many grand texts, from which he preached the most illuminating and impressive sermons, for the instruction and salvation of his audience. This wisdom and condescension cannot be sufficiently admired. But shall the example of the fruitless fig-tree, be lost on us as well as on the Jews? God forbid! Let us therefore take heed, lest having been so long unfruitful, God should say, Let no fruit appear on thee hereafter for ever! and in consequence of this, we wither and die away!

AND [a] he began to speak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and set a hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country.

2 And at the season, he sent to the husbandmen a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard.

3 And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty.

4 And again he sent unto them another servant; and at him they cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully handled.

5 And again he sent another; and him they killed, and many others; beating some, and killing some.

6 Having yet therefore one son, his well-beloved, he sent him also last unto them, saying, They will reverence my son.

7 But those husbandmen said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be our's.

8 And they took him, and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

9 What shall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do? he will come and destroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others.

10 And have you not read this scripture; [b] The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner:

11 This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?

12 [c] And they sought to lay hold on him, but feared the people: for they knew that he had spoken the parable against them: and they left him, and went their way.

13 ¶ [d] And they send unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words.

14 And when they were come, they say unto him, Master, we know that thou art true, and carest for no man: for thou regardest not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth: Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not?

15 Shall we give, or shall we not give? But

NOTES ON CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. A certain man planted a vineyard] See this parable explained, Matt. xxi. 33—41.

Verse 4. At him they cast stones and wounded him in the head] Or rather, as most learned men agree, they made short work of it, εκεφαλαιωσαν. We have followed the Vulgate, illum in capite vulneraverunt, in translating the original, wounded him in the head, in which signification I believe the word is found in no Greek writer. Ανακεφαλαιοομαι signifies to sum up, to comprise, and is used in this sense by St. Paul, Rom. xiii. 9. From the Parable we learn, that these people were determined to hear no reason, to do no justice, and to keep the possession and the produce by violence; therefore they fulfilled their purpose in the fullest and speediest manner, which seems to be what the Evangelist intended to express by the word in question. Mr. Wakefield translates, they speedily sent him away; others think the meaning is, they shaved their heads and made them look ridiculously; this is much to the same purpose, but I prefer, They made short work of it. Dr. Lightfoot, De Dieu, and others, agree in the sense given above; and this will appear the more probable, if the word λιθοβολησαντες, they cast stones, be omitted, as it is by BDL. the Coptic. Vulgate, and all the Itala.

Verse 7. This is the heir] So they appear to have acknowledged in their consciences, that this was the Messiah, the heir of all things.

The inheritance shall be our's] By slaying him we shall maintain our authority, and keep possession of our revenues.

Verse 9. And will give the vineyard unto others.] The vineyard must not perish with the husbandmen; it is still capable of producing much fruit, if it be properly cultivated. I will give it into the care of new vine-dressers, the Evangelists and Apostles.—And under their ministry, multitudes were brought to God before the destruction of Jerusalem.

Verse 13. And they send unto him] See this, and to ver. 17. largely explained on Matt. xxii. 15—22.

Verse 15. Shall we give, or shall we not give? This is wanting in the Codex Bezæ, and in several Versions.

he, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them, Why tempt ye me? bring me a [a] penny, that I may see it.

16 And they brought it. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? And they said unto him, Cæsar's.

17 And Jesus answering said unto them, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; and to God the things that are God's. And they marvelled at him.

18 ¶ [b] Then come unto him the Sadducees, [c] which say there is no resurrection; and they asked him, saying,

19 Master, [d] Moses wrote unto us, If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

20 Now there were seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and dying left no seed.

21 And the second took her, and died, neither left he any seed: and the third likewise.

22 And the seven had her, and left no seed: last of all the woman died also.

23 In the resurrection therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife.

24 And Jesus answering said unto them, Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the scriptures, neither the power of God?

25 For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but [e] are as the angels which are in heaven.

26 And as touching the dead, that they rise: have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush, God spake unto him, saying, [f] I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

27 He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: ye therefore do greatly err.

28 ¶ [g] And one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?

29 And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, [h] Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord:

30 And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.

31 And the second is like, namely this, [i] Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

32 And the scribe said unto him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; [k] and there is none other but he:

33 And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, [l] is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices.

34 And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far 35 ¶ [b] And Jesus answered and said, while he taught in the temple, How say the scribes that Christ is the son of David?

36 For David himself said [c] by the Holy Ghost, [d] The LORD said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

37 David therefore himself calleth him Lord; and whence is he then his son? And the common people heard him gladly.

contained in verses 32, 33, 34. is not found either in Matthew or Luke. This is another proof against Mark's supposed abridgement.

Verse 34. Thou art not far from the kingdom of God.] This scribe appears to have been a prudent, sensible, and pious man; almost a Christian, so near the kingdom of God, that he might have easily stepped in. It is very probable that he did at last believe in and confess Jesus.

Verse 35. How say the scribes] See Matt. xxii. 41, &c.

Verse 37. The common people heard him gladly.] And were doubtless many of them brought to believe and receive the truth. By the comparatively poor the gospel is still best received.

Verse 38. Beware of the scribes] See on Matt. xxiii. 1, &c.

Verse 41. Cast money into the treasury] It is worthy of observation, that the money put into the treasury, even by the rich, is termed by the Evangelist χαλκον, brass money, probably that species of small brass coin which was called פרוטה prutah among the Jews, two of which make a farthing, and twenty-four an Italian assarius, which assarius is the twenty-fourth part of a silver penny. We call this, mite, from the French, miete, which signifies a crumb, or very small morsel. The prutah was the smallest coin in use among the Jews: and there is a canon among the Rabbins that no person shall put less than two prutahs into the treasury. This poor widow would not give less, and her poverty prevented her from giving more. And whereas it is said that many rich persons cast in MUCH, πολλα (many) this may only refer to the number of the prutas which they threw in, and not to the value. What opinion should we form of a rich man, who, in a collection for a public charity, only threw in a handful of halfpence? See Luke xxi. 1. and see the note on Matt. v. 26. The whole of this account is lacking in Matthew. Another proof that Mark did not abridge him.

Let us examine this subject a little more closely; Jesus prefers the widow's two mites to all the offerings made by the rich.

In the preceding account, ver. 41, it is said, Jesus beheld how the people cast money into the treasury. To make this relation the more profitable, let us consider Christ the observer and judge of human actions.

1. Christ observes all men and all things, all our actions are before his eyes; what we do in public and what we do in private are equally known unto him.

2. He observes the state and situation we are in; his eye was upon the abundance of the rich who had given much; and he was well acquainted with the poverty and desolate state of the widow who had given her all, though that was but little in itself. What an awful thought for the rich! "God sees every penny I possess, and constantly observes how I lay it out." What a comfortable thought for the poor and desolate! The eye of the most merciful and bountiful Jesus continually beholds my poverty and distress, and will cause them to work for my good.

3. Christ sees all the motives which lead men to perform their respective actions; and the different motives which lead them to perform the same action: he knows whether they act through vanity, self-love, interest, ambition, hypocrisy, or whether through love, charity, zeal for his glory, and a hearty desire to please him.

4. He observes the circumstances which accompany our actions; whether we act with care or negligence, with a ready mind or with reluctance.

5. He observes the judgment which we form of that which

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That [a] this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury:

44 For all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, [b] even all her living.

we do in his name; whether we esteem ourselves more on account of what we have done, speak of it to others, dwell on our labours, sufferings, expenses, success, &c. or whether we humble ourselves because we have done so little good, and even that little in so imperfect a way.

II. See the judgment Christ forms of our actions.

1. He appears surprised that so much piety should be found with so much poverty, in this poor widow.

2. He shews that works of charity, &c. should be estimated, not by their appearance, but by the spirit which produces them.

3. He shews by this that all men are properly in a state of equality; for though there is, and ought to be a difference in outward things, yet God looks upon the heart, and the poorest person has it in his power to make his mite as acceptable to the Lord, by simplicity of intention, and purity of affection, as the millions given by the affluent. It is just in God to rate the value of an action by the spirit in which it is done.

4. He shews that men should judge impartially in cases of this kind, and not permit themselves to be carried away to decide, for a person by the largeness of the gift on the one hand, or against him by the smallness of the bounty on the other. Of the poor widow it is said, she has cast in more than all the rich. Because, 1. she gave more, she gave her all, and they gave only a part. 2. She did this in a better spirit, having a simple desire to please God. Never did any king come near the liberality of this widow, she gave all that she had, ὁλον τον βιον αυτης, her whole life, i. e. all that she had to provide for one day's sustenance, and could have no more, till by her labour she had acquired it. What trust must there be in the Divine Providence to perform such an act as this!

Two important lessons may be learnt from her conduct. 1. A lesson of humiliation to the rich, who, by reason of covetousness on the one hand, and luxury on the other, give but little to GOD and the poor. 2. A lesson of reproof to the poor, who, through distrust of God's providence, give nothing at all. Our possessions can only be sanctified by giving a portion to God. There will be infallibly a blessing in the remainder, when a part has been given to God and the poor. If the rich and the poor reflect seriously on this, the one will learn pity, the other liberality, and both be blessed in their deed. He must be a poor man indeed, who cannot find one poorer than himself.

5 And Jesus answering them began to say, [b] Take heed lest any man deceive you:

6 For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

7 And when ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled: for such things must needs be; but the end shall not be yet.

8 For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be earthquakes in divers places, and there shall be famines and troubles: [c] these are the beginnings of [d] sorrows.

9 But [e] take heed to yourselves: for they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten: and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them.

10 And [f] the gospel must first be published among all nations.

11 [g] But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, [h] but the Holy Ghost.

13 [k] And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but [l] he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

14 [m] But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, [n] spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand,) then [o] let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains:

15 And let him that is on the house-top not go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house:

16 And let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment.

17 [p] But woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!

18 And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.

19 [q] For in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be.

Verse 8. The beginnings] For αρχαι, many MSS. and Versions have αρχη, the beginning, singular.

Verse 9. Councils] Συνεδρια, Sanhedrins. The grand Sanhedrin consisted of seventy-two elders; six chosen out of each tribe; this was the national council of state; and the small Sanhedrins, which were composed of twenty-three counsellors.

Synagogues] Courts of justice for villages, &c. consisting of three magistrates, chosen out of the principal directors of the synagogue in that place.

Rulers] Or governors. The Roman deputies, such as Pontius Pilate, &c.

Kings] The Tetrarchs of Judea and Galilee who bore this name. See chap. vi. 27.

Verse 10. And the gospel must first be published among all nations.] Many of the Evangelistaria omit this verse. Its proper place seems to be after verse the thirteenth.

Verse 11. Neither—premeditate] This is wanting in BDL. five others, Coptic, Æthiopic, Vulgate, Itala. Griesbach leaves it doubtful. On this verse see Matt. x. 19.

Verse 14. Let him that readeth understand] What he readeth, is added by D. and three of the Itala, perhaps needlessly.

Verse 15. House-top] See on Matt. xxiv. 17.

Verse 20. Had shortened those days] Because of his chosen, added by D. Armenian, and five of the Itala. See Matt. xxiv. 22.

Verse 30. This generation] Η γενεα αυτη, this very race of men. It is certain that this word has two meanings in the scriptures; that given in the text, and that above. Generation signifies a period of a certain number of years, sometimes more, sometimes less. In Deut. i. 35, and ii. 14. Moses uses the word to point out a term of thirty-eight years, which was precisely the number in the present case; for Jerusalem was destroyed about thirty-eight years after our Lord delivered this prediction. But as there are other events in this chapter which certainly look beyond the destruction of Jerusalem, and which were to take place before the Jews should cease to be a distinct people, I should therefore prefer the translation given above. See on Matt. xxiv. 34.

Verse 32. Neither the Son] This clause is not found either in Matthew or Luke, and Ambrose says it was wanting in some Greek copies in his time. To me it is utterly unaccountable, how Jesus who knew so correctly all the particulars which he here lays down, and which were to a jot and tittle verified by the event—how he who knew that not one stone should be left on another, should be ignorant of the day and hour when this should be done, though Daniel, chap. ix. 24, &c. could fix the very year, not less than five hundred years before it happened—how he in whom the fulness of the god head dwelt bodily, and all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, should not know this small matter, I cannot comprehend, but on this ground, that the Deity, which dwelt in the Man Christ Jesus, might, at one time, communicate less of the knowledge of futurity to him, than at another. However, I strongly suspect that the clause was not originally in this gospel. Its not being found in the parallel places in the other Evangelists, is, in my opinion, a strong presumption against it. But Mr. M'Knight and others, solve this difficulty in the following manner. They suppose the verb οιδεν to have the force of the Hebrew conjugation Hiphel, in which, verbs are taken in a caustive, declarative, or permissive sense: and that it means here make known, or promulge, as it is to be understood in 1 Cor. ii. 2. This intimates that this secret was not to be made known, either by men or angels, no, not even by the Son of man himself, but it should be made known by the Father only, in the execution of the purposes of his justice. I am afraid this only cuts the knot, but does not untie it.

Verse 34. Left his house] Οικιαν, family. Our blessed Lord and Master, when he ascended to heaven, commanded his servants to be faithful and watchful. This fidelity to which he exhorts his servants consists in doing every thing well which is to be done in the heart or in the family, according, and commanded the porter to watch.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

35 [d] Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning.

36 Lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

37 And what I say unto you I say unto all, [b] Watch.

a Matt. 24. 42, 44.

b Matt. 25. 13. 1 Cor. 16. 13.

to the full extent of the duty. The watchfulness consists in suffering no stranger nor enemy to enter in by the senses which are the gates of the soul; in permitting nothing which belongs to the master to go out without his consent; and in carefully observing all commerce and correspondence which the heart may have abroad in the world, to the prejudice of the master's service. See Quesnel.

Verse 35. Watch ye therefore] The more the master is expected, the more diligent ought the servants to be in working, watching, and keeping themselves in readiness. Can one who has received the sentence of his death and has no right to live a moment, need any admonition to prepare to die? does not a prisoner who expects his deliverance hold himself in continual readiness to leave his dungeon?

Verse 36. He find you sleeping.] A porter asleep, exposes the house to be robbed, and well deserves punishment. No wonder that the man is constantly suffering loss, who is frequently off his guard.

Our Lord shews us in this parable, 1. That himself, ascended to heaven, is the man gone from home. 2. That believers collectively are his family. 3. That his servants are those who are employed in the work of faith and labour of love. 4. That the porter represents the ministers of his gospel, who should continually watch for the safety and welfare of the whole flock. 5. That every one has his own work,—that which belongs to himself and to none other; and for the accomplishment of which, he receives sufficient strength from his Lord. 6. That these servants and porters shall give an account to their Lord, how they have exercised themselves in their respective departments. 7. And that as the master of the family will certainly come to require this account at a time when men are not aware, therefore they should be always watchful and faithful. And 8. That this is a duty incumbent on every soul of man, What I say unto you I say unto ALL, WATCH! If after all these warnings, the followers of God be found careless, their misery and condemnation must be great.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Jews conspire against Christ, 1, 2. He is anointed in the house of Simon the leper, 3—9. Judas Iscariot sells him to the chief priests for thirty pieces of money, 10, 11. He orders his disciples to prepare the pass-over, 12—16. Predicts his approaching death, 17—21. Institutes the holy Eucharist, 22—26. Foretells the unfaithfulness of his disciples in general, 27, 28, and Peter's denial, 29—31. His agony in the garden, 32—36. The disciples overcome by sleep, 37—42. Judas comes with a mob from the chief priests, and betrays him with a kiss; they seize him, 43—49. The disciples flee, 50. A young man following and about to be apprehended, makes his escape, 51, 52. Jesus is brought before the chief priests, and Peter follows at a distance, 53, 54. He is examined, insulted and abused, and condemned on false evidence, 55—65. Peter thrice denies him, reflects on his wickedness, and repents of his sin.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIV.

Verse 1. Unleavened bread] After they began to eat unleavened bread: see on Matt. xxvi. 2.

Verse 3. Alabaster box] Among critics and learned men there are various conjectures concerning the alabaster mentioned by the Evangelists: some think it means a glass phial a woman having an alabaster box of ointment, of [a] spikenard, very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

4 And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?

5 For it might have been sold for more than three hundred [b] pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her.

6 And Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me.

7 For [c] ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good; but me ye have not always.

8 She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.

9 Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of, for a memorial of her.

10 ¶ [d] And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests, to betray him unto them.

11 And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray him.

12 ¶ [e] And the first day of unleavened bread, when they [f] killed the pass-over, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou mayest eat the pass-over?

13 And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him.

others, that it signifies a small vessel without a handle, from α negative, and λαβη a handle; and others imagine, that it merely signifies a perfume or essence-bottle. There are several species of the soft calcarious stone called alabaster, which are enumerated and described in different chemical works.

Spikenard] Or nard. An Indian plant whose root is very small and slender. It puts forth a long and small stalk, and has several ears or spikes even with the ground, which has given it the name of spikenard: the taste is bitter, acrid, and aromatic, and the smell agreeable. CALMET.

Very precious] Or rather, unadulterated: this I think is the proper meaning of πιστικης. Theophilact gives this interpretation of the passage: "unadulterated nard, and prepared with fidelity." Some think that πιστικη is a contraction of the Latin spicatæ, and that it signifies the spicated nard, or what we commonly call the spikenard. But Dr. Lightfoot gives a different interpretation. Πιστικη he supposes to come from the Syriac פיסתקא pistike, which signifies the acorn: he would therefore have it to signify an aromatic confection of nard, maste, or myrobalane. See his Hebrew and Talmudical Exercitations; and see Scheuchzer's Physica Sacra.

She brake the box] Rather, she broke the seal. This is the best translation I can give of the place; and I give it for these reasons: 1. That it is not likely that a box exceedingly precious in itself, should be broken to get out its contents. 2. That the broken pieces would be very inconvenient if not injurious to the head of our Lord, and to the hands of the woman. 3. That it would not be easy effectually to separate the oil from the broken pieces. And 4. That it was a custom in the eastern countries, to seal the bottles with wax that held the perfumes; so that to come at their contents no more was necessary than to break the seal, which this woman appears to have done; and when the seal was thus broken, she had no more to do, than to pour out the liquid ointment, which she could not have done had she broken the bottle. The bottles which contain the گل عطر or attyr of roses, which come from the East, are sealed in this manner. See a number of proofs relative to this point in HARMER'S Observations, vol. iv. 469.

Verse 5. It might have been sold] Το μυρον this ointment, is added by ABCDKL. thirty-five others, Æthiopic, Armenian, Gothic, all the Itala, except one. Griesbach has received it into the text. The sum mentioned here would amount to nearly 10*l.* sterling.

Verse 8. To anoint my body to the burying.] Εις τον ενταφιασμον, against, or in reference to its embalmment, thus pointing out my death and the embalmment of my body; for the bodies of persons of distinction were wrapped up in aromatics to preserve them from putrefaction. See on Matt. xxvi. 12.

Verse 9. For a memorial of her.] See on Matt. xxvi. 13.

Verse 11. They were glad] The joy that arises from the opportunity of murdering an innocent person, must be completely infernal.

Verse 13. Bearing a pitcher of water] How correct is the foreknowledge of Jesus Christ! even the minutest circumstances are comprehended by it! An honest employment, how 14 And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the good man of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the pass-over with my disciples?

15 And he will shew you a large upper room furnished and prepared: there make ready for us.

16 And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the pass-over.

17 [a] And in the evening he cometh with the twelve.

18 And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with me shall betray me.

19 And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him, one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I?

20 And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the dish.

21 [b] The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him: but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had never been born.

22 ¶ [c] And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body.

23 And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them; and they all drank of it.

24 And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many.

25 Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.

26 ¶ [d] And when they had sung a [e] hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

27 [f] And Jesus saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, [g] I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered.

28 But [h] after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee.

29 [i] But Peter said unto him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I.

30 And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice.

31 But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all.

32 ¶ [k] And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray.

soever mean, is worthy of the attention of God; and even a man bearing a pitcher of water, is marked in all his steps, and is an object of the merciful regards of the Most High. This man was employed in carrying home the water which was to be used for baking the unleavened bread on the following day; for on that day it was not lawful to carry any: hence they were obliged to fetch it on the preceding evening.

Verse 15. Furnished] Spread with carpets—εστρωμενον—so this word is often used. See WAKEFIELD. But it may also signify the couches on which the guests reclined when eating. It does not appear that the Jews ate the pass-over now, as their fathers did formerly, standing with their shoes on, and their staves in their hands.

Verse 19. And another said, Is it I?] This clause is wanting in BCLP. seventeen others, Syriac, Persic, Arabic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Vulgate, and four of the Itala. Griesbach leaves it doubtful: others leave it out.

Verse 21. Goeth] That is, to die. See on Matt. xxvi. 24.

Verse 22. Eat] This is omitted by many MSS. and versions, but I think without reason. It is found in the parallel places, Matt. xxvi. 26. 1 Cor. xi. 24. See the subject of the Lord's Supper, largely explained on Matt. xxvi. 26, &c.

Verse 30. That THOU] Συ is added by ABEGHKLMS—V. eighty-eight others, Syriac, Arabic, Persic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Slavonic, Vulgate, Saxon, Theophilact, and Euthymius. 33 And he taketh with him Peter and James and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy;

34 And saith unto them, [a] My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch.

35 And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him.

36 And he said, [b] Abba, Father, [c] all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: [d] nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt.

37 And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldest not thou watch one hour?

38 Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. [e] The spirit truly is ready; but the flesh is weak.

39 And again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words.

40 And when he returned, he found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy: neither wist they what to answer him.

41 And he cometh the third time, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough, [f] the hour is come; behold the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

45 And as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to him, and saith, Master, master; and kissed him.

46 And they laid their hands on him, and took him.

47 And one of them that stood by, drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear.

48 [i] And Jesus answered and said unto them, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take me?

49 I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not: but [k] the scriptures must be fulfilled.

Verse 36. Abba, Father] This Syriac word, which intimates filial affection and respect, and parental tenderness, seems to have been used by our blessed Lord, merely considered as man, to shew his complete submission to his Father's will, and the tender affection which he was conscious his Father had for him. ܐܒܐ Abba, Syriac, is here joined to ὁ πατηρ, Greek, both signifying father: so St. Paul, Rom. viii. 15. Gal. iv. 6. The reason is, that from the time in which the Jews became conversant with the Greek language, by means of the Septuagint Version and their commerce with the Romans and Greek provinces, they often intermingled Greek and Roman words with their own language. There is the fullest evidence of this fact in the earliest writings of the Jews, and they often add a word of the same meaning in Greek to their own term such as מרי קירי Mori κυριε, my Lord, Lord, פילי שער pili πυλαι, shuar, gate, gate: and above, אבא πατηρ, father, father: see several examples in Schoetgen. The words אבי and אבא appear to have been differently used among the Hebrews: the first, Abbi, was a term of civil respect: the second, Abba, a term of filial affection. Hence, Abba, Abbi, as in the Syriac Version in this place, may be considered as expressing, My Lord, my Father. And in this sense St. Paul is to be understood in the places referred to above. See Lightfoot.

Verse 37. Saith unto Peter] See on Matt. xxvi. 40.

Verse 51. A certain young man] Probably raised from his sleep by the noise which the rabble made who came to apprehend Jesus, having wrapped the sheet or some of the bedclothing about him, became thereby the more conspicuous:

52 And he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked.

53 ¶ [a] And they led Jesus away to the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests, and the elders, and the scribes.

54 And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest: and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire.

55 [b] And the chief priests, and all the council sought for witness against Jesus, to put him to death; and found none.

56 For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together.

57 And there arose certain, and bare false witness against him, saying,

58 We heard him say, [c] I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days, I will build another made without hands.

59 But neither so did their witness agree together.

60 [d] And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee?

61 But [e] he held his peace, and answered nothing. [f] Again the high priest asked him, and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?

62 And Jesus said, I am: [g] and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

63 Then the high priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses? A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

64 Ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.

65 And some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say unto him, Prophesy: and the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands.

66 ¶ [h] And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest:

67 And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth.

68 But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew.

69 [i] And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them.

70 And he denied it again. [k] And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: [l] for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto.

71 But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak.

on his appearing, he was seized; but as they had no way of holding him, but only by the cloth which was wrapped round him, he disengaged himself from that, and so escaped out of their hands. This circumstance is not related by any other of the Evangelists.

Verse 54. Peter followed] On Peter's denial, see Matt. xxvi. 57, &c.

At the fire] Προς το φως, literally, at the light, i. e. a fire that cast considerable light, in consequence of which, the maid-servant was the better able to distinguish him, see ver. 67.

Verse 61. Of the Blessed?] Θεου του ευλογητου or of God the blessed one. Θεου is added here by AK. ten others, Vulgate and one of the Itala. It might be introduced into the text, put in Italics, if the authority of the MSS. and Versions be not deemed sufficient. It appears necessary for the better understanding of the text. The adjective, however, conveys a good sense by itself, and is according to a frequent Hebrew form of speech.

Verse 72. And when he thought thereon, he wept] Or, he fell a weeping. This Mr. Wakefield thinks comes nearest to the original, επιβαλων εκλαιε. Others think it means the wrapping of his head in the skirts of his garment, through shame and anguish. Others think that επιβαλων rather refers to the violence or hurry, with which he left the place, being impelled thereto by the terrors and remorse of his guilty conscience. Our own translation is as good as any.

CHAPTER XV.

Jesus is brought before Pilate, examined, and accused, but makes no answer, 1—5. The multitude clamour for the release of Barabbas, and the crucifixion of Christ, 6—14. Pilate consents, and he is led away, mocked, insulted, and nailed to the cross, 15—26. Two thieves are crucified with him, 27, 28. While hanging on the cross, he is mocked and insulted, 29—32. The miraculous darkness and our Lord's death, 33—37. The rending of the vail, and the confession of the centurion, 38, 39. Several women attend, and behold his death, 40, 41. Joseph of Arimathea begs the body from Pilate, and buries it, 42—46. Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of Joses, note the place of his burial, 47.

AND [a] straightway in the morning, the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate.

2 [b] And Pilate asked him, Art thou the king of the Jews? And he answering said unto him, Thou sayest it.

3 And the chief priests accused him of many things: but he answered nothing.

4 [c] And Pilate asked him again, saying, Answerest thou nothing? behold how many things they witness against thee.

5 [d] But Jesus yet answered nothing; so that Pilate marvelled.

6 ¶ Now [e] at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired.

7 And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound, with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection.

8 And the multitude crying aloud, began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them.

9 But Pilate answered them, saying, Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29. An. Olymp. CCII. 1.

10 For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him for envy.

11 But [f] the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them.

12 And Pilate answered and said again unto them, What will ye then that I shall do unto him whom ye call the King of the Jews?

13 And they cried out again, Crucify him.

14 Then Pilate said unto them, Why, what evil hath he done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him.

15 [g] And so Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified.

16 ¶ [h] And the soldiers led him away unto the hall, called Prætorium; and they call together the whole band.

17 And they clothed him with purple, and Verse 1. In the morning] See Matt. xxvii. 1, &c.

Verse 8. The multitude crying aloud] Αναβοησας. The word itself strongly marks the vociferations, or to come nearer the original word, the bellowing of the multitude. It signifies properly a loud and long cry, such as Christ emitted on the cross. See the whole history of these proceedings against our Lord, treated at large on Matt. xxvii.

platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head,

18 And began to salute him, Hail, King of the Jews!

19 And they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and bowing their knees worshipped him.

20 And when they had mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and put his own clothes on him, and led him out to crucify him.

23 [c] And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh: but he received it not.

24 ¶ And when they had crucified him, [d] they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take.

25 And [e] it was the third hour, and they crucified him.

Verse 17. And platted a crown of thorns] In the note on Matt. xxvii. 29. I have ventured to express a doubt whether our Lord was crowned with thorns, in our sense of the word; this crown being designed as an instrument of torture. I am still of the same opinion, having considered the subject more closely since writing that note. As there I have referred to Bishop Pearce, a man whose merit as a commentator, is far beyond my praise; and who, it is to be regretted, did not complete his work on the New Testament, I think it right to insert the whole of his note here.

"The word ακανθων may as well be the plural genitive case, of the word ακανθος, as of ακανθη; if of the latter, it is rightly translated of thorns, but the former would signify what we call bears-foot, and the French branche ursine. This is not of the thorny kind of plants, but is soft and smooth. Virgil calls it mollis acanthus, Ecl. iii. 45. Geor. iv. 137. So does Pliny sec. Epist. ver. 6. And Pliny the elder, in his Nat. Hist. xxii. 22. p. 277. edit. Hard. says that it is lævis, smooth; and that it is one of those plants that is cultivated in gardens. I have somewhere read, but cannot at present recollect where, that this soft and smooth herb was very common in and about Jerusalem. I find nothing in the New Testament said concerning this crown which Pilate's soldiers put on the head of Jesus, to incline one to think that it was of thorns, and intended as is usually supposed, to put him to pain. The reed put into his hand, and the scarlet robe on his back, were only meant as marks of mockery and contempt. One may also reasonably judge by the soldiers being said to platt this crown, that it was not composed of such twigs and leaves as were of a thorny nature. I do not find that it is mentioned by any of the primitive Christian writers as an instance of the cruelty used towards our Saviour, before he was led to his crucifixion, till the time of Tertullian, who lived after Jesus's death at the distance of above 160 years. He indeed seems to have understood ακανθων in the sense of thorns: and says, De Corona Militar. sect. xiv. edit. Pamel. Franck. 1597. quale oro te, Jesus Christus sertum pro utroque sexu subiit? Ex spinis, opinor et tribulis. The total silence of Polycarp, Barnabas, Clem. Romanus, and all the other Christian writers whose works are now extant, and who wrote before Tertullian, in particular, will give some weight to incline one to think that this crown was not platted with thorns. But as this is a point on which we have not sufficient evidence, I leave it almost in the same state of uncertainty in which I found it. The Reader may see a satisfactory account of acanthus, bears-foot, in Quincy's English Dispensatory, part ii. sect. 3. edit. 8. 1742."

This is the whole of the learned and judicious prelate's note; on which I have only to observe, that the species of acanthus described by Virgil and the two Plinys, as mollis and lævis, soft and smooth, is no doubt, the same as that formerly used in medicine, and described by Quincy and other pharmacopœists; but there are other species of the same plant that are prickly; and particularly those called the acanthus spinosus, and the hicifolius; the latter of which is common in both the Indies; this has leaves something like our common holly, the jagged edges of which are armed with prickles; but I do not conceive that this kind was used, nor indeed any other plant of a thorny nature, as the Roman soldiers who platted the crown, could have no interest in adding to our Lord's sufferings; though they smote him with the rod, yet their chief object was to render him ridiculous, for pretending, as they imagined, to regal authority.

Verse 21. A Cyrenian] One of Cyrene, a celebrated city in the Pentapolis of Lybia.

The father of Alexander and Rufus] It appears that these two persons were well known among the first disciples of our Lord. It is not unlikely, that this is the same Alexander who is mentioned Acts xix. 33. and that the other is the Rufus, spoken of by St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 13.

26 And [a] the superscription of his accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS.

27 And [b] with him they crucify two thieves: the one on his right hand, and the other on his left.

28 And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, [c] And he was numbered with the transgressors.

29 ¶ And [d] they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, [e] thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days,

30 Save thyself, and come down from the cross.

31 Likewise also the chief priests mocking, said among themselves with the scribes, He saved others; himself he cannot save.

32 Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. And [f] they that were crucified with him, reviled him.

36 And [i] one ran and filled a spunge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and [k] gave him to drink, saying, Let alone: let us see whether Elias will come to take him down.

Verse 25. The third hour] It has been before observed, that the Jews divided their night into four watches, of three hours each. They also divided the day into four general parts. The first began at sunrise. The second three hours after. The third at mid-day. The fourth three hours after, and continued till sun-set. Christ having been nailed to the cross a little after mid-day, John xix. 14—16, 17. and having expired about three o'clock, Mark xv. 33. the whole business of the crucifixion was finished within the space of this third division of the day, which Mark calls here the third hour. Commentators and critics have found it very difficult to reconcile this third hour of Mark, with the sixth hour of John, chap. xix. 14. It is supposed that the true reading of John xix. 14. should be τριτη, the third, instead of εκτη, the sixth: a mistake which might have readily taken place in ancient times, when the character Γ gamma, which was put for τριτη, three, might have been mistaken for ϛ episema, or sigma tau, which signifies six. And τριτη, the third, instead of εκτη, the sixth, is the reading of some very eminent MSS. in the place in question, John xix. 14. See Bengel, Newcome, M'Knight, Lightfoot, Rosenmuller, &c. on this perplexing point.

Verse 27. Two thieves] A copy of the Itala tells their names: One on the right hand—named Zoathan; and one on the left hand—named Chammatha.

Verse 28. The scripture was fulfilled] All this verse is wanting in many MSS. some Versions, and several of the Fathers.

Verse 32. And believe.] In him is added by DFGHP-BHV. and upwards of sixty others; as also the Armenian, Slavonic, and four Itala.

Verse 34. My God, my God, &c.] See on Matt. xxvii. 46.

Verse 37. Gave up the ghost.] This was about 3 o'clock, or what was termed by the Jews the ninth hour; about the time that the paschal lamb was usually sacrificed. The darkness mentioned here, must have endured about two hours and a half. Concerning this eclipse, see on Matt. xxvii. 45.

Verse 40. Joses] Some MSS. and Versions read Joset, others Joseph. See on Matt. xxvii. 56.

43 Joseph of Arimathea, an honourable counsellor, which also [c] waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus.

Verse 42. The day before the sabbath] What we would call Friday evening. As the law of Moses had ordered, that no criminal should continue hanging on a tree or gibbet till the setting of the sun, and Joseph fearing that the body of our Lord might be taken down, and thrown into the common grave with the two robbers, came and earnestly entreated Pilate, to deliver it to him, that he might bury it in his own new tomb. See on Matt. xxvii. 56. and 60.

Verse 43. Went in boldly unto Pilate] He who was a coward before, now acts a more open fearless part, than any of the disciples of our Lord! This the Holy Spirit has thought worthy of especial notice. It needed no small measure of courage, to declare now for Jesus, who had been a few hours ago condemned as a blasphemer by the Jews, and as a seditious person by the Romans; and this was the more remarkable in Joseph, because hitherto for fear of the Jews, he had been only a secret disciple of our Lord; see John xix. 38.

The Apostle says, We have BOLDNESS to enter into the holiest through his blood. Strange as it may appear, the death of Jesus is the grand cause of confidence and courage to a believing soul.

Verse 47. Beheld where he was laid.] The courage and affection of these holy women cannot be too much admired. The strength of the Lord is perfected in weakness; for here, a timid man, and a few weak women, acknowledge Jesus in death, when the strong and the mighty utterly forsook him.

Human strength and human weakness are only names in religion. The mightiest MAN in the hour of trial, can do nothing without the strength of God; and the weakest WOMAN can do all things, if Christ strengthens her. These truths are sufficiently exemplified, in the case of Peter and all his brother disciples on the one hand; and Joseph of Arimathea and the two Marys, on the other. And all this is recorded, equally to prevent both presumption and despair. Reader, let not these examples be produced before thee in vain.

CHAPTER XVI.

Early in the morning after the sabbath the three Marys come to the sepulchre, bringing sweet spices to embalm the body, 1—4. They see an angel, who announces the resurrection of our Lord, 5—8. Jesus appears to Mary Magdalene, who goes and tells the disciples, 9—11. He appears also to the two disciples who were going into the country, who also tell it to the rest, 12, 13. Afterwards he appears unto the eleven, and commissions them to preach the gospel to all mankind, 14—16. And promises to endue them with power to work miracles, 17, 18. He is received up into heaven, 19. And they go forth to preach and work miracles, 20.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. And anoint him.] Rather, to embalm him. This is a proof that they had not properly understood what Christ had so frequently spoken, viz. that he would rise again the third day. And this inattention or unbelief of theirs, is a proof of the truth of the resurrection.

Verse 2. Very early in the morning] This was the time they left their own houses, and by the rising of the sun they got to the tomb. As the preceding day was the sabbath, they could not, consistently with the observances of that day, approach the tomb. See the concluding notes at the end of John.

The following observations from Lightfoot, will serve to illustrate this subject.

"The distinction of the twilight among the rabbins was this:

"I. אילחא השחרא The hinde of the morning—the first appearance. R. Chaiia Rab and R. Simeon ben Chalaphta travelling together on a certain morning in the valley of Arbel, saw the hinde of the morning, that its light spread the sky. R. Chaiia said, Such shall be the redemption of Israel. First, it goes forward by degrees and by little and little; but by how much the more it shall go forward, by so much the more it shall increase. It was at that time that Christ arose, namely in the first morning, as may be gathered from the words of St. Matthew. And to this, the title of the 22d Psalm seems to have respect—על אילת השחר See also Rev. xxii. 16. I am the bright and morning star. And now you may imagine, the women went out of their houses towards the sepulchre.

"II. משיבין בין תכלת ללבן When one may distinguish between purple colour and white. From what time do they recite their phylacterical prayers in the morning? From that time that one may distinguish between purple colour and white. R. Eliezer saith, Between purple colour and green. Before this time was obscurum adhuc cæptæ lucis, the obscurity of the begun light, as Tacitus's expression is.

"III. משיאור המורח When the east begins to lighten.

"IV. כנץ החמה Sun-rise: from the hinde of the morning going forth, until the east begins to lighten; and from the time the east begins to lighten, until sun-rise, &c.

"According to these four parts of time, one might not improperly suit the four phrases of the Evangelists. According to the first, Matthew's, Τῇ ἐπιφωσκουσῃ, As it began to dawn. According to the second, John's, Πρωΐ σκοτιας ετι ουσης, Early in the morning when it was yet dark. To the third, Luke's, Ορθρου βαθεως, Very early in the morning. To the fourth, Mark's, Λίαν πρωΐ, Very early in the morning. And yet, Ανατειλαντος τῷ ἡλιῳ, At the rising of the sun. For the women came twice to the sepulchre, as St. John teaches, by whom the other Evangelists are to be explained; which being well considered, the reconciling them together is very easy."

Verse 4. For it was very great] This clause should be read immediately after the third verse, according to D. three copies of the Itala, Syriac, Hier. and Eusebius. "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? for it was very great. And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away." They knew that the stone was too heavy for them to roll away; and unless they got access to the body, they could not apply the aromatics which they had brought to finish the embalming.

Verse 6. Jesus of Nazareth] The Jews had given this name to Christ by way of reproach, Matt. ii. 23. but as it was under this name that he was crucified, John xix. 19. the angel here, and the apostles after, have given him the same name; Acts iv. 10, &c. Names, which the world, in derision, fixes on the followers of God, often become the general appellatives of religious bodies: thus Quakers, Puritans, Pietists, and Methodists, have in their respective times been the nicknames, given in derision by the world, to those who separated themselves from its corruptions. Our Lord, by continuing to bear the name of the Nazarene, teaches us not to be too nice or scrupulous in fixing our own appellation. No matter what the name may be, as long as it implies no particular evil, and serves sufficiently to mark us out. Let us be contented to bear it, and thus carry about with us the reproach of Christ: always taking care to keep our garments unspotted from the world.

Verse 7. Tell his disciples and Peter] Why is not Peter included among the disciples? For this plain reason, he had forfeited his discipleship, and all right to the honour and privileges of an apostle, by denying his Lord and Master. However he is now a penitent—tell him that Jesus is risen from the dead, and is ready to heal his backsliding, and love him freely; so that after being converted, he may strengthen his brethren.

Verse 9. Now when Jesus was risen, &c.] This, to the conclusion of the Gospel, is wanting in the famous Codex Vaticanus, and has anciently been wanting in many others. See Wetstein and Griesbach. In the margin of the latter Syriac version, there is a remarkable addition after this verse; it is as follows: And they declared briefly all that was commanded, to them that were with Peter. Afterwards Jesus himself published by them, from east to west, the holy and incorruptible preaching of eternal salvation. Amen.

Mary Magdalene] It seems likely, that after this woman had carried the news of Christ's resurrection to the disciples, that she returned alone to the tomb; and that it was then, that Christ appeared to her, John xx. 1—11, 12. and a little after he appeared to all the women together, Matt. xxviii. 9. Luke xxiv. 10.

Verse 10. Them that had been with him] Not only the eleven disciples, but several others who had been the occasional companions of Christ and the apostles.

Mourned and wept] Because they had lost their Lord and Master, and had basely abandoned him in his extremity.

Verse 12. He appeared—unto two of them] These were the two who were going to Emmaus. The whole account is given by Luke, chap. xxiv. 13—34. where see the notes.

Dr. Lightfoot's criticism upon this passage, is worthy of notice.

"That in the verses immediately going before the discourse is of the two disciples going to Emmaus, is without all controversy. And then how do these things consist with that relation in Luke, who saith, That they two returning to Jerusalem, found the eleven gathered together, and they that were with them; who said, The Lord is risen indeed and has appeared to Simon? Luke xxiv. 34. The word λεγοντας, saying, evidently makes those to be the words των ενδεκα, of the eleven, and of those that were gathered together with them: which, when you read the Versions, you would scarcely suspect. For when that word is rendered by the SYRIAC, ܕܡ ܐܡܪܝܢ cad amrin; by the ARABIC, وهم يقولون wehom yekolon; by the VULGATE, dicentes; by the ITALIAN, dicendo; by the FRENCH, disans; by the ENGLISH, saying: who, I pray, would take it in another sense, than that those two that returned from Emmaus, said, The Lord is risen indeed, &c. But in the original Greek, when it is the accusative case, it is plainly to be referred to the eleven disciples, and those that were together with them: as if they had discoursed among themselves of the appearance made to Peter, either before or now in the very access of those two coming from Emmaus. And yet says this our Evangelist, that when those two had related the whole business, they gave no credit to them: so that, according to Luke, they believed Christ was risen, and had appeared to Simon, before they told their story; but according to Mark, they believed it not, no not when they had told it. The reconciling therefore of the Evangelists is to be fetched thence, that those words pronounced by the eleven, Οτι ηγερθη ὁ Κυριος οντως, &c. The Lord is risen indeed, &c. do not manifest their absolute confession of the resurrection of Christ, but a conjectural reasoning of the sudden and unexpected return of Peter. I believe that Peter was going with Cleophas into Galilee, and that being moved with the words of Christ, told him by the women, Say to his disciples and Peter, I go before you into Galilee—think with yourself how doubtful Peter was, and how he fluctuated within himself after his threefold denial, and how he gasped to see the Lord again, if he were risen; and to cast himself a humble suppliant at his feet. When therefore he heard these things from the women, (and he had heard it indeed from Christ himself, while he was yet alive, that when he arose he would go before them into Galilee) and when the rest were very little moved with the report of his resurrection, nor as yet stirred from that place, he will try a journey into Galilee, and Alpheus with him: which, when it was well known to the rest, and they saw him return so soon and so unexpectedly —Certainly, say they, the Lord is risen and hath appeared to Peter, otherwise he had not so soon come back again. And yet, when he and Cleophas open the whole matter, they do not yet believe even them."

Verse 14. And upbraided them with their unbelief] Never were there a people so difficult to be persuaded of the truth of spiritual things, than the disciples. It may be justly asserted, that people of so sceptical a turn of mind, would never credit any thing till they had the fullest evidence of its truth. The unbelief of the disciples is a strong proof of the truth of the gospel of God. See the addition at the end.

Verse 15. Go ye into all the world] See on Matt. xxviii. 19.

And preach the gospel to every creature.] Proclaim the gladtidings—of Christ crucified, and raised from the dead—to all the creation, πασῃ τῃ κτισει—to the Gentile world; for in this sense בריות berioth, is often understood among the Rabbins; because HE, through the grace of God, hath tasted death for EVERY man, Heb. ii. 9. And on the rejection of the gospel by the Jews, it was sent to the whole Gentile world.

Verse 16. He that believeth] He that credits this gospel as a revelation from God: and is baptized—takes upon him the profession of it, obliging himself to walk according to its precepts: he shall be saved—redeemed from sin here, and brought at last to the enjoyment of my eternal glory. But he that believeth not, shall be damned—because he rejects the only provision, that could be effectual to his soul's salvation.

Verse 17. These signs shall follow] Or rather, accompany: this is the proper import of the original word παρακολουθησει, from παρα with, ακολουθεω I follow.

Them that believe] The believers, as we express it; i. e. the Apostles, and all those, who in those primitive times were endued with miraculous powers, for the confirmation of the doctrines they preached.

In my name] That is, by the authority and influence of the Almighty Jesus.

Cast out devils] Whose kingdom Jesus Christ was manifested to destroy.

Speak with new tongues] This was most literally fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, Acts ii. 4—12.

Verse 18. Take up serpents] Several MSS. add εν ταις χερσιν, in their hands—shall be enabled to give, when such a proof may be serviceable to the cause of truth, this evidence of their being continually under the power and protection of God, and that all nature is subject to him. This also was literally fulfilled in the case of Paul, Acts xxviii. 5.

If they drink any deadly thing] Θανασιμον, (φαρμακον) being understood—if they should through mistake, or accident, drink any poisonous matter, their constant preserver will take care that it shall not injure them. See a similar promise, Isai. xliii. 2.

They shall lay hands on the sick] And I will convey a healing power by their hands, so that the sick shall recover, and men shall see that these are sent and acknowledged by the Most High. Several instances of this kind are found in the Acts of the Apostles.

That the Apostles of our Lord should not lose their lives by poison, is most fully asserted in this verse, and there is neither record nor tradition to disprove this. But it is worthy of remark, that Mohammed, who stiled himself THE APOSTLE OF GOD, lost his life by poison: and had he been a true Apostle of God, he could not have fallen by it. Al Kodai, Abul Feda, and Al Janabi, give the following account.

When Mohammed, in the seventh year of the Hejra, A. D. 628, had taken the city of Kheebar, from the Arab Jews, he took up his lodgings at the house of Hareth, the father of Marhab the Jewish general; who had been slain at the taking of the city by Alee, the son-in-law of Mohammed. Zeenab the daughter of Hareth, who was appointed to dress the prophet's dinner, to avenge the fall of her people, and the death of her brother, put poison in a roasted lamb which was provided for the occasion. Bashar, one of his companions, falling on too hastily, fell dead on the spot. Mohammed had only chewed one mouthful, but had not swallowed it: though on perceiving that it was poisoned, he immediately spat it out, yet he had swallowed a sufficiency of the juice to lay the foundation of his death; though this did not take place till about three years after: but that it was the cause of his death then, his dying words related by Al Janabi, and others, sufficiently testify. When the mother of Bashar came to see him in his dying agonies, he thus addressed her: "O mother of Bashar, I now feel the veins of my heart bursting through the poison of that morsel, which I ate with thy son at Kheebar."

Abul Feda, Ebnol Athir, and Ebn Phares say, that the prophet acknowledged on his death-bed, that the poison which he had taken at Kheebar, had tormented him from that time until then, notwithstanding blisters were applied to his shoulders, and every thing done in the beginning to prevent its effects. Al Kodai, and Al Janabi relate, that when Zeenab was questioned why she did this, she answered to this effect: "I said in my heart, If he be a king, we shall hereby be freed from his tyranny; and if he be a prophet, he will easily perceive it, and consequently receive no injury." To support his credit, he pretended that the lamb spoke to him, and said that it was infected with poison! See Elmakin, p. 8. It was therefore policy in him not to put Zeenab to death. It has pleased God that this fact should be acknowledged by the dying breath of this scourge of the earth; and that several of even the most partial Mohammedan historians, should relate it! And thus attested, it stands for the complete and everlasting refutation of his pretensions to the prophetic spirit and mission. Vide Specimen Hist. Arabum, a POCOCKIO, p. 189, 190. Verse 19. After the Lord had spoken] These things, and conversed with them for forty days, he was taken up into heaven, there to appear in the presence of God for us.

Verse 20. The Lord working with them] This co-operation was twofold, internal, and external. Internal, illuminating their minds, convincing them of the truth, and establishing them in it. External, conveying their word to the souls that heard it, by the demonstration of the Holy Ghost; convincing them of sin, righteousness, and judgment; justifying them by his blood, and sanctifying them by his spirit. Though miraculous powers are not now requisite, because the truth of the gospel has been sufficiently confirmed; yet this co-operation of God is indispensably necessary, without which no man can be a successful preacher; and without which no soul can be saved.

With signs following.] Επακολουθουντων σημειων, the accompanying signs: viz. those mentioned in the 17th and 18th verses, and those others just now spoken of, which still continue to be produced by the energy of God, accompanying the faithful preaching of his unadulterated word.

Amen] This is added here by many MSS. and Versions; but is supposed not to have made a part of the text originally. Griesbach, Bengel and others, leave it out.

St. Jerom mentions certain Greek copies, which have the following remarkable addition to ver. 14. after these words—and reproached them for their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they did not believe those who had seen him after he was raised up: Et illi satisfaciebant dicentes: seculum istud iniquitatis et incredulitatis substantia est, quæ non sinit per immundos spiritus veram Dei apprehendi virtutem. Idcirco, jam nunc revela justitiam tuam. "And they confessed the charge, saying: This age is the substance of iniquity and unbelief, which through the influence of impure spirits, does not permit the true influence of God to be apprehended. Therefore, even now reveal thy righteousness."

There are various subscriptions to this book in the MSS. and Versions; the principal are the following. "The holy Gospel according to Mark is ended—written by him—in EGYPT—in ROME—in the Latin tongue—directed by Peter—the 10*th*—12*th year after the ascension of Christ—preached in Alexandria, and all its coasts.*" Dr. Lardner supposes this Gospel to have been composed A. D. 64 or 65, and published before the end of the last mentioned year. See the Preface.

The Gospel according to Mark, if not an abridgement of the Gospel according to Matthew, contains a neat, perspicuous abridgement of the history of our Lord: and taken in this point of view, is very satisfactory; and is the most proper of all the four gospels, to be put into the hands of young persons in order to bring them to an acquaintance with the great facts of Evangelical History. But as a substitute for the Gospel by Matthew, it should never be used. It is very likely that it was written originally for the use of the Gentiles, and probably for those of Rome. Of this, there seem to be several evidences in the work itself. Of the other Gospels it is not only a grand corroborating evidence, but contains many valuable hints for completing the history of our Lord, which have been omitted by the others; and thus in the mouths of FOUR witnesses, all these glorious and interesting facts are established.

One thing may be observed, that this Gospel has suffered more by the carelessness and inaccuracy of transcribers, than any of the others: and hence the various readings in the MSS. are much more numerous in proportion, than in the other Evangelists. Every thing of this description, which I judged to be of real importance, I have carefully noted.

Though the matter of St. Mark's work came from the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, yet the language seems to be entirely his own: it is very plain, simple, and unadorned; and sometimes appears to approach to a degree of rusticity or inelegance. Whoever reads the original, must be struck with the very frequent, and often pleonastic occurrence of ευθεως immediately, and παλιν again, and such like; but these detract nothing from the accuracy and fidelity of the work. The Hebraisms which abound in it, may be naturally expected from a native of Palestine, writing in Greek. The Latinisms which frequently occur, are accounted for on the ground of this Gospel being written for the Gentiles; and particularly for the Roman people: this, it must be confessed, is only theory, but it is a theory which stands supported by many arguments, and highly presumptive facts. However this may be, the Gospel according to Mark, is a very important portion of divine revelation, which God has preserved by a chain of providences, from the time of its promulgation until now: and for which, no truly pious reader will hesitate to render due praise to that God, whose work is ever perfect. Amen.

SOME OBSERVATIONS

ON THE NATURE AND IMPORTANCE OF

BAPTISM.

On the subject of baptism, several observations have been made in the course of the preceding notes; and its great importance to the Christian religion, carefully noted. Dr. Lightfoot has spoken well on the subject; and I have reserved his observations for this place, and earnestly recommend them to the notice of every unprejudiced reader. On the mode of administering baptism, there need be no dispute among Christians: both dipping and sprinkling are legitimate forms; and either may be used, as the consciences or religious prejudices of the parties may direct: but the thing itself, and its great reference, are of the utmost importance. Baptism is a standing proof of the divine authenticity of the Christian religion; and as Dr. Lightfoot well argues, a seal of the truth of the doctrine of justification by faith, through the blood of the Covenant.

"It is no unfit or unprofitable question," he observes, "Whence it came to pass, that there was so great a conflux of men to John the Baptist, and so ready a reception of his baptism?

"I. The reason is, because the manifestation of the Messias was then expected, the weeks of Daniel being now spent to the last four years: and therefore the people were stirred up to prepare for his appearing.

"II. Another reason of it was this. The institution of baptism for an evangelical sacrament, was first in the hand of the Baptist; who, the word of the Lord coming to him, (Luke iii. 11.) went forth, backed with the same authority, as the chiefest prophets had in time past. But yet the first use of baptism was not exhibited at that time. For baptism, very many centuries back, had been both known and received in most frequent use among the Jews; and for the very same end as it now obtains among Christians, namely, that by it proselytes might be admitted into the church: and hence it was called טבילת גרות baptism for proselytism; and was distinct from טבילת גרה baptism, or washing from uncleanness. See the Babylonian Talmud in Jevamoth.

"All the Jews assert, as it were with one mouth, that all the nation of Israel were brought into the covenant, among other things, by baptism. Israel (saith Maimonides, the great interpreter of the Jewish law) was admitted into the covenant by three things, namely, by circumcision, baptism, and sacrifice. Circumcision was in Egypt, as it is said, None uncircumcised shall eat of the pass-over. Baptism was in the wilderness, before the giving of the law, as it is said, Thou shalt sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their garments.

"III. They assert, that an infinite number of proselytes in the days of David and Solomon, were admitted by baptism. The Sanhedrin received not proselytes in the days of David and Solomon: not in the days of David, lest they should betake themselves to proselytism out of a FEAR of the kingdom of Israel; not in the days of Solomon, lest they might do the same by reason of the GLORY of the kingdom. And yet abundance of proselytes were made in the days of David and Solomon before private men; and the great Sanhedrin was full of care about this business; for they would not cast them out of the church, because they were baptised. MAIMONIDES, Issure Biah, c. 13.

"IV. Whensoever any heathen will betake himself, and be joined to the covenant of Israel, and place himself under the wings of the Divine Majesty, and take the yoke of the law upon him, voluntary circumcision, baptism, and oblation are required: but if it be a woman, baptism and oblation. ibid. That was a common axiom, אין גר עד שימול ויטבול No man is a proselyte until he be circumcised and baptised. JEVAMOTH, fol. 46.

"You see baptism inseparably joined to the circumcision of proselytes. There was indeed some little distance of time; for they were not baptized till the pain of circumcision was healed, because water might be injurious to the wound: but certainly baptism ever followed. We acknowledge indeed, that circumcision was plainly of divine institution; but by whom baptism, which was inseparable from it, was instituted, is doubtful. And yet it is worthy of observation, our Saviour rejected circumcision, and retained the appendix baptism; and when all the Gentiles were now to be introduced into the true religion, he preferred this proselytical introductory, (pardon the expression) unto the sacrament of entrance into the gospel. One might observe the same almost in the Eucharist. The lamb in the passover was of divine institution, and so indeed was the bread: but whence was the wine? But yet rejecting the lamb, Christ instituted the sacrament in the bread and wine. Secondly, Observing from these things which have been spoken, how very known and frequent the use of baptism was among the Jews, the reason appears very easy, why the Sanhedrin by their messengers enquired not of John concerning the reason of baptism, but concerning the authority of the baptizer; not what baptism meant, but whence he had a licence so to baptize: John i. 25. Thirdly, Hence also the reason appears, why the New Testament does not prescribe by some more accurate rule, who the persons are to be baptized.

"It appears clear enough by what has been already said, in what sense this is to be taken in the New Testament, which we sometimes meet with, namely, that the master of the family was baptized with his whole family, Acts xvi. 15, 33, &c. Nor is it of any strength what some contend for, "that it cannot be proved there were infants in those families:" for the enquiry is not so proper, whether there were infants in those families, as it concluded truly and deservedly, that if there were, they had all been to be baptised. Nor do I believe this people that flocked to John's baptism, were so forgetful of the manner and custom of the nation, that they brought not their little children also with them to be baptised.

"I. If you compare the washing of polluted persons prescribed by the law, with the baptism of proselytes, both that and this implies uncleanness, however something different; that implies legal uncleanness, this heathen, but both polluting. But a proselyte was baptized not only into the washing away of that Gentile pollution, nor only thereby to be transplanted into the religion of the Jews; but that, by the most accurate rite of translation that could possibly be, he might so pass into an Israelite, that being married to an Israelite woman, he might produce a free and legitimate seed, and an undefiled offspring. Hence servants that were taken into a family, were baptized, and servants also that were to be made free: not so much because they were defiled with heathen uncleanness, as that by that rite כישראל לכל דבר becoming Israelites in all respects, they might be more fit to match with Israelites, and their children be accounted as Israelites. And hence the sons of proselytes, in following generations, were circumcised indeed, but not baptised. They were circumcised that they might take upon themselves the obligations of the law, but they needed not baptism, because they were already Israelites.

"II. The baptism of proselytes was the bringing over of Gentiles into the Jewish religion: the baptism of John, was the bringing over of Jews into another religion: and hence it is the more to be wondered at, that the people so readily flocked to him, when he introduced a baptism so different from the known proselytical baptism. The reason of which is to be fetched from hence, that at the coming of the Messias, they thought, not without cause, that the state of things was plainly to be changed; and that from the oracles of the prophets, who with one mouth described the times of the Messias for a new world.

"III. The baptism of proselytes, was an obligation to perform the law; that of John, was an obligation to repentance: for although proselytical baptism admitted of some ends, and circumcision of others, yet a traditional and erroneous doctrine at that time, had joined this to both, that the proselyte covenanted in both, and obliged himself to perform the law; to which that of the Apostle relates; Gal. v. 3. I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law. But the baptism of John was a baptism of repentance, Mark i. 4. which being undertaken, they who were baptized, professed to renounce their own legal righteousness, and on the contrary, acknowledged themselves to be obliged to repentance and faith in the Messias to come.

"IV. That the baptism of John was by plunging the body, (after the same manner as the washing unclean persons, and the baptism of proselytes, was) seems to appear from those things which are related of him; namely that he baptized in Jordan, that he baptized in Enon, because there was much water there; and that Christ being baptized came up out of the water: to which that seems to be parallel, Acts viii. 38. Philip and the eunuch went down into the water, &c. Some complain that this rite is not retained in the Christian church, as though it something derogated from the truth of baptism; or as though it were to be called an innovation, when the sprinkling of water is used instead of plunging.

"1. That the notion of washing in John's baptism differs from ours, in that he baptized none who were not brought over from one religion, and that an irreligious one too, into another, and that a true one. But there is no place for this among us, who are born Christians; the condition therefore being varied, the rite is not only lawfully, but deservedly varied also. Our baptism argues defilement indeed, and uncleanness; and demonstrates this doctrinally, that we being polluted, have need of washing; but this is to be understood of our natural and sinful stain, to be washed away by the blood of Christ and the grace of God: with which stain indeed they were defiled, who were baptized by John. But to denote this washing by a sacramental sign, the sprinkling of water is as sufficient, as the dipping into water, when in truth this argues washing and purification, as well as that.

"2. Since dipping was a rite used only in the Jewish nation, and proper to it, it were something hard, if all nations should be subjected under it; but especially when it is neither necessary to be esteemed of the essence of baptism, and is moreover so harsh and dangerous, that in regard of these things, it scarcely gave place to circumcision. We read that some leavened with Judaism to the highest degree, yet wished that dipping in purification, might be taken away; because it was accompanied with so much severity. In the days of R. Joshua ben Levi, some endeavoured to abolish this dipping, for the sake of the women of Galilee; because by reason of the cold, they became barren. Surely it is hard to lay this yoke upon all nations, which seemed too rough for the Jews themselves, and not to be borne by them, men too much given to such kind of severer rites. And if it be demanded of them, who went about to take away that dipping, Would you have no purification at all by water? It is probable that they would have allowed of the sprinkling of water, which is less harsh, and not less agreeable to the thing itself.

"3. The following ages, with good reason, and by divine precept, administered a baptism differing in a greater matter from the baptism of John; and therefore it was less to differ in a less matter. The application of water was necessarily of the essence of baptism; but the application of it in this or that manner speaks but a circumstance: the adding also of the word, was of the nature of a sacrament; but the changing of the word into this or that form, would you not call this a circumstance also? And yet we read the form of baptism so changed; that you may observe it to be threefold in the history of the New Testament.

"Farther, In reference to the form of John's baptism, which thing we have proposed to consider in the second place; it is not at all to be doubted that he baptized in the name of the Messias now ready to come; that they might be the readier to receive the Messias, when he should manifest himself. The Apostles baptizing the Jews, baptized them in the name of Jesus; (because Jesus of Nazareth had now been revealed for the Messias) and that they did, when it had been before commanded them by Christ, baptize all nations, in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. So you must understand that which is spoken John iii. 23. and iv. 2. concerning the disciples of Christ baptizing; namely, that they baptized in the name of Jesus; that thence it might be known that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messias, in the name of whom, suddenly to come, John had baptized. That of St. Peter is plain, Acts ii. 38. Be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ: and that Acts viii. 16. They were baptized in the name of Jesus.

"But the Apostles baptized the Gentiles according to the precept of our Lord, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Matt. xxviii. 19. For since it was very much controverted among the Jews, about the true Messias, it was not without cause, yea nor without necessity, that they baptized in the name of Jesus; that by that seal might be confirmed this most principal truth in the gospel and that those that were baptized, might profess it: that Jesus of Nazareth was the true Messias. But among the Gentiles, the controversy was not concerning the true Messias, but concerning the true God. Among them therefore, it was needful that baptism should be conferred in the name of the true God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

"We suppose therefore, that men, women, and children came to John's baptism, according to the manner of the nation in the reception of proselytes; namely, that they standing in Jordan were taught by John, that they were baptized into the name of the Messias, who was now immediately to come; and into the profession of the doctrine of the gospel concerning faith and repentance; that THEY plunged themselves into the river, and so came out. And that which is said of them, that they were baptized by him, confessing their sins, is to be understood according to the tenor of the Baptist's preaching; not that they did this man by man, or by some particular confession made to John or by openly declaring some particular sins; but when the doctrine of John exhorted them to repentance and faith in the Messias, they renounced and disowned the doctrine and opinion of justification by their own works, wherewith they had been beforetime leavened; and acknowledge and confess themselves sinners."

It is worthy of remark, that neither priest nor Levite dipped the persons who were baptized: the persons stood in the water; three persons ordinarily stood to instruct them and witness the fact; when the instruction was ended, the person himself who was to be baptized, put himself under the water, and them came out. In the case of a woman, the disciples of the wise men turned their backs, while she plunged herself, and came out of the water: for I suppose the whole Jewish practice will not afford a single instance, where a priest or any other man put the woman under the water when she was baptized. From this we learn, that the act of baptism was performed by the person himself; but the instruction relative to its end, obligation, &c. came from another.

"They baptized also YOUNG CHILDREN (for the most part with their parents.) They baptize a little proselyte according to the judgment of the Sanhedrin; that is, as the gloss renders it, If he be deprived of his father, and his mother brings him to be made a proselyte, they baptize him (because none becomes a proselyte without circumcision and baptism) according to the judgment, or rite, of the Sanhedrin; that is, that three men be present at the baptism, who are now instead of a father to him. And the Gemara, a little after says, If with a proselyte, his sons and his daughters are made proselytes also, that which is done by their father, redounds to their good.

"R. Joseph saith, When they grow into years, they may retract: where the gloss writes thus, This is to be understood of LITTLE CHILDREN, who are made proselytes together with their father. BAB. CHERUB. fol. 11.

"A heathen woman, if she is made a proselytess when she is now big with child, the child needs not baptism; for the baptism of his mother, serves him for baptism. Otherwise he were to be baptized. JEVAM. fol. 78.

"If an Israelite take a Gentile CHILD, or find a Gentile INFANT, and baptize him in the name of a proselyte, behold he is a proselyte. MAIM. in Avadim, c. 8.

"We cannot pass over that which is indeed worthy to be remembered. Any one's servant is to be circumcised, though he be unwilling; but any one's son is not to be circumcised, if he be unwilling. R. Hezekiah saith, Behold, a man finds an infant cast out, and he baptizeth him in the name of a servant: in the name of a freeman, do you also circumcise him in the name of a freeman. HIEROS. JEVAM. fol. 8.

"Our Lord says to his disciples, Matt. xxviii. 19. Go therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them, &c. μαθητευσατε—that is, Make disciples:—bring them in by baptism, that they may be taught. They are very much out, who, from these words, cry down infant-baptism: and assert that it is necessary for those that are to be baptized to be taught before they are baptized. 1. Observe the words here: μαθητευσατε, make disciples; and then after, διδασκοντες, teaching, in the 20th verse. 2. Among the Jews, and also with us, and in all nations, those are made disciples that they may be taught. A certain heathen came to the great Hillel and said, Make me a proselyte that thou mayest teach me: BAB. Shab. fol. 31. He was first to be proselyted, and then taught. Thus, first Make them disciples (μαθητευσατε) by baptism; and then, Teach them to observe all things, &c. Διδασκειτε αυτους τηρειν παντα. κ. τ. λ.

"Βαπτιζοντες, baptizing.—There are various ends of baptism: 1. According to the nature of a sacrament, it visibly teaches invisible things; that is, the washing us from all our pollutions by the blood of Christ, and by the cleansing of grace: Ezek. xxxvi. 25. 2. According to the nature of a sacrament, it is a seal of divine truth. So circumcision is called, Rom. iv. 11. And he received the sign of circumcision, the SEAL of the righteousness of faith, &c. So the Jews, when they circumcised their children, gave this very title to circumcison. The words used when a child was circumcised, you have in their Talmud. Among other things, he who is to bless the action, says thus: 'Blessed be he, who sanctified him that was beloved from the womb, and set a sign in his flesh, and sealed his children with the sign of the Holy Covenant,' &c. Hieros, Berac. fol. 13. But in what sense are sacraments to be called seals? Not that they seal (or confirm) to the receiver his righteousness; but that they seal the divine truth of the covenant and promise. Thus the Apostle calls circumcision, the seal of the righteousness of faith; that is, it is the seal of this truth and doctrine, that justification is by faith, which justice Abraham had, when he was yet uncircumcised. And this is the way whereby sacraments confirm faith; namely, because they doctrinally exhibit the invisible things of the covenant; and like seals, so by divine appointment, sign the doctrine and truth of the covenant. 3. According to the nature of a sacrament, it obliges the receivers to the terms of the covenant; for as the covenant itself is of mutual obligation between God and man, so the sacraments, the seals of the covenant, are of like obligation. 4. According to its nature, it is introductory to the visible church. 5. It is a distinguishing sign between a Christian and no Christian, namely, between those who acknowledge and profess Christ, and Jews, Turks, and Pagans, who do not acknowledge him. Μαθητευσατε παντα τα εθνη βαπτιζοντες—Disciple all nations, baptizing, &c. When they are under baptism, they are no longer under heathenism; and this sacrament puts a difference betweeen those who are under the discipleship of Christ, and those who are not. And 6. Baptism also brings its privileges along with it; while it opens the way to a partaking of holy things in the church, and places the baptized within the church, over which God exercises a more singular providence, than over those who are out of the church.

"And now, from what has been said, let us argue a little farther in behalf of infant-baptism.

"To the objection, It is not commanded to baptize infants, therefore they are not to be baptized:—I answer, It is not forbidden to baptize infants, therefore they are to be baptized. And the reason is plain: for when pædo-baptism in the Jewish church was so known, usual, and frequent in the admission of proselytes, that nothing almost was more known, usual, and frequent; there was no need to strengthen it with any precept, when baptism was now passed into an evangelical sacrament. For Christ took baptism into his hands and into evangelical use, as he found it; this only added, that he might promote it to a worthier end and a larger use. The whole nation knew well enough that little children used to be baptized; there was no need of a precept for that, which had ever by common use prevailed. If a royal proclamation should now issue forth in these words, Let every one resort on the Lord's day to the public assembly in the church; certainly he would be mad who in times to come should argue hence, that prayers, sermons, and singing of psalms, were not to be celebrated on the Lord's day in the public assemblies, because there is no mention of them in the proclamation. For the proclamation provided for the celebration of the Lord's day in the public assemblies in general; but there was no need to make mention of the particular kinds of the divine worship to be celebrated there, when they were always and every where well known, and in daily use, before the publishing of the proclamation, and when it was published. The case is the very same in baptism. On the other hand, therefore, there was need of a plain and open prohibition that infants and little children should not be baptized, if our Lord would not have had them baptized. For since it was most common in all preceding ages, that little children should be baptized; if Christ had been minded to have that custom abolished, he would have openly forbidden it. Therefore his silence, and the silence of the Scripture in this matter, confirms pædo-baptism, and continues it to all ages.

"I. BAPTISM, as a sacrament, is a seal of the covenant. And why, I pray, may not this seal be set on infants? The seal of divine truth has sometimes been set upon inanimate things, and that by God's appointment. The bow in the cloud, is a seal of the covenant. The law engraven on the altar, Josh. viii. was a seal of the covenant. The blood sprinkled on the twelve pillars, which were set up to represent the twelve tribes, was a seal and bond of the covenant, Exod. xxiv. And now tell me, Why are not infants capable in like manner of such a sealing? They were capable heretofore of circumcision, and our infants have an equal capacity. The sacrament does not lose this its end, through the indisposition of the receiver: Peter and Paul, apostles, were baptized. Their baptism, according to its nature, sealed to them the truth of God in his promises, concerning the washing away of sins, &c. and they from this doctrinal virtue of the sacrament, received confirmation of their faith. So also Judas and Simon Magus, hypocrites, wicked men, were baptized. Did not their baptism, according to the nature of it, seal this doctrine and truth, that there was a washing away of sins? It did not indeed seal the thing itself to them, nor was it at all a sign to them of the washing away of their sins: but baptism does of itself seal this doctrine. You will grant that this axiom is most true. Abraham received the sign of circumcision, the seal of the righteousness of faith. And is not this equally true—Esau, Ahab, Ahaz, received the sign of circumcision, the seal of the righteousnes of faith? Is not circumcision the same to all? Did not circumcision, to whomsoever it was administered, sign and seal this truth, that there was a righteousness of faith? The sacrament has a sealing virtue in itself, which does not depend on the disposition of the receiver.

"II. BAPTISM, as a sacrament, is an obligation. But now infants are capable of being obliged. Heirs are sometimes obliged by their parents, though they are not yet born: see Deut. xxix. 11, 15. For that to which any one is obliged, obtains a right to oblige: ex equitate rei, from the equity of the thing, and not ex captu obligati, from the apprehension of the person obliged. The law is imposed upon all; under this penalty, 'Cursed be every one that doth not continue in all,' &c. It is ill arguing from hence, that a man has power to perform the law; but the equity of the thing itself is very well argued hence. Our duty obliges us to do every thing which the law commands, but we cannot [without divine help] perform the least tittle of it.

"III. An infant is capable of privileges, as well as an old man, (and baptism is privilegial.) An infant has been crowned king in his cradle—an infant may be made free, who is born a slave. The Gemarists speak very well in this matter. Rab. Honna says, They baptize an infant proselyte by the command of the bench. Upon what is this grounded? On this, that baptism becomes a privilege to him. And they may endow an absent person with a privilege: or they may bestow a privilege upon one, though he be ignorant of it. Bab Chetub. fol. 11. Tell me then, why an infant is not capable of being brought into the visible church, and receiving the distinguishing sign between a Christian and a heathen, as well as a grown person?" See Lightfoot's Horæ Hebraicæ, in Matt. iii. and xxviii.

While this sheet was at press, I received the following observations on the subject, from a highly intelligent and learned friend, whose name would do my work honour, were I permitted to make it public. He says:

"I presume the substance of the argument respecting infant baptism, pro and con, is fairly epitomized by Doddridge in his lectures, cliii. iv. v. Doubtless, much can be said for it on the principles he has laid down: and he has of course given all, which had been adduced on the subject. Yet after all he himself seems scarcely satisfied. His corollary is remarkable: 'Since there is so great an obscurity on the question, and so many considerable things may be advanced on both sides, it is certainly very reasonable that Christians, whose persuasions relating to infant baptism are different, should maintain mutual candour towards each other: and avoid all severe and unkind censures on account of such difference.'

"This was, at all events, good advice; and worthy of the amiable man who gave it. But it would be most desirable, that this long agitated question could be brought to a more certain issue. Constituted as man is, dissonance of mind will ever more or less obstruct coalescence of affection. To investigate truth therefore, even in its most speculative forms, provided it be done soberly and dispassionately, is at least to subserve the cause of charity.

"In addition to the arguments which Doddridge has enumerated on the side of infant baptism, I would put this question: If infant baptism had not been in use in those churches over which Timothy and Titus presided; must there not have existed, by the time at which the epistles to those two pastors were written, a considerable class of persons, neither wholly out of, nor yet properly in the church—a class, whose very peculiar and very important circumstances and characters would have demanded distinct recognition? They would have been eminently the spes gregis, and by necessary consequence, would have needed to be watched over with special superintendence.

"When, therefore, amid the recognitions of old men, old women, young women, young men, children, parents, servants, masters; the rich, the friendly, the unfriendly, the heretical; there is not the most shadowy intimation of such a class, as deferred baptism necessarily supposes, (that is, of young aspirants, already bound to the church in affection, and intitled to more tender care than even the actually initiated) what stronger evidence could we have, that no such class existed? If it had existed, self-evidently it must have been adverted to: it is not adverted to; therefore, it did not exist.

"But this is not all. They who must have composed this class, had it existed, are expressly and repeatedly mentioned. But where? In the actual survey of the church. As the vigilant eye of the Apostle of the Gentiles passes along the line of the faithful, both at Ephesus and Colosse, he finds and addresses the infant members of the body. There is no shade of difference indicated. They come in as complete compeers, with the classes which precede and follow. Included thus in the church, without the slightest note of distinction, what can be more evident, than that they made a part of the church in the mind of the includer?

"Once more. Let the address of St. Paul to the Ephesian children be specially noted. Children, says he, obey your parents εν Κυριω? How could they obey εν Κυριω, if they themselves were not εν Κυριω? In every instance, this expression marks incorporation into the Christian body. For example, when St. Paul distinguishes those of the family of Narcissus, who were Christians, his language is: τους οντας EN ΚΥΡΙΩ. In like manner, Onesimus, the reconciled servant of Philemon, was in consequence of his conversion, to be doubly dear to his master, εν σαρκι και EN ΚΥΡΙΩ: εν σαρκι, from having been formerly domesticated with Philemon; εν Κυριω, as being now his fellow Christian. The equivalent expression, εν Χριστω, occurs in the same sense, in St. Paul's salutation of Andronicus and Ireneus, (Rom. xvi. 7.) Οι και προ εμου γεγονασιν EN ΧΡΙΣΤΩ, who also were IN CHRIST before me.

"Respecting the age of the persons designated (Ephes. vi. 1.) by the term τα τεκνα, there can be no question; as a subsequent verse distinctly states them to be such children, as were subjects of discipline and mental institution—παιδεια και νουθεσια. But it must not escape attention, how exactly the sequel of the Apostle's address accords with the commencement; the injunction being given as to those in express covenant. 'Honour thy father and thy mother—for this is the first commandment with promise.' Had those addressed been out of the Christian pale, this language would have been inapplicable. In that case, they would have been απηλλοτριωμενοι της πολιτειας του Ισραελ—therefore not within the range of the divine commandment; and ξενοι των διαθηκων της ευαγγελιας—consequently not warranted to assume an interest in the promise. As then, even the pressing of the sacred injunction, supposes the persons on whom it is urged to be συμπολιται των αγιων, fellow citizens with the saints, their acknowledged interest in the promise, proves them οικειοι του Θεου, of the houshold of God. I cannot therefore but conclude, that this single passage, if even it stood alone, ought to set the tedious and troublesome controversy, respecting infant baptism, for ever at rest.

"There is another point relative to this long agitated question, which also I think the scripture has anticipated and settled—I mean, IMMERSION. Some think baptism by SPRINKLING a contradiction. St. Paul, however, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2. did not think so. After telling us, that οι πατερες—παντες υπο την νεφελην ησαν, και παντες δια της θαλασσης διηλθον, all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; he adds, with equal reference to the former as to the latter, και παντες εις τον Μωσην εβαπτισαντο εν τη νεφελη και εν τη θαλασση, and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea. The question then is, How were they baptized in the cloud? Not, surely, by immersion; for they were ΥΠΟ την νεφελην, UNDER the cloud. It could therefore be only by aspersion; this, and this alone, being the natural action of a cloud. All clouds are condensations of vapour; and that the mysterious cloud here referred to, had the natural properties of a common cloud, appears from the specified purpose to which it was applied; 'He spread a cloud for a covering,'—ab æstu sive ardore solis, says Pool. St. Paul therefore clearly spoke of 'being baptized in the cloud,' with a direct eye to the moisture which it contained. In this view, the thought is strictly just: in any other view it would be unintelligible. It follows then, that, St. Paul being the judge, to be sprinkled is to be baptized, no less than to be immersed is to be baptized.

"Why should we doubt, that this was said by St. Paul, for the express purpose of providing means for terminating in its proper time, a vexatious dispute? I am persuaded that when the Apostle was taken to the third heaven, he saw from that elevation, the whole series of the church's progress, from his own time until the glorious ανακεφαλαιωσις, of which he himself speaks, (Ephes. i. 10.) and that unless we take this extension of view into the account, we cannot fully, perhaps not at all, fathom the depth of his writings."

———, Nov. 1812.

It is easy to carry things into extremes on the right hand and on the left. In the controversy, to which there is a very gentle reference in the preceding observations, there has been much asperity on all sides. It is high time this were ended. To say that water baptism is nothing, because a baptism of the Spirit is promised, is not correct. Baptism, howsoever administered, is a most important rite in the church of Christ. To say that sprinkling or aspersion is no gospel baptism, is as incorrect, as to say immersion is none. Such assertions are as unchristian as they are uncharitable; and should be carefully avoided, by all those who wish to promote the great design of the gospel—glory to God, and peace and good will among men. Lastly, to assert that infant baptism is unscriptural, is as rash and reprehensible as any of the rest. Myriads of conscientious people choose to dedicate their infants to God, by public baptism. They are in the RIGHT! and by acting thus, follow the general practice both of the Jewish and Christian church—a practice, from which it is as needless as it is dangerous to depart.

PREFACE TO THE GOSPEL

ACCORDING TO

ST. LUKE.

WITH A SHORT ACCOUNT OF HIS LIFE.

THERE is little certain known of this Evangelist: from what is spoken in the scriptures, and by the best informed of the Primitive Fathers, the following probable account is collected.

Luke was, according to Dr. Lardner, a Jew by birth, and an early convert to Christianity, but Michaelis thinks he was a Gentile, and brings Colos. iv. 10, 11, 14. in proof, where St. Paul distinguished Aristarchus, Marcus and Jesus, who was called Justus, from Epaphras, Lucas, and Demas, who were of the circumcision, i. e. Jews. Some think he was one of our Lord's seventy disciples. It is worthy of remark that he is the only Evangelist who mentions the commission given by Christ to the seventy, chap. x. 1—20. It is likely he is the Lucius mentioned Rom. xvi. 21. and if so, he was related to the Apostle Paul, and that it is the same Lucius of Cyrene who is mentioned Acts xiii. 1. and in general with others, Acts xi. 20. Some of the ancients, and some of the most learned and judicious among the moderns, think he was one of the two whom our Lord met on the way to Emmaus on the day of his resurrection, as related Luke xxiv. 13—35. one of these was called Cleopas, ver. 18. the other is not mentioned, the Evangelist himself being the person and the relator.

St. Paul stiles him his fellow-labourer, Philem. ver. 24. It is barely probable that he is the person mentioned, Col. iv. 14. Luke, the beloved Physician. All the ancients of repute, such as Eusebius, Gregory Nyssen, Jerom, Paulinus, Euthalius, Euthymius, and others, agree that he was a physician, but where he was born, and where he exercised the duties of his profession, are not known. Many moderns have attributed to him the most profound skill in the science of painting, and that he made some pictures of the Virgin Mary. This is justly esteemed fabulous; nor is this science attributed to him by any writer, previously to Nicephorus Callisti, in the fourteenth century, an author who scarcely deserves any credit, especially in relations not confirmed by others.

He accompanied St. Paul when he first went into Macedonia, Acts xvi. 8—40. xx, xxvii, and xxviii. Whether he went with him constantly afterwards is not certain; but it is evident he accompanied him from Greece through Macedonia and Asia to Jerusalem, where he is supposed to have collected many particulars of the evangelic history: from Jerusalem he went with Paul to Rome, where he staid with him the two years of his imprisonment in that city. This alone makes out the space of five years, and upwards. It is probable that he left St. Paul when he was set at liberty, and that he then went into Greece, where he finished and published this Gospel, and the book of the Acts, which he dedicated to Theophilus, an honourable Christian friend of his in that country. It is supposed that he died in peace about the eightieth or eighty-fourth year of his age. Some suppose he published this Gospel fifteen, others twenty-two years, after the ascension of Christ.

See much on this subject in Lardner, Works, vol. vi. p. 104, &c. and in Michaelis's Introduction to the New Testament.

Some learned men think that Luke has borrowed considerably from St. Matthew: collate chap. iii. 7, 8, 9, 16, 17. with Matt. iii. 7—12 also chap. v. 20—38. with Matt. ix. 2—17. also chap. vi. 1—5. with Matt. xii. 1—5. Luke vii. 22—28. with Matt. xi. 4—11. also chap. xii. 22—31. with Matt. vi. 25—33. It is allowed that there is considerable diversity in the order of time, between St. Matthew and St. Luke, which is accounted for thus: Matthew deduces the facts related in his history in chronological order. Luke, on the contrary, appears to have paid little attention to this order, because he proposed to make a classification of events, referring each to its proper class, without paying any attention to chronological arrangement. Some critics divide this history into five distinct classes or sections, in the following manner.

CLASS I. Comprehends all the details relative to the birth of Christ; with the preceding, concomitant, and immediately succeeding circumstances, from chap. i. and ii. 1—40.

CLASS II. Contains a description of our Lord's infancy and bringing up; his visit to the temple when twelve years of age; and his going down to Nazareth and continuing under the government of his parents. Chap. ii. 41—52.

CLASS III. Contains the account of the preaching of John Baptist, and his success; the baptism of Christ, and his genealogy. Chap. iii.

CLASS IV. Comprehends the account of all our Lord's transactions in Galilee, for the whole three years of his ministry, from chap. iv. to chap. ix. 1—50. This seems evident: for as soon as Luke had given the account of our Lord's temptation in the desert, chap. iv. 1—13. he represents him as immediately returning in the power of the spirit into Galilee, ver. 14; mentions Nazareth, ver. 16; Capernaum, ver. 31; and the lake of Galilee, chap. v. ver. 1; and thus to chap. ix. 50. goes on to describe the preaching, miracles, &c. of our Lord in Galilee.

CLASS V. and last, commences at chap. ix. ver. 51. where the Evangelist gives an account of our Lord's last journey to Jerusalem: therefore this class contains not only all the transactions of our Lord from that time to his crucifixion, but also the account of his resurrection, his commission to his Apostles, and his ascension to heaven. Chap. ix. 51. to chap. xxiv. 53. inclusive.

A plan similar to this has been followed by Suetonius, in his life of Augustus: he does not produce his facts in chronological order, but classifies them, as he himself professes, cap. 12. giving an account of all his wars, honours, legislative acts, discipline, domestic life, &c. &c. MATTHEW therefore is to be consulted for the correct arrangement of facts in chronological order: Luke, for a classification of facts and events, without any attention to the order of time in which they occurred. Many eminent historians have conducted their narratives in the same way. See Rosenmuller. It must not, however, be forgotten, that this Evangelist gives us some very valuable chronological data in several parts of the three first chapters. These shall be noticed in their proper places.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. Many have taken in hand] Great and remarkable characters have always many biographers. So it appears it was with our Lord: but as most of these accounts were inaccurate, recording as facts things which had not happened; and through ignorance or design mistaking others, especially in the place where St. Luke wrote; it seemed good to the Holy Spirit, to inspire this holy man with the most correct knowledge of the whole history of our Lord's birth, preaching, miracles, sufferings, death, resurrection, and ascension, that the sincere upright followers of God might have a sure foundation, on which they might safely build their faith. See the note on chap. ix. 10.

Most surely believed among us] Facts confirmed by the fullest evidence—των πεπληροφορημενων πραγματων. Every thing that had been done or said by Jesus Christ, was so public, so plain, and so accredited by thousands of witnesses, who could have had no interest in supporting an imposture, as to carry the fullest conviction to the hearts of those who heard and saw him, of the divinity of his doctrine, and the truth of his miracles.

Verse 2. Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses] Probably this alludes to the Gospels of Matthew and Mark, which it is likely were written before St. Luke wrote his; and on the models of which, he professes to write his own: and απ' αρχης, from the beginning, must mean, from the time that Christ first began to proclaim the glad tidings of the kingdom; and αυτοπται, eye-witnesses, must necessarily signify, those who had been with him from the beginning, and consequently had the best opportunities of knowing the truth of every fact.

Ministers of the word] Του λογου. Some suppose that our blessed Lord is meant by this phrase; as ὁ Λογος, the Word or Logos, is his essential character in John i. 1, &c. but it does not appear that any of the inspired penmen ever use the word in this sense except John himself; for here it certainly means the doctrine of Christ; and in this sense, λογος is frequently used both by the Evangelists and Apostles.

Verse 3. Having had perfect understanding] Παρηκολουθηκοτι ανωθεν, having accurately traced up—entered into the very spirit of the work, and examined every thing to the bottom; in consequence of which investigation, I am completely convinced of the truth of the whole. Though God give his Holy Spirit to all them who ask him, yet this gift was never designed to set aside the use of those faculties, with which he has already endued the soul; and which are as truly his gifts, as the Holy Spirit itself is. The nature of inspiration in the case of St. Luke, we at once discover: he set himself by impartial enquiry and diligent investigation, to find the whole truth, and to relate nothing but the truth; and the Spirit of God presided over, and directed his enquiries, so that he discovered the whole truth, and was preserved from every particle of error.

From the very first] Ανωθεν, from their origin. Some think ανωθεν should, in this place, be translated from above; and that it refers to the inspiration by which St. Luke wrote. I prefer our translation, or, from the origin, which several good critics contend for, and which meaning it has in some of the best Greek writers. See Kypke.

Theophilus] As the literal import of this word is friend of God, Θεου φιλος; some have supposed that under this name, Luke comprised all the followers of Christ, to whom as friends of God, he dedicated this faithful history of the life, doctrine, death, and resurrection of our Lord. But this interpretation appears to have little solidity in it; for if all the followers of Christ are addressed, why is the singular number used? and what good end could there be accomplished, by using a feigned name? Besides, κρατιστε, most excellent, could never be applied in this way, for it evidently designates a particular person, and one probably distinguished by his situation in life; though this does not necessarily follow from the title, which was often given in the way of friendship. Theophilus appears to have been some very reputable Greek or Roman, who was one of St. Luke's disciples. The first four verses seem a private epistle, sent by the Evangelist with this history, which having been carefully preserved by Theophilus, was afterwards found and published with this Gospel.

Verse 4. Wherein thou hast been instructed] Κατηχηθης—in which thou hast been catechised. It appears that Theophilus had already received the first elements of the Christian doctrine, but had not as yet been completely grounded in them. That he might know the certainty of the things in which he had been thus catechised, by having all the facts and their proofs brought before him in order, the Evangelist sent him this faithful and divinely inspired narrative. Those who content themselves with that knowledge of the doctrines of Christ which they receive from catechisms and school-masters, however important these elementary instructions may be, are never likely to arrive at such a knowledge of the truth as will make them wise unto salvation, or fortify them against the attacks of infidelity and irreligion. Every man should labour to acquire the most correct knowledge, and indubitable certainty of those doctrines, on which he stakes his eternal salvation. Some suppose that St. Luke refers here to the imperfect instruction, which Theophilus had received from the defective gospels to which he refers in verse 1.

Verse 5. In the days of Herod the king] This was Herod, surnamed the Great the son of Antipater, an Idumean by birth, who had professed himself a proselyte to the Jewish religion, but regarded no religion, farther than it promoted his secular interests and ambition. Thus, for the first time, the throne of Judah was filled by a person not of Jewish extraction, who had been forced upon the people by the Roman government. Hence it appears plain, that the prophecy of Jacob, Gen. xlix. 10. was now fulfilled; for the sceptre had departed from Judah: and now was the time, according to another prophecy, to look for the governor from Bethlehem, who should rule and feed the people of Israel: Mic. v. 1, 2. See a large account of the family of the Herods, in the note on Matt. ii. 1.

The course of Abiah] When the sacerdotal families grew very numerous, so that all could not officiate together at the tabernacle, David divided them into twenty-four classes, that they might minister by turns, 1 Chron. xxiv. 1, &c. each family serving a whole week, 2 Kings xi. 7. 2 Chron. xxiii. 8. Abiah was the eighth in the order in which they had been originally established: 1 Chron. xxiv. 10. These dates and persons are particularly mentioned as a full confirmation of the truth of the facts themselves; because any person at the time this Gospel was written, might have satisfied himself by applying to the family of John the Baptist, the family of our Lord, or the surrounding neighbours. What a full proof of the Gospel history! It was published immediately after the time in which these facts took place; and among the very people, thousands of whom had been eye-witnesses of them; and among those too, whose essential interest it was to have discredited them if they could; and yet, in all that age, in which only they could have been contradicted with advantage, no man ever arose to call them in question! What an absolute proof was this that the thing was impossible; and that the truth of the Gospel history was acknowledged by all who paid any attention to the evidences it produced!

Of the daughters of Aaron] That is, she was of one of the sacerdotal families. This shews that John was most nobly descended: his father was a priest, and his mother the daughter of a priest: and thus both by father and mother, he descended from the family of Amram, of whom came Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, the most illustrious characters in the whole Jewish history.

Verse 6. They were both righteous] Upright and holy in all their outward conduct in civil life.

Before God] Possessing the spirit of the religion they professed; exercising themselves constantly in the presence of their Maker, whose eye they knew was upon all their conduct, and who examined all their motives.

Walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.] None being able to lay any evil to their charge. They were as exemplary and conscientious in the discharge of their religious duties, as they were in the discharge of the offices of civil life. What a sacred pair! they made their duty to God, to their neighbour, and to themselves, walk constantly hand in hand. See the note on Matt. iii. 15. Perhaps εντολαι, commandments, may here mean the decalogue; and δικαιωματα, ordinances, the ceremonial and judicial laws which were delivered after the decalogue: as all the precepts delivered from Exod. xxi. to xxiv. are termed δικαιωματα, judgments or ordinances.

Verse 7. Both were now well stricken in years.] By the order of God, sterility and old age both met in the person of Elizabeth, to render the birth of a son (humanly speaking) impossible. This was an exact parallel to the case of Sarah and Abraham, Gen. xi. 30. xvii. 17. Christ must (by the miraculous power of God) be born of a virgin: whatever was connected with, or referred to his incarnation, must be miraculous and impressive. Isaac was his grand type, and therefore must be born miraculously—contrary to the common course and rule of nature: Abraham was a hundred years of age, Sarah was ninety, Gen. xvii. 17. and it had CEASED to be with Sarah AFTER THE MANNER OF WOMEN, Gen. xviii. 11. and therefore, from her age and state, the birth of a child must, according to nature, have been impossible; and it was thus, that it might be miraculous. John the Baptist was to be the forerunner of Christ; his birth, like that of Isaac, must be miraculous, because like the other, it was to be a representation of the birth of Christ; therefore his parents were both far advanced in years, and besides, Elizabeth was naturally barren. The birth of these three extraordinary persons, was announced nearly in the same way. God himself foretells the birth of Isaac, Gen. xvii. 16. The angel of the Lord announces the birth of John the Baptist, Luke i. 13. and six months after, the angel Gabriel, the same angel, proclaims to Mary the birth of Christ! Man is naturally an inconsiderate and incredulous creature: he must have extraordinary things to arrest and fix his attention; and he requires well attested miracles from God, to bespeak and confirm his faith. Every person who has properly considered the nature of man, must see that the whole of natural religion so termed, is little else than a disbelief of all religion.

Verse 8. Before God.] In the temple, where God used to manifest his presence, though long before this time, he had forsaken it; yet on this important occasion, the angel of his presence had visited it.

Verse 9. His lot was, &c.] We are informed in the Talmud, that it was the custom of the priests to divide the different functions of the sacerdotal office, among themselves by lot: and in this case, the decision of the lot was, that Zacharias should at that time burn the incense before the Lord, in the holy place.

Verse 10. The whole multitude—were praying] The incense was itself an emblem of the prayers and praises of the people of God: see Psal. cxli. 2. Rev. viii. 1. While therefor the rite is performed by the priest, the people are employed in the thing signified. Happy the people who attend to the spirit as well as the letter of every divine institution! Incense was burnt twice a day in the temple, in the morning and in the evening, Exod. xxx. 7, 8. but the Evangelist does not specify the time of the day in which this transaction took place. It was probably in the morning.

Verse 11. There appeared—an angel of the Lord] There had been neither prophecy nor angelic ministry vouchsafed to this people for about 400 years. But now as the Sun of righteousness is about to arise upon them, the day-spring from on high visits them; that they may be prepared for that kingdom of God which was at hand. Every circumstance here is worthy of remark: 1. That an angel should now appear, as such a favour had not been granted for 400 years. 2. The person to whom this angel was sent—one of the priests. The sacerdotal office itself, pointed out the Son of God till he came: by him it was to be completed, and in him it was to be eternally established:—Thou art a priest for ever, Psal. cx. 4. 3. The place in which the angel appeared—Jerusalem; out of which the word of the Lord should go forth, Isai. ii. 3. and not at Hebron, in the hill country of Judea, where Zacharias lived, ver. 39. which was the ordinary residence of the priests, Josh. xxi. 11. where there could have been few witnesses of this interposition of God, and the effects produced by it. 4. The place where he was, when the angel appeared to him—in the temple; which was the place where God was to be sought; the place of his residence, and a type of the human nature of the blessed Jesus, John ii. 21. 5. The time in which this was done—the solemn hour of public prayer. God has always promised to be present with those who call upon him. When the people and the priest go hand in hand, and heart with heart, to the house of God, the angel of his presence shall surely accompany them, and God shall appear among them. 6. The employment of Zacharias when the angel appeared—he was burning incense, one of the most sacred and mysterious functions of the Levitical priesthood, and which typified the intercession of Christ: confer Heb. vii. 25. with chap. ix. 24. 7. The long continued and publicly known dumbness of the priest, who doubted the word thus miraculously sent to him from the Lord: a solemn intimation of what God would do to all those who would not believe in the Lord Jesus. Every mouth shall be stopped.

Verse 12. Zacharias—was troubled] Or, confounded at his sudden and unexpected appearance, and fear fell upon him, lest this heavenly messenger were come to denounce the judgments of God against a faithless and disobedient people, who had too long and too well merited them.

Verse 13. Thy prayer is heard] This probably refers, 1st, to the frequent prayers which he had offered to God for a son; and 2dly, to those which he had offered for the deliverance and consolation of Israel. They are all heard—thou shalt have a Son, and Israel shall be saved. If fervent faithful prayers be not immediately answered, they should not be considered as lost; all such are heard by the Lord, are registered in heaven, and shall be answered in the most effectual way, and in the best time. Answers to prayer are to be received by faith; but faith should not only accompany prayer while offered on earth, but follow it all its way to the throne of grace, and stay with it before the throne, till dismissed with its answer to the waiting soul.

Thou shalt call his name John] For the proper exposition of this name, see on Mark i. 4.

Verse 14. Thou shalt have joy, &c] Εσαι χαρα σοι, He will be joy and gladness to thee. A child of prayer and faith is likely to be a source of comfort to his parents. Were proper attention paid to this point, there would be fewer disobedient children in the world; and the number of broken-hearted parents would be lessened. But what can be expected from the majority of matrimonial connexions, connexions begun without the fear of God, and carried on without his love.

Many shall rejoice at his birth.] He shall be the minister of God for good to multitudes, who shall, through his preaching, be turned from the error of their ways, and converted to God their saviour.

Verse 15. He shall be great in the sight of the Lord] That is, before Jesus Christ, whose fore-runner he shall be, or he shall be a truly great person, for so this form of speech may imply.

Neither wine nor strong drink] Σικερα, i. e. all fermented liquors which have the property of intoxicating, or producing drunkenness. The original word σικερα sikera, comes from the Hebrew, שכר shaker to inebriate. "Any inebriating liquor." says St. Jerom, (Epis. ad Nepot.) "is called sicera, whether made of corn, apples, honey, dates, or any other fruits." One of the four prohibited liquors among the East-Indian Moslimans, is called sikkir. "Sikkir is made by steeping fresh dates in water till they take effect in sweetening it: this liquor is abominable and unlawful." HEDAYA, vol. iv. p. 158. Probably this is the very liquor referred to in the text. In the Institutes of Menu it is said, "inebriating liquor may be considered as of three principal sorts: that extracted from dregs of sugar, that extracted from bruised rice, and that extracted from the flowers of the madhuca: as one, so are all; they shall not be tasted by the chief of the twice-born," chap. xi. Inst. 95. Twice-born is used by the Brahmins in the same sense as being born again is used by Christians. It signifies a spiritual regeneration. From this word comes our English term cyder or sider, a beverage made of the fermented juice of apples. See the note on Lev. x. 9.

Shall be filled with the Holy Ghost] Shall be divinely designated to this particular office, and qualified for it from his mother's womb, from the instant of his birth. One MS. two Versions, and four of the primitive Fathers read εν τη κοιλιᾳ IN the womb of his mother—intimating that even before he should be born into the world, the Holy Spirit should be communicated to him. Did not this take place on the salutation of the Virgin Mary? and is not this what is intended ver. 44? To be filled with the Holy Ghost, implies having the soul influenced in all its powers, with the illuminating, strengthening, and sanctifying energy of the Spirit.

Verse 16. Many of the children of Israel shall he turn] See this prediction fulfilled, chap. iii. ver. 10—18.

Verse 17. He shall go before him] Jesus Christ in the spirit and power of Elijah; he shall resemble Elijah in his retired and austere manner of life, and in his zeal for the truth, reproving even princes for their crimes; compare 1 Kings xxi. 17—24. with Matt. xiv. 4. It was on these accounts that the prophet Malachi, chap. iv. 6. had likened John to this prophet. See also Isai. xl. 3. and Malac. iv. 5, 6.

To turn the hearts of the fathers] Gross ignorance had taken place in the hearts of the Jewish people, they needed a divine instructor; John is announced as such; by his preaching, and manner of life all classes among the people should be taught the nature of their several places, and the duties respectively incumbent upon them. See chap. iii. 10, &c. In these things the greatness of John, mentioned ver. 15, is pointed out. Nothing is truly great but what is so in the sight of God: John's greatness arose, 1st. From the plenitude of God's spirit which dwelt in him. 2. From his continual self-denial, and taking up his cross. 3. From his ardent zeal to make Christ known. 4. From his fidelity and courage in rebuking vice. 5. From the reformation which he was the instrument of effecting among the people; reviving among them the spirit of the Patriarchs, and preparing their hearts to receive the Lord Jesus. To turn the hearts of the fathers to their children. By a very expressive figure of speech, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the rest of the patriarchs are represented here as having their hearts alienated from the Jews, their children, because of their unbelief and disobedience; but that the Baptist should so far succeed in converting them to the Lord their God, that these holy men should again look upon them with delight, and acknowledge them for their children. Some think that by the children the Gentiles are meant, and by the fathers, the Jews.

The disobedient] Or unbelieving, απειθεις, the persons who would no longer credit the predictions of the prophets, relative to the manifestation of the Messiah. Unbelief and disobedience are so intimately connected, that the same word in the sacred writings often serves for both.

Verse 18. Whereby shall I know this?] All things are possible to God: no natural impediment can have any power when God has declared he will accomplish his purpose. He has a right to be believed on his own word alone; and it is impious, when we are convinced that it is his word, to demand a sign or pledge for its fulfilment.

Verse 19. I am Gabriel] This angel is mentioned, Dan. viii. 16. ix. 21. The original גבריאל is exceedingly expressive: it is compounded of גבורה geburah and אל el, the might of the strong God. An angel with such a name was exceedingly proper for the occasion; as it pointed out that all-prevailing power by which the strong God could accomplish every purpose, and subdue all things to himself.

That stand in the presence of God] This is in allusion to the case of the prime minister of an eastern monarch, who alone has access to his master at all times; and is therefore said, in the eastern phrase, to see the presence, or to be in the presence. From the allusion we may conceive the angel Gabriel to be in a state of high favour and trust before God.

Verse 20. Thou shalt be dumb] Σιωπων silent; this translation is literal; the angel immediately explains it, thou shalt not be able to speak. Dumbness ordinarily proceeds from a natural imperfection or debility of the organs of speech; in this case there was no natural weakness or unfitness in those organs; but for his rash and unbelieving speech, silence is imposed upon him by the Lord, and he shall not be able to break it, till the power that has silenced him gives him again the permission to speak! Let those who are intemperate in the use of their tongues, behold here the severity and mercy of the Lord; nine months' silence for one intemperate speech! Many by giving way to the language of unbelief, have lost the language of praise and thanksgiving for months, if not years!

Verse 21. The people waited] The time spent in burning the incense was probably about half an hour, during which there was a profound silence, as the people stood without engaged in mental prayer. To this there is an allusion in Rev. viii. 1—5. Zacharias had spent, not only the time necessary for burning the incense, but also that which the discourse between him and the angel took up.

Verse 22. They perceived that he had seen a vision] As the sanctuary was separated from the court by a great vail, the people could not see what passed; but they understood this from Zacharias himself, who, νευων, made signs or nodded unto them to that purpose. Signs are the only means by which a dumb man can convey his ideas to others.

Verse 23. As soon as the days of his ministration were accomplished] Each family of the priesthood officiated one whole week, 2 Kings xi. 17.

There is something very instructive in the conduct of this priest; had he not loved the service he was engaged in, he might have made the loss of his speech a pretext for immediately quitting it. But as he was not thereby disabled from fulfilling the sacerdotal function, so he saw he was bound to continue till his ministry was ended; or till God had given him a positive dismission. Preachers who give up their labour in the vineyard because of some trifling bodily disorder by which they are afflicted, or through some inconvenience in outward circumstances, which the follower of a cross-bearing, crucified Lord should not mention, shew that they either never had a proper concern for the honour of their Master or for the salvation of men; or else that they have lost the spirit of their Master, and the spirit of their work. Again, Zacharias did not hasten to his house to tell his wife the good news that he had received from heaven, in which she was certainly very much interested: the angel had promised that all his words should be fulfilled in their season, and for this season he patiently waited in the path of duty. He had engaged in the work of the Lord, and must pay no attention to any thing that was likely to mar or interrupt his religious service. Preachers who profess to be called of God to labour in the word and doctrine, and who abandon their work for filthy lucre's sake, are the most contemptible of mortals, and traitors to their God.

Verse 24. Hid herself five months] That she might have the fullest proof of the accomplishment of God's promise before she appeared in public, or spoke of her mercies.

Verse 25. To take away my reproach] As fruitfulness was a part of the promise of God to his people, Gen. xvii. 6. and children, on this account, being considered as a particular blessing from heaven, Exod. xxiii. 26. Lex. xxvi. 9. Psal. cxxvii. 3. so barrenness was considered among the Jews as a reproach, and a token of the disapprobation of the Lord. 1 Sam. i. 6. But see ver. 36.

Verse 26. A city of Galilee] As Joseph and Mary were both of the family of David, the patrimonial estate of which lay in Bethlehem, it seems as if the family residence should have been in that city, and not in Nazareth; for we find that even after the return from the captivity, the several families went to reside in those cities to which they originally belonged. See Neh. xi. 3. But it is probable that the holy family removed to Galilee for fear of exciting the jealousy of Herod, who had usurped that throne to which they had an indisputable right. See on chap. ii. 39. Thus by keeping out of the way, they avoided the effects of his jealousy.

Verse 27. To a virgin espoused, &c.] See on Matt. i. 18. and 23. The reflections of pious father Quesnel on this subject are worthy of serious regard. At length the moment is come which is to give a son to a virgin, a saviour to the world, a pattern to mankind, a sacrifice to sinners, a temple to the divinity, and a new principle to the new world. This angel is sent from God, not to the palaces of the great, but to a poor maid, the wife of a carpenter. The Son of God comes to humble the proud, and to honour poverty, weakness, and contempt. He chuses an obscure place for the mystery which is most glorious to his humanity, its union with the Divinity and for that which is most degrading (his sufferings and death) he will chuse the greatest city! How far are men from such a conduct as this!

Verse 28. And the angel came in unto her] Some think that all this business was transacted in a vision; and that there was no personal appearance of the angel. When divine visions were given, they are announced as such, in the sacred writings; nor can we with safety attribute any thing to a vision where a divine communication is made, unless it be specified as such in the text.

Verse 32. He shall be great] Behold the greatness of the Man Christ Jesus: 1st. Because that human nature that should be born of the virgin, was to be united with the divine nature. 2dly. In consequence of this, that human nature should be called in a peculiar sense the SON of the most high God; because God would produce it in her womb without the intervention of man. 3. He shall be the everlasting Head and Sovereign of his church. 4. His government and kingdom shall be eternal. Revolutions may destroy the kingdoms of the earth, but the powers and gates of hell and death shall never be able to destroy or injure the kingdom of Christ. His is the only dominion that shall never have an end. The angel seems here to refer to Isai. ix. 7. xvi. 5. Jer. xxiii. 5. Dan. ii. 44. vii. 14. All which prophecies speak of the glory, extent, and perpetuity of the evangelical kingdom. The kingdom of grace and the kingdom of glory, form the endless government of Christ.

Verse 33. The house of Jacob] All who belong to the twelve tribes, the whole Israelitish people.

Verse 34. Seeing I know not a man] Or, husband. As she was only contracted to Joseph, and not as yet married, she knew that this conception could not have yet taken place; and she modestly enquires by what means the promise of the angel is to be fulfilled, in order to regulate her conduct accordingly.

Verse 35. The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee] This conception shall take place suddenly, and the Holy Spirit himself shall be the grand operator. The power, δυναμις, the miracle working power, of the Most High shall overshadow thee, to accomplish this purpose, and to protect thee from danger. As there is a plain allusion to the Spirit of God brooding over the face of the waters, to render them prolific, Gen. i. 2. I am the more firmly established in the opinion advanced on Matt. i. 20. that the rudiments of the human nature of Christ was a real creation in the womb of the Virgin, by the energy of the Spirit of God.

Therefore also that holy thing(or person)—shall be called the Son of God.] We may plainly perceive here, that the angel does not give the appellation of Son of God to the divine nature of Christ; but to that holy person or thing το αγιον, which was to be born of the Virgin, by the energy of the Holy Spirit. The divine nature could not be born of the Virgin; the human nature was born of her. The divine nature had no beginning; it was God manifested in the flesh, 1 Tim. iii. 16. it was that word which being in the beginning (from eternity) with God, John i. 2. was afterwards made flesh, (became manifest in human nature) and tabernacled among us, John i. 14. Of this divine nature the angel does not particularly speak here, but of the tabernacle or shrine which God was now preparing for it, viz. the holy thing that was to be born of the Virgin. Two natures must ever be distinguished in Christ: the human nature, in reference to which he is the Son of God and inferior to him, Mark xiii. 32. John v. 19. xiv. 28. and the divine nature which was from eternity, and equal to God, John i. 1. x. 30. Rom. ix. 5. Col. i. 16—18. It is true, that to Jesus the Christ, as he appeared among men, every characteristic of the divine nature is sometimes attributed, without appearing to make any distinction between the divine and human natures; but is there any part of the scriptures in which it is plainly said that the divine nature of Jesus was the Son of God? Here I trust I may be permitted to say, with all due respect for those who differ from me, that the doctrine of the eternal Sonship of Christ is, in my opinion, antiscriptural, and highly dangerous; this doctrine I reject for the following reasons:

1st. I have not been able to find any express declaration in the scriptures concerning it.

2dly. If Christ be the Son of God as to his divine nature, then he cannot be eternal: for son implies a father; and father implies, in reference to son, precedency in time, if not in nature too. Father and son imply the idea of generation; and generation implies a time in which it was effected, and time also antecedent to such generation.

3dly. If Christ be the Son of God, as to his divine nature, then the Father is of necessity prior, consequently superior to him.

4thly. Again, if this divine nature were begotten of the Father, then it must be in time; i. e. there was a period in which it did not exist, and a period when it began to exist. This destroys the eternity of our blessed Lord, and robs him at once of his Godhead.

5thly. To say that he was begotten from all eternity, is in of thee, shall be called [a] the Son of God.

36 And, behold, thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age; and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren.

37 For [b] with God nothing shall be impossible.

38 And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word. And the angel departed from her.

39 ¶ And Mary arose in those days, and went into the hill country with haste, [c] into a city of Juda;

40 And entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth.

41 And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost:

42 And she spake out with a loud voice, and said, [d] Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb.

43 And whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come to me?

my opinion, absurd; and the phrase eternal Son, is a positive self-contradiction. ETERNITY is that which has had no beginning, nor stands in any reference to TIME. SON supposes time, generation, and father; and time also antecedent to such generation. Therefore the conjunction of these two terms Son and eternity is absolutely impossible, as they imply essentially different and opposite ideas.

The enemies of Christ's divinity have, in all ages, availed themselves of this incautious method of treating this subject, and on this ground, have ever had the advantage of the defenders of the godhead of Christ. This doctrine of the eternal Sonship destroys the deity of Christ; now if his deity be taken away, the whole gospel scheme of redemption is ruined. On this ground, the atonement of Christ cannot have been of infinite merit, and consequently could not purchase pardon for the offences of mankind, nor give any right to, or possession of, an eternal glory. The very use of this phrase is both absurd and dangerous; therefore let all those who value Jesus and their salvation abide by the Scriptures.

Verse 36. Thy cousin Elisabeth] Thy kinswoman συγγενης. As Elisabeth was of the tribe of Levi, ver. 5. and Mary of the tribe of Judah, they could not be relatives but by the mother's side.

She hath also conceived] And this is wrought by the same power and energy through which thou shalt conceive. Thus God has given thee a proof and pledge in what he has done for Elisabeth, of what he will do for thyself; therefore, have faith in God.

Who was called barren.] It is probable that Elizabeth got this appellative by way of reproach; or to distinguish her from some other Elizabeth also well known, who had been blest with children. Perhaps this is the reproach which Elizabeth speaks of, ver. 25. her common name among men, among the people who knew her, being Elizabeth the barren.

Verse 37. For with God nothing shall be impossible.] Words of the very same import with those spoken by the Lord to Sarah, when he foretold the birth of Isaac, Gen. xviii. 14. Is any thing too hard for the Lord? As there can be no doubt that Mary perceived this allusion to the promise and birth of Isaac, so she must have had her faith considerably strengthened by reflecting on the intervention of God in that case.

Verse 38. Behold the handmaid of the Lord] I fully credit what thou sayest, and am perfectly ready to obey thy commands, and to accomplish all the purposes of thy grace concerning me. It appears that at the instant of this act of faith, and purposed obedience, the conception of the immaculate humanity of Jesus took place; and it was DONE unto her according to his word. See ver. 35.

Verse 39. In those days] As soon as she could conveniently fit herself out for the journey.

Hill country] Hebron, the city of the priests, Josh. xxi. 11. which was situated in the tribe of Judah, about forty miles south of Jerusalem, and upwards of seventy from Nazareth.

With haste] This probably refers to nothing else than the earnestness of her mind to visit her relative Elizabeth, and to see what the Lord had wrought for her.

Verse 41. Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost] This seems to have been the accomplishment of the promise made by the angel, ver. 15. He shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb. The mother is filled with the Holy Spirit, and the child in her womb becomes sensible of the divine influence.

Verse 42. Blessed art thou among women] Repeating the words of the angel, ver. 28. of which she had probably been informed by the Holy Virgin, in the present interview.

Verse 43. The mother of my Lord] The prophetic spirit which appears to have overshadowed Elizabeth, gave her a tation sounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy.

45 And blessed is she [a] that believed; for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.

47 And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.

clear understanding in the mystery of the birth of the promised Messiah.

Verse 45. Blessed is she that believed; for there shall be, &c. Or, Blessed is she who hath believed that there shall be, &c. This I believe to be the proper arrangement of the passage, and is thus noticed in the marginal reading. Faith is here represented as the foundation of true happiness, because it receives the fulfillment of God's promises. Whatever God has promised, he intends to perform. We should believe whatever he has spoken—his own authority is a sufficient reason why we should believe. Let us only be convinced that God has given the promise, and then implicit faith becomes an indispensable duty—in this case not to believe implicitly would be absurd and unreasonable—God will perform his promise, for HE cannot lie.

Verse 46. And Mary said] Two copies of the Itala, and some books mentioned by Origen, give this song to Elizabeth. It is a counterpart of the song of Hannah, as related in 1 Sam. ii. 1—10.

This is allowed by many to be the first piece of poetry in the New Testament; but the address of the angel to Zacharias, ver. 13—17. is delivered in the same way: so is that to the Virgin, ver. 30—33. and so also is Elizabeth's answer to Mary, ver. 42—45. All these portions are easily reducible to the hemistich form in which the Hebrew poetry of the Old Testament is found in many MSS. and in which Dr. Kennicott has arranged the Psalms, and other poetical parts of the Sacred Writings. See his Hebrew Bible.

My soul doth magnify the Lord] The verb μεγαλυνειν, Kypke has proved, signifies to celebrate with words, to extol with praises. This is the only way in which God can be magnified, or made great: for strictly speaking, nothing can be added to God, for he is infinite and eternal; therefore the way to magnify him, is to shew forth and celebrate those acts in which he has manifested his greatness.

Verse 47. My spirit hath rejoiced] Exulted. These words are uncommonly emphatical—they shew that Mary's whole soul was filled with the divine influence, and wrapt up in God.

Verse 48. He hath regarded] Looked favourably, &c. επεβλεψεν. In the most tender and compassionate manner he has visited me in my humiliation, drawing the reasons of his conduct, not from any excellence in me, but from his own eternal kindness and love.

All generations shall call me blessed.] This was the character by which alone she wished to be known; viz. The blessed or happy virgin. What dishonour do those do to this holy woman, who give her names and characters which her pure soul would abhor; and which properly belong to GOD her Saviour! By her votaries she is addressed as Queen of Heaven, Mother of God, &c. titles both absurd and blasphemous.

Verse 49. He that is mighty hath done to me great things] Or, miracles, μεγαλεια. As God fills her with his goodness, she empties herself to him in praises; and sinking into her own nothingness, she ever confesses, that God alone is all in all.

Holy is his name.] Probably the word which Mary used was חסד chesed, which though we sometimes translate holy, see Psal. lxxxvi. 2. cxlv. 17. yet the proper meaning is abundant goodness, exuberant kindness, and this well agrees with the following clause.
